The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SABATH. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.
Mr. POWERS. Is not it true that the foreign wages of immigrants from foreign countries have mostly driven out the American wage earners in all of western Pennsylvania, and is it not a fact that three-fourths of the wage earners in the basic industries are foreigners? And is not it further true that they get 42 cents a day less than the American wage earners in the Middle States employed in the same occupations?

Mr. SABATH. I can not agree with the gentleman. sire to say that they have supplanted them as common laborers, but they have provided for the American laboring men higher and better employment, and the statistics again will show that, due to immigration, the American laboring man has been advanced to a higher position.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And is it not also true that the average American boy does not want to work as a common

Mr. SABATH. Of course, that is true, and they are acting as foremen, bookkeepers, timekeepers, superintendents, and so

No one who has carefully studied the condition of our country can successfully deny that the tremendous progress and development of this Nation is largely due to the foreign-born people and their descendants. In fact, this proposition does not admit of dispute. But, even had they not contributed so much to the country's welfare, shall we not extend welcome to humanity which seeks freedom and emancipation from governmental oppression and despotism?

Our Government guarantees, under and by virtue of the Constitution, liberty; and liberty is the goal which the alien strives to reach, and which when reached serves as an in-centive for improvement, and within a short time he becomes Americanized and is ideal material for American citizenship. It is only a short time until he becomes one of us, and no one can question his patriotism, honesty, industry, and progress.

Mr. Chairman, in order to maintain the progress of this great Nation it is imperative that we do not further restrict desirable immigration. The industry of the country requires the labor of the foreigner, and the presumption that the immigration is a competitor of our American labor is erroneous. On the contrary, the employment of immigrant labor creates a demand for a better grade of labor, and it is productive of better wages for the American workingmen. The work performed by the immigrant is that of the hardest kind, work of a character for which it is well-nigh impossible to secure American labor, yet which nevertheless must be performed. It is variously estimated that over 550,000 workingmen are either killed or injured each year in the course of their work, and the grim law of necessity requires that these unfortunate men who are claimed by our commerce and industry must be replaced. What would be our position were we not favored with immigrant labor? It is this class of labor which makes it possible for our manufacturers to compete with the world, thereby creating new fields and new markets for our goods and products. These statements may be denied by some prejudiced restrictionists, but any unbiased man will admit that the wages of the laboring men are higher to-day than ever before and the standard of living has increased

To show how our country has been benefited by this immigration, I wish to insert here some figures compiled by the Hon. tion, I wish to insert here some naures complied by the Hon.
O. P. Austin, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, and contained in an article entitled "Progress of American Commerce and Industries, 1870 to 1912." This article appears in full in the Congressional Record of July 17, 1912, having been printed therein at the request of my esteemed colleague, Mr. J. Hampton Moore, of Pennsylvania. I also wish to quote one of his concluding paragraphs, which is headed "Energy of the American citizen." follows:

ENERGY OF THE AMERICAN CITIZEN.

The next and final feature which I shall mention in our claim to special advantages in production and commerce is that of energy. This is a product not easily measured in figures or terms; but when it is remembered that the population of the United States is formed by a combination of selected energy from the whole world, we may lay claim to a greater average supply of that important factor than any other country. The energy and determination which prompted the early settlers of America to leave their firesides and friends in Europe and undergo the hardships and dangers of establishing homes for themselves in the New World surely mark them as above the average in the supply of this characteristic. This is also true of a large share of the 20,000,000 of people who have come from other countries during the past century to establish themselves in the United States. Not only have they made valuable citizens and aided in the wonderful development which I have just outlined, but their intermingled blood flows in the veins of a large share of our present population, and carries with it an energy which, when vitalized by the work of our magnificent educational system, must tell for the future prosperity of the country.

It can be readily seen from these statistics and the conclusions drawn by Mr. Austin that the wonderful development which this country has undergone is due to a great extent to the large numbers of people who have come from other countries to establish themselves in the United States. Should we now enact legislation which would halt our progress as a nation?

That immigration has been and is now of great benefit no one can gainsay, and you gentlemen must admit that immigration has brought about our great wealth and prosperity, and not alone has it benefited the country at large, but all of us as individuals have profited by it. Some people say that the wealth these immigrants create is not fairly distributed and that only a small percentage of our people are gainers thereby. That, Mr. Chairman, is not their fault, but ours, and I hope in the near future it will be remedied.

Before immigration commenced millions and millions of acres of land in the Middle West, Northwest, and West were dormant and unproductive. These lands could have been purchased then for two or three dollars an acre, while to-day the same lands, due to immigration, have increased in value a hundredfold. The thousands upon thousands of honest, thrifty, and industrious immigrants who settled amid untold hardships upon the prairies and swamps of this country have converted these lands, heretofore useless and practically of no value, into veritable gardens. rich and productive farms, and large and enterprising cities.

Mr. Chairman, the problem of immigration is one which settles itself. I believe that it is entirely unnecessary to legislate any further in this matter, for the present laws are strict enough in every respect. We now exclude all idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who admit their belief in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons called contract laborers who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, expressed or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; those who have been, within one year from the date of application for admission to the United States, deported as having been induced or solicited to migrate as above described; any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes and that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly; all children under 16 years of age unaccompanied by one or both of their parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe.

Instead of considering bills of a restrictive nature, we should pass H. R. 15126, a bill which I introduced during the last session of this body, and which provides for the improvement of the deplorable conditions existing in the steerage quarters of the vessels which bring these immigrants to our shores. The bill provides for many changes and improvements which would compel the steamship companies to reduce their efforts to unlawfully stimulate immigration and will suppress enforced, speculative, adventurous, and spasmodic immigration. Then let us pass my other bill, which provides for a bureau of information and distribution, and within a short space of time you will hear no complaints against immigration.

Our country has unlimited resources, which it will take centuries to develop, and we have thousands upon thousands of acres of land lying idle now for lack of sufficient people to till them. Personally, I am of the opinion that the inducements being offered to immigrants by Canada and our neighboring Republics will soon result in a marked increase of immigration to those countries, with a resulting decrease in the numbers coming to the United States. In fact, there has been a marked decline in the immigration during the last four years, and this will undoubtedly continue in the future. To substantiate this statement, let me read from the annual report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor for 1912, in which he says that-of Commerce and Labor for 1912, in which he says that—

It appears from the report of the Commissioner General of Immigration that 838,172 inmigrant aliens entered the United States during the past fiscal year, compared with 878,587 in the fiscal year 1911, the decrease being 40,415. The months in which immigration was heaviest were March, April, May, and June, the figures for which range from about 91,000 to 114,000 per month. In addition to the 838,172 immigrants, 178,983 aliens of the nonimmigrant class entered, making a total of 1,017,155, compared with 1,030,300 for the previous fiscal year. During the year, however, there departed from the country 615,292 allens, of whom 333,262 were of the emigrant and 282,030 of the nonemigrant class. In the previous fiscal year 518,215 allens left the country, of whom 295,666 were of the emigrant and 222,549 of the nonemigrant class. A comparison of these figures shows that the actual increase in the alien population for the fiscal year 1912 was 401,863, as compared with 512,085 for the fiscal year 1911 and 817,619 for the fiscal year 1910.

The prejudice against the immigrant from southern and southern

The prejudice against the immigrant from southern and southeastern Europe which now asserts itself is identical with that which was prevalent in the early days of German and Irish immigration; restrictive legislation is being urged by that selfsame element which in the past leaped to conclusions without familiarizing itself with pertinent facts and data. The good qualities of these immigrants were not known at that time, but to-day who can deny that the Germans and the Irish posthe very best qualifications for American citizenship? Within the last 50 years, and since the inception of Bohemian and Polish immigration, these people have conclusively demonstrated their worthiness of American hospitality. Five years ago I succeeded in overcoming the prejudice and bias which had previously been exhibited toward Bohemian immigrants by showing that they are worthy in every respect of our consideration, and in this I am borne out by statistics which prove that they are far above the average in education, industry, and

I dare say that no one can successfully contradict the assertion that the Germans, the Irish, the Bohemians, the Poles, Swedes, and Norwegians, and the Danes are desirable immi-They have all proven beyond doubt their worthiness, and their citizenship has given us eminent satisfaction. Every student of economics knows and every historian is cognizant of the fact that Jewish immigration has greatly aided and benefited our country by opening and enlarging our commercial marts, finding new markets for our products, and in other ways has helped to make this country the first commercial country in the world. The progressiveness of the Jewish immigrant has in numerous other ways resulted advantageously to the entire country.

Then there is the Polish immigrant, ever loyal, sincere, and industrious. Long before the emigration of the Pole to America was his worth and desirability demonstrated, for in the days of the Revolution those eminent and valiant Poles, Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko and Count Casimir Pulaski, whose statues were unveiled in this city a few months ago, together with many of their countrymen, fought by the side of the immortal Washington for our freedom from the despotism and oppression of England.

Mr. Chairman, these inhabitants of southern and southeastern Europe surely deserve our sympathy rather than our condem-It goes without saying that some of them are guilty of criminal offenses, but you will find in these races as great a proportion of law-abiding citizens as in any others. Humanity was never destined to be perfect, and we must allow for a certain percentage of weaklings in any nationality. I am not in love with the members of the Black Hand, nor members of any other criminal class, but every nation numbers among its citizens a certain proportion of criminals, while statistics will show that there is less crime in the districts where foreign-born citizens reside than in sections tenanted almost entirely by our so-called "pure" Americans. I desire to quote in this connection some pertinent statistics contained in a special report of the Census Bureau, published in 1907:

Continental United States	71.8	76.3	28.3	23.7

These figures are based upon investigations which were made in 1904, and conclusively demonstrate that the percentage of foreign-born inmates of our reformatory and penal institutions has been constantly decreasing, for they show that while the foreign population has increased, the percentage of offenders has decreased. On the other hand, the percentage of native prisoners has increased. And this report shows that the crimes of a grave nature committed by foreign-born prisoners is extremely small, most of the convictions being upon minor charges, usually the infraction of municipal ordinances. I have frequently heard certain gentlemen before our committee charge that the present immigration is below the standard of the immigration which we received prior to 1890; that it fills our charitable and penal institutions. These are but bare statements unsupported by facts, and are easily disproven by the data compiled by our Bureau of the Census. I wish to quote here some statistics taken from the report of the Commissioner General of Immigration for 1911, showing that the deportations for the fiscal year 1910-11 were as follows:

This is conclusive proof that the opposition to present-day immigration on the part of restrictionists and my Republican friends Hayes, Gardner, Focht, and Austin, and my Democratic friends Burnett, Dies, and Roddenberg, is unjust and unfair. For the percentage of deportations of those who are regarded by the restrictionists of the so-called "desirable" races, namely, the English, the French, and so forth, is far in excess of that of the—by them—so-called "undesirable" races. To be better understood I will give it in round numbers: Of 141,000 English who arrived in three years, 259 were deported, making 18.3 per 10,000 arrivals; of 203,000 Germans, 268 were deported, or 13.2 per 10,000 arrivals; of 53,000 French, 186, or 34.8 per 10,000, were deported; of 106,000 Irish, 186, or 11.9 per 10,000 were deported; of 4,000 Mexicans, 344, or 88.1 per 10,000, were deported; of 245,000 Hebrews, 232, or 9.4 per 10,000, were deported; and of 468,000 South Italians, 219, or 4.8 per 10,000, were deported. I do not deal with the North Italians, since they are considered "desirable." So that we find that the So that we find that the English, German, Irish, and Scotch, the so-called "desirable" races, had a larger number of deportations than the Hebrews and South Italians, alleged "undesirables."

It is true that a certain percentage of these people are illiterate, but that is not their fault. In their native countries they are deprived of every opportunity for mental advancement. We are sending our missionaries abroad and spending millions of dollars to educate people in uncivilized countries who are nowhere as near to us in race, color, and inherent ability as these new arrivals, and our unsolicited charity is there resented. spirit of our institutions is best subserved by helping these people who of their own volition seek to throw off the yoke of ignorance and oppression which is forced upon them in their native countries

The immigration of Slovenians, Croatians, Italians, and Lithuanians is but of recent origin. These people are helping along the progress of our Nation—they are producers. They are all thrifty and industrious, and idleness is wholly unknown to them. They are not beggars, and they do not subsist upon charity; they work, and work hard, to support themselves and their loved ones, and no doubt within a few years they, too, will demonstrate to the country that they are unjustly classified as "undesirables." They will without question prove their They will without question prove their

Mr. Chairman, my motive for presenting the cause of these people before you arises purely from the standpoint of justice and fair play. They are good people; they are hard workers, industrious, honest, and law-abiding. They live in model homes, neat and clean and well furnished—the report of the Immigration Commission will show this. They make every effort to properly educate their children, and they are rapidly accustoming themselves to American ways and manners.

Mr. Chairman, the present demand for the restriction of immigration has not arisen as a result of unsound industrial or social conditions in the country, but is merely the prolongation of a wail that has been dinned into the ears of Congress from the day the first Congress took up its task of legislation.

The birth of the Republic and the inception of the agitation for the exclusion of immigrants were coeval. The demand has been insistent, unreasonable, and unsubsiding. Born of prejudice, this desire to shut out foreigners grew up with eyes closed to the light, blindly ignoring all knowledge that would demonstrate the folly of its reasoning. In the earlier days its advocates stubbornly refused to read with unprejudiced eyes a single page of the country's history upon which was chronicled a patriotic deed or which recited an achievement of any character that was the contribution of the class marked for their disfavor. Impelled by motives that were completely out of harmony with the fundamental principles of the Republic, this element never gave thought nor consideration to the economic effect of exclusion or restriction of immigration, but persisted with a zeal that bordered upon the fanatical in their attempts to foist upon the country views that were narrow and ill-advised. The question of fixing upon a sound policy for the treatment of immi-gration has ever been a vexatious one, not so much because it involves such difficult problems of legislation, but rather because of the peculiar and impracticable methods of solution urged by those who insist upon their especial qualifications to treat the subject. Statesmen of every decade of our national life have been confronted with it, but to their everlasting credit, those clothed with power and exercising influence in shaping legislation have turned deaf ears to the prayers and threats of the exclusionists and continued the liberal policy adopted by their forefathers, in whose immortal pronunciamento to King George the latter declared that-all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unallenable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness.

When independence was secured to them, no heed was given to the clamor against the admission of immigrants.

Their forefathers declared on those memorable July days of 1776 that America was the asylum for the oppressed, and when it came to framing the organic law not a line was written which was not in thorough accord with that sentiment. Indeed, the framers of the Constitution sanctioned immigration and the early Congresses based their legislation upon the idea that America was intended by a merciful Providence as a haven of hope for the downtrodden who fled unhappy lands where tyranny's edicts made life unbearable. The new Nation was consecrated by the founders as a home for all, where liberty was assured and opportunity was open to all who, entering, manifested the proper spirit.

A minority in the days of the first administration of Washington insisted that the country was endangered by the coming of vast numbers of immigrants from Europe, and from that day to this the restrictionists have been abroad in the land. As we look back now to the days when it was argued by some mis-guided individuals that the German immigrants who were coming to Pennsylvania were undesirable and should be barred out, we see how ridiculous was the stand they took on this subject; and yet we have to-day men who are insisting that we must call a halt in the immigration which is now coming to our shores, and they, too, cry out that certain classes of these people are "undesirables." Gentlemen, I doubt not that the majority of us will live to see the time when these men who are to-day urging the passage of this bill will have been proven to be as much in the wrong as were those in the early days who wanted to keep out the Irish and the Germans for fear they would ruin the country.

I am satisfied that America is greatly benefited because of this infusion into our body politic and social of the blood of the sturdy people who have come to us from the various nations that Americans are recognized to-day to be the most able people on the globe and the most highly developed, both mentally and Learned scientists are all agreed that the introduction of new blood results in a race which embodies all of the desirable qualities of its progenitors, while the objectionable characteristics are gradually eradicated.

It is this continuous introduction into this country of these foreign-born people that has made America what it is to-day; and yet those seeking the passage of this bill wish to bar thousands of them, not because they are unfit to become citizens of this country, not because they are weaklings whose introduction might lower the high standard of physical perfection which we now maintain, not because they are criminals and would lower our moral standards-no; not for any of these reasons, but solely because in their oppressive lands they have been deprived of an opportunity to secure an education, and on this account are classed as "undesirables."

Mr. Chairman, are the supporters of this bill under the impression that our country is becoming crowded and it is necessary to shut out some of those who seek to secure for themselves the liberty which we now enjoy and which we have no right to deny them? Let me call their attention to the figures contained in the last census report, which show that in 1910 the land area of the continental United States was 2,973,800, while the population was 91,972,266, or a population per square mile of 30.9. In the face of these figures do they dare to contend that we are in danger of overcrowding? In the European countries they support without difficulty as many as 500 people to the square mile. Think what that would mean in the United States—a population of 1,485,352,096.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to emphasize the fact that this legisla-tion is not needed and is not desired by the majority of the people. The opposition to immigration has been created by those who are prejudiced in their views and who have not the best interests of the Nation at heart. Let us consider what immigra-tion has done for this country, how without it we would have never been able to become the power that we now are. Consider the incomparable loss this country would have suffered had there been laws of this kind enacted in days gone by: think of the thousands of men who are now influential citizens who would have been denied admittance.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to quote here a portion of the speech made in opposition to this bill by my esteemed colleague, Mr.

NYE, whose judgment we all value so highly:

Mar. Nye, whose judgment we all value so highly:

We are prone to attribute the ills of our social life to anything and everything but ourselves. It is always the other fellow. But our national perlis are not from without so much as from within. The clever native-born American, who is often as unscrupulous as he is clever, may well claim our attention when we study the causes which menace our national happiness. To get rich quick or to get something for nothing is not strikingly peculiar to our foreign-born population, and especially the working classes. These have no monopoly of vice and crime. Virtue is more often the companion of industry than of idleness, and the people we seek to exclude by this bill are as a rule industrious. Jefferson believed in an aristocracy of virtue and talent rather than an aristocracy of wealth. The foreigner as a rule gives us a constant lesson of industry and economy, which many of the native born may well emulate. He lives within his means and generally saves from his earnings, even if they are small; and while we are wasteful he is frugal, while we are idle he works. He adapts his expenses to his income, and he succeeds where we fail. I do not mean this is true in all cases, but everywhere in country and city it is so common that none can fail to observe it. I would not disparage the native-born citizen, but let us not be blind to our weaknesses nor ignore our faults or the vices of our civilization which we are responsible for. The New World is the child of the Old. We are united by millions of family ties, which every law of nature forbids we should sever by narrow and arbitrary enactments of law. The hardships the foreigner must undergo in leaving his home and native land and fighting the battle of life after he gets here is in itself proof that he is good for something. We are not getting the most wealthy of Europe, but the most worthy—men of mettile, men of grit and perseverance. The sturdy sons of northern Europe the land of historic genius in painting, sculpture, while

Mr. Chairman, the illiteracy test provided in the bill will not serve to keep out the viciously inclined, the criminal, or the otherwise really undesirable alien,

Experience has demonstrated the fact that, with the educational facilities afforded in this land, thousands of illiterates who, unhappily, were denied educational opportunities in their native lands, have learned to read and write here, have shown an eagerness to acquire knowledge and fit themselves to become good citizens. It will also be noted that the exceptions provided in the bill are not broad enough to fully guard against the separation of families, though the majority of the committee admit that on humane and moral grounds separation of families should, as far as possible, be avoided and prevented. In my opinion, the desirable immigrant is the healthy, lawabiding worker, who comes to this country in good faith, and the undesirable immigrant is the clever and educated schemer, who lives by his wits and preys upon his countrymen, and this proposed restriction will not affect this latter class.

It is my firm belief that not only is this measure uncalled for, but it is also unfair, unjust, and un-American, and should be decisively defeated, thus continuing America as the asylum of all the oppressed and persecuted of other nations.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to dispose of as he desires

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. With authority to dispose of the time as I may wish?

Mr. BURNETT. That is the statement I made—that the gentleman may dispose of the 25 minutes as he sees fit.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am only going to say a very few words about this bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is clearly right when he says that an honest, illiterate workman is a better citizen than a clever, educated scoundrel. I admit the truth of that argument, but I do not admit its force. The question is whether a million men who do not know how to read and write contain as good qualifications for citizenship as a million men who do know how to read and write. To say that a million illiterate men are equally qualified for citizenship with a million educated men is to impeach our whole common-school I doubt whether this bill, if enacted into law, is going to cut down immigration in this country as much as some people expect. I believe that immigration will be reduced in consequence by perhaps 200,000 souls at the outside. Our immigration expands and shrinks from year to year a great deal more than 200,000 souls. But whether an illiteracy test would exclude 100 men or 1,000,000 men, this bill introduces a new principle which I welcome. If we adopt this measure, the United States for the first time will recognize the principle that immigration ought to be cut down, even if in so doing we exclude many men whom we all acknowledge would make desirable citizens. In other words, for the first time we shall declare that there are too many people coming into this country, even if they are all of them the best and most desirable material for citizenship. For the first time we shall admit that good immigration as well as bad immigration must be cut down. Inasmuch as I believe that good immigration as well as bad immigration ought to be diminished, I welcome this bill as a broad entering wedge destined, I hope, to be followed by more restrictive legislation. It is my belief that the volume of immigration must be substantially reduced or else suspended for a term of years. The maintenance of the American standard of living is of transcendent importance. Beware of permitting it to be undermined by that reckless policy which permits unlimited immigration.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] is recognized for 21 minutes.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, it must occur to anyone who has given the question thought that the increase in our population through the introduction of foreigners is the most important matter that our Federal Government can possibly consider. We have spent entire sessions on the question of the importation of goods, and now we find ourselves facing the grave problem of importation of people, with but four hours at our disposal for its consideration on the floor of the House. One would suppose from the relative amount of time given to the questions that people were made for goods rather than goods for people.

In the few minutes granted me by the courtesy of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] I shall keep away from statistics and shall endeavor to consider the more fundamental propositions that underlie the question. It is folly to attempt to maintain that our problems are the same or demand the same treatment at this time, when we have a hundred million people and congested populations as they were in the days when 3,000,000 of us resolved to set up in business as an independent Nation.

First of all, we are living in what we call a democracy, a system of government that is intended to give reasonable equality of opportunity to all people living under it, a scheme which must recognize the inherent needs of human nature and the scope of human life. Granted equality of opportunity, there must follow as a correlative that people should be recognized in accordance with the services they render society and that their reward, whether it be in financial terms or in the more subtle and illusive terms of the esteem of their fellow men, should be gauged by their usefulness. In other words, that, starting equally under the law, men may rise or fall in accordance to their fitness for the social scheme.

It is because the influx of foreigners has an influence on all questions confronting our democracy that I apparently diverge from the bill to what lies back of it.

The wealth of any nation must consist essentially of three elements: First of all, its natural resources. Second, the intelligently directed industry of its people, supplemented in the case of a democracy by another item—the necessity of reasonable distribution of the results of resources and labor. No one can deny the inherent richness of our country in natural resources. No one can deny the intelligent industry of our people. The troubles we seek to remedy come from failure properly to provide for a rational distribution that helps to realize our democratic ideals.

We can not be called dreamers when we insist that in a country as rich as ours, blessed with an intelligent and industrious population, human needs should be adequately supplied to those who are neither victims of their own folly nor of a fate beyond human remedy. We are safe in assuming that childhood should be sheltered; that playtime and opportunity for education, upon which must rest the welfare of future generations, can and should be supplied; that old age, the inevitable concomitant of years, should be cared for by society, so that no one may look forward to assuming more than his fair share of the risks of life. We are safe in assuming that well-applied labor should lead to comfort, to reasonable hours of employment, to freedom from such suffering as is unnecessarily entailed by remediable bad conditions; that the accidents and misfortunes, that are to a certain extent unavoidable, should be shared by a society that enjoys the benefit of the productive enterprise of each of its members.

We know perfectly well that these conditions are not met in this Nation of abounding wealth. No comfort can be taken in aggregate figures of national wealth so long as those aggregate figures do not point to average well-being, or at least to an increasing ratio of average well-being, rather than the present tendency toward an increase of undue accumulation on one side of the scale and unnecessary want at the other. We are steadily fighting in the name of democracy and humanity to overcome the inequalities of life in a nation which can abundantly supply a livelihood to all of its citizens.

It is my desire to submit to this body, in short measure, some of the means whereby the introduction of a vast number of aliens tends to prevent our progress toward real democracy.

When we consider the question of oriental immigration we find our people practically united at the present time as against the introduction of any more race problems into our country. Entirely outside of any economic argument we are convinced that those whose blood may not mingle with ours should not be admitted, for this must necessarily upset our democratic scheme. Races that can not intermingle must necessarily find themselves in strata, with the superior race superimposed on the inferior. There can be no complete democracy under such conditions, as has been amply proven in the South.

We on the Pacific coast were not slow to perceive this danger, and our protest has been heard. At the present time we have a Chinese exclusion act that is satisfactory. The Japanese Government is now acting in good faith in keeping its people at As a matter of courtesy and not in any way abrogating our rights in the premises, we are justified in providing Japanese exclusion that should be automatically exercised should Japan ever relax its stringent denial of passports to those of its people whom we would and should exclude. This question of exclusion of irreconcilable races ought never to lead to inter-national friction. Our exclusion of Japanese or Chinese or any other races should not carry with it the implication that these races are our inferiors; it simply means that we believe that, being barred by racial characteristics from mingling with us, their introduction is hostile to the democracy toward which I have always resented the assumption that we have an inherent right to force our people, whether capitalists, missionaries, teachers, or working folk, on nations who do not desire their admission. Our American dollars are no more sacred in this respect than our American people, although the "dollar diplomacy" of the present administration would lead us to suppose that we had a right to land the American currency of our Wall Street bankers in any foreign country, and thereafter to protect it with its accrued interest by force of arms.

The Pacific States are now being deluged with an influx of Hindus for whom much less can be said, socially or economically, than for Chinese, Koreans, or Japanese. The present bill will doubtless exclude many of these undesirables, but there should be complete restriction and the bill should be amended in that particular.

My colleague, Mr. HAYES, of California, an old and esteemed member of the Immigration Committee, has stated to me his intention of introducing an amendment to this bill which would exclude from entry all those not eligible to become citizens. This would at once, and without offense, cover the whole problem of oriental immigration. I am strongly in favor of this amendment and believe it to be the simplest method of handling this matter.

Let us consider the economic side of the question, as apart from the vastly important social questions. We have heard a great deal about protected American industries that are being protected for the benefit of American labor, the utter fallacy of which claim has been proven by the facts produced in the steel inquiry and in the investigation of the strike at Lawrence, not to mention the story of the continuing breakdown of livable conditions in the coal-mining industry of Pennsylvania and other States. The industries most highly protected have been the most prompt to avail themselves of free trade in labor and the result has been the creation of many industrial hells.

History goes to show that it was to overcome the lent" assimilation of continually lower grades of foreign labor by protected industries that the contract-labor law was passed. Mr. Carnegie and his protection compeers were rapidly getting to the bottom of the human scale, were getting workmen who would accept lower and lower standards of living, and who through illiteracy were slow to realize why and how they were abused. Just as fast as the American atmosphere caused a demand for more humane conditions, men of growing intelligence were replaced by others who lacked the enlightenment to demand of a great and prosperous country a fair share of the product of their toil. The necessity for the contract-labor law is the same necessity that confronts us in the general question of exclusion of immigration at the present moment. At a time when labor is struggling through organization and agitation to increase the welfare of the workers in the various trades, a continuing influx of people who do not understand the language nor appreciate nor demand the standard that we are trying to reach, comes in to break down the structure as fast as it is erected.

We are constantly told of the ever-increasing demand for cheap or common labor. Our industrial corporations and our railroads are continually pointing out the need of obtaining people who will work at wages that will not support an Ameri-While we are striving to can family on any rational basis. raise all the people of the country to a plane where they may live under reasonable American conditions, the work stroyed by continuing immigration. Here is a conflict that can not be reconciled. Either we must abandon democratic ideals, or else we must stop the influx of those who make the accomplishment of these ideals impossible.

We are always hearing and telling of the good old pioneer times when people attended to their own wants. Whoever heard about the dirty work of those days? The work that had to be done was done by the best people in the community and was not regarded as dirty work. We never heard of vast armies of private servants in those days, nor of butlers nor buttons, nor footmen. If every one in the community had not been profitably engaged, the result would have been hunger and suffering. Just as long as we can import footmen and butlers and buttons, men to fill occupations which no pioneer would accept, some of us insist upon so doing and would bewail the exclusion of persons willing to take up unnecessary tasks.

In passing it is well to take note of the fact that some of this work that Americans will not do is really dirty work which ought not to be done; that there is a vast amount of personal service which ought to be obviated; and that persons employed in such unnecessary labors must be supported by those productively employed.

There is no reason why the work of railway building and track laying, the work of section hands, of street laying, or sewer building should be considered dirty work or below an American standard. These tasks are certainly not harder or more disagreeable than that of the mining of precious metals, in which thousands of native Americans are engaged. If, first of all, employers insist upon an inadequate wage scale, and then the work is called dirty work and deemed socially beneath any but newly arrived immigrants, we may be sure that it is we who have created a demand for conditions that go to destroy democracy-conditions that call for continuing importations of people willing to live below what we consider an American standard—and, with this constant influx, all our efforts to establish social and economic justice come to naught.

The protected sugar industry in the western part of our country and also in the Hawaiian Islands is a remarkable example of this insistence upon an inadequate wage scale as a prerequisite to employment. We find here that the tariff privilege works social damage as well as economic injustice.

In whose interest, from our own American standpoint, is the cry raised for ever-increasing multitudes of people that do not understand our institutions, that can not learn nor appreciate their own rights until a vast amount of unpaid labor is extorted from them?

First of all, we find the trans-Atlantic steamship companies making their rake-off from the transportation business. It has been abundantly shown how vigorous they are in their cam-paign for assisted immigration. There follow the railroads, that can hardly be brought to realize that track-laying can be done by the inhabitants already in the country if only adequate wages are paid. I have already noted the wails of the protected sugar industry for any sort of labor that will work cheaply. Those holding land for speculation have an interest in filling the country up as rapidly as possible. Those holding land for speculation have an obvious

Everywhere we cast our eyes it is the privileged that have an interest in obtaining cheap labor in forcing the increase in pop-We must ultimately define privilege as any system whereby one man may secure an unfair proportion of the product of another's toil.

The argument I have heard on the floor of this House, the argument that I have heard from my earliest recollections of the discussions of this immigration question, is that the foreigners who come in to accept the so-called menial occupations, to do the so-called dirty work, and thereby displace the Americans engaged in these pursuits, force their predecessors into higher positions of employment. This may be well upheld as an aristocratic argument but never as a democratic one. are striving to establish justice all down the scale. All of us can not be statesmen, nor capitalists, superintendents, nor even section foremen, nor mine bosses. If this proposition of pushing our own people up be analyzed clear through it will be shown that it has pushed out at the financial top the parasites known as the idle rich; that all along the line it has provided an existence for those that prey upon the unpaid toil of the immigrants, whether he be capitalist, padrone, or employment-agency shark. It is not a benefit to our people to spend their energies in distribution rather than in production. It is a great evil that so many of us refuse to work at all, and that we are dependent on newly arrived foreigners for necessary labor.

It should be our aim to make every necessary employment a fit employment for our own people, one which we would not feel that our own children were disgraced in pursuing any more than our pioneer ancestors felt disgraced by the tasks they were forced to perform in simpler times.

Taking the question from another angle, no one can doubt but that the relative welfare of our country has been due to its natural resources, that our opportunities have largely come from the possibility of our people scattering out into pioneer conditions and taking up lands in the West. The energetic have usually been able to better their condition by taking on the pioneer life. There was a time when, as a Nation with too much land for the population and weak from our smallness of numbers, we did well to invite the able and energetic to share But the situation is largely changed in this respect.

It is hard to find good public land where homesteads may be established, and if the unwholesome congestion of our cities were relieved by placing the surplus population on the land the accommodations would prove still narrower.

The time has come when under existing conditions increasing our population is simply watering the capital stock of the Nagranting to each person less and not more of the common wealth. I have no doubt but that under different social and economic conditions our country could support vastly more people in a higher average of social well-being than it does at the present time, but until we provide conditions different from those that now obtain increases of population simply lead to greater privilege on one side and greater want on the other.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, just for information only, would the gentleman inform me how many foreign born there are in his district, approximately?

Mr. KENT. There are a large number of foreign born in my district.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. About what percentage of your population is foreign born?

Mr. KENT. I can not tell you the percentage, but I imagine 30 to 50 per cent.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. KENT. Yes, sir.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understood him to say that a much larger number of population could be accommodated in the United States than there are at present, if the system were changed, and if justice were established. I suppose that is what he means?

Mr. KENT. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Belgium is supporting 650 people to the square mile and we are supporting 25. How about that?

Mr. KENT. I do not know how well to do the people in Belgium are. They may have a more advantageous, a juster system than we have. They may not live on a scale that we are justified in demanding.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Another question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. KENT. I will not yield further until I have finished. It is for the reasons enumerated that I would favor almost complete exclusion of foreign immigration. If it were possible to select immigrants in the line of the most enlightened policy, I should favor selecting them from nations that are most likely to blend in with our social system and to appreciate our democratic ideals—people whose history has shown them to be in-herently capable of self-government. Personally, I should vastly prefer, as an immigrant, an illiterate from one of these nations to the best educated Hindoo or Turk—this, as a national matter and not on the ground of any personal prejudice.

But as one means of curbing the introduction of more immigrants than our national digestion can assimilate, I shall gladly vote for the literacy test. There is one argument for this test that justifies its application. It is the ignorance of our foreign immigrants that has been chiefly responsible for their exploitation. Those capable of passing a literacy test would be less likely to lie down under the conditions that have been shown to exist in some of our centers of hothouse industry.

Another point was raised here about the influence of immigrants on the cost of living. There is no question in the world but what the bad distribution of population, especially the increase in the cities, is largely responsible for the increased cost of food. There are too many people eating and too few people producing food. Inasmuch as a vast proportion of our immigration lodges in the cities, those immigrants certainly have a great influence on the cost of living as found in the prices of food.

The tremendous and ultimate importance of the food supply is shown in the history of the ancient city nations which went to pieces from the fact of their being forced to seek food supplies by war, to introduce oppression and slavery that overgrown cities might be fed.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The country districts should be happy that we are consuming their products.

Mr. KENT. I can not for a moment indorse the exemption proposed in this bill, which provides that those fleeing from proposed in this bill, which provides that the religious persecution shall not be subject to a literacy test. It is illogical and inherently contrary to good public policy. We are either legislating for foreigners or for our own country. It is fair to assume that we are true to our oaths of office and are legislating for this Nation. We are proposing a test that is supposedly for our own interest. If a person under this test is unfit for admission to this country, or if, to put it more mildly, we do not believe it good public policy to admit such a person, it is hard to understand why one who has failed to pass the literacy test should be rendered available for admission by the mere fact of having been subject to religious persecution. Either in this particular case we are not exercising our function of legislating for our own country, but rather in the interests of certain foreigners, or else religious persecution must produce civic effects of which we have as up to date remained in ignorance. It is more than probable under such an exemption as is here proposed, that thousands upon thousands of Turks would knock at our doors, claiming right to admission on the ground of religious persecution by the victorious Servians, Bulgarians, Greeks, and Montenegrins. It is also highly probable that many thousands of Turks will cross over into Asia Minor and there will proceed to commit new atrocities upon the Armenians, who will have an added reason for demanding admission to our country on the ground of being subject to religious persecution.

No amount of oratory, no amount of appeal to the early history of our country, can overcome the cold logic of this proposition. It seems to me impossible that any person can, in calm judgment, pretend that religious persecution of itself can render eligible for admission to the privileges of this Nation those found by other tests to be unfit. [Applause.]

Now, if there are gentlemen who wish to ask me questions and I have any more time, I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman this question: He stated in the course of his remarks that the high cost of living was largely due to the fact that people assembled in the cities instead of in the country.

Mr. KENT. I said "the high cost of food." The high cost of living is largely found in the cost of food. I specified food.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think there is any means by which we can legislate the distribution of the people to the sections of the country to which they do not wish to go?

Mr. KENT. No; I doubt if there is, but we are accentuating the trouble by bringing in people who mostly gather in the

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Anseerry having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate joint resolution No. 144, authorizing payment of December salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment for the holiday recess.

IMMIGRATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in 10 minutes it is almost impossible to discuss a measure such as this. I wish it could be considered after further general debate under more liberal terms than we have under the 5-minute rule, but the majority have decreed otherwise.

In the 10 minutes allotted me I can only hope, in substance, to say that, in my judgment, this bill should not be enacted. I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] in his opinion that the time has come to prohibit not only undesirable but desirable immigration. Gentlemen are greatly afraid that we are going to be greatly crowded in the United States. The fact is we have just scratched this country. With half of the railways in the world, we have about onefifteenth of the population of the world-100,000,000 people. When we are as thickly settled as is Europe we shall have 500,000,000 people.

I have lived pretty well through two generations, and the fear manifested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett], and by the gentleman from California [Mr. Kent], and by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] is not new to me. I grew up on the Wabash. I have heard more eloquent speeches made with greater preparation, perhaps, at least more lengthy, than that made by the gentleman from California, when passion was torn to tatters, against immigration when we had less than 20,000,000 people in this country.

Now, I quite agree with and voted for legislation to exclude the Chinese. I believe the Japanese under our policy are properly excluded. But I am not afraid of the Caucasian race, our race, from wherever they come, who are willing to live in the sweat of their faces under our policies in this country, rendering an equivalent for that which they receive.

I am not in love with the Black Hand, whether American or foreign born. I am not in love with the assassin; I am not in love with the man that commits crime; I am not in love with the man who would get something for nothing. But I'do love the man who renders an equivalent in muscle, crossed on brain, for that which he receives, and I am here to tell you right now that I have no fear about the first generation that is willing to work, and I have less fear about the second generation, because the common-school system of the United States and the growing intelligence of the first generation and their desire to better their condition and that of their children will take care of their future.

In one part of my district-in the coal-mining district-there is an output of from three to four million tons annually; the labor is furnished by the Slav, by the Italian, by those who come from Hungary, in the main, and that is good labor. I went to an old settlers' meeting in that locality a year or two ago, riding out from the little railway station where the old settlers had gathered, and as we passed along the road we saw on one side a three-story schoolhouse of large dimensions, accommodating hundreds of children, and the children were playing outside. I was riding with a man who was greatly disturbed about the development that was taking place among these foreigners who were coming in to do that work, which, I will say in the main, American-born labor does not do. I said, "My, what a drove of children! Who are the parents of those children?" He said, "I don't know. I suppose their parents are these people in the main who have come here and are doing this work." I said, "Look at them. Can you tell which are the American born of this generation? Pick me out the Italian, pick me out the Slav child, pick out the American child." We stopped, and my friend said, "I can't tell one of them from the other."

I say again, I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] that we should shut out desirable immigration. There is room for it.

Nor am I in harmony with those who call themselves labor leaders who protest against this immigration. Many of them were born upon the other side. Some of them are the children of those who were born on the other side. They want to shut out competition. Why, gentlemen, you can not get those labor leaders and the great mass of people who federate with them to work upon the construction of the railways or in the coal mines. When we speak of common labor we mean unskilled labor. All labor is honorable that renders an equivalent for what it receives. If you curtail this unskilled labor, I suggest to you that you tend to impair the wage of the skilled laborer, because all kinds of labor must be done and some one must do this unskilled labor.

By the by, I am told that down in Texas they are so anxious to have people to pick cotton and perform other labor there that the Mexicans come over. You in Texas could not do very well without that labor probably. In New England they come over from Canada, and they come as far as St. Louis and out into Chicago, the second great manufacturing city of this country. Now, although I can not say what I desire to in the 10 minutes allotted to me, I wish to refer to one feature of this bill. There are exceptions and modifications in it, viz:

Aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign continguous territory—are not included in this bill. I suppose that would continue to allow the Mexicans to come over and cross every day back into Mexico. I suppose that would cover the case of Canadians who are not naturalized and who desire to go back to Canada and then come again, because they have been lawfully admitted heretofore.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman familiar with the decisions on those questions?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. If I may be allowed a moment, I will say perhaps there is a good deal that I do not know about this bill, and if it is necessary for me to know more than I now do in order to agree with gentlemen who favor this bill, whose ancestors are not a century old in this country, and whose de-scendants, having received the benefits of citizenship in the United States, would deny the same privileges to their kin from abroad, then I do not want to have that degree of knowledge to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers. [Applause and laughter.].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert] use some of his time?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time has been used? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] has used 59 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] has used 39 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. I prefer that the gentleman from Pennsylvania should use some more of his time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle]. [Applause.]

IMr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.1

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will it be in order in the committee to ask that all gentlemen who speak be allowed to extend their remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. That request must be made in the House. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies].

Mr. DIES. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this question can be simplified by a very brief statement of what the bill proposes. The bill proposes to keep out those who can neither read nor write in any language, and the effect of the bill would be to keep out about 250,000 persons, largely from the south and east of Europe, who are being dumped into the congested centers of population in the United States. There are but two phases to the discussion-

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIES. My time is quite limited, and I can not yield. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield,

Mr. DIES. There are just two phases to this discussion, Mr. Chairman. One is the labor question and another is the question of the effect upon the institutions under which we live. I am amazed at my friend from Chicago [Mr. Sabath] and my fried from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], who contend that the dumping of 250,000 illiterate immigrants into the labor markets of the United States from countries where they receive less than one-fourth that they receive here would help the labor market into which the 250,000 are dumped. That, Mr. Chairman, is a new process of reasoning, a new deduction of political economy, and startlingly different to anything I have ever heard advocated before. It is just as true, sir, that the dumping of large numbers from the cheap-labor markets of Europe into our labor market would lower our scale of wages as it is that water will seek its level.

The other phase of this question relates to the effect which this mass of illiterate immigration will have upon the free institutions of the Government under which we live. I have vet to hear a gentleman contend that the 250,000 illiterate immigrants designed to be excluded by the provisions of this measure are capable of self-government. In most cases they come from countries where the people as a whole have demonstrated their inaptitude and incapability for self-government. Those to be excluded by the terms of this bill are the least capable of the peoples in the nations from which they come. Surely if all the people of one of these migrating nations are incapable of governing themselves, the ignorant ones can not take on the attributes of self-governing ability by a simple voyage across the ocean.

But the opponents of this measure, disregarding the rights of the laboring millions of this country; disregarding the jeopardy in which this influx of ignorance places our free institutions still contend that we ought to admit them, in obedience to the principle that this Nation is an asylum for the oppressed of all the nations of the earth. Mr. Chairman, my heart goes out to the downtrodden of every corner of the earth. I would to God that all the children of men over all the earth were in the possession and enjoyment and capable of maintaining free government. But, sir, our duty is first to the hundred million of human beings who constitute this Republic. They say I am not a friend to the foreign element. Mr. Chairman, in the light and wisdom of history I believe I am a better friend to the 10,000,000 foreign born who inhabit this Republic than those gentlemen who would add another 10,000,000 from the ignorant of foreign lands. This asylum for the oppressed is full to overflowing, and I warn gentlemen that it is high time we were taking measures to protect the ones we have already admitted.

My friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle], says, in effect, that because I represent a district that has but a small foreign element I know nothing about the immigration question. If that is good reasoning, Mr. Chairman, the gentle-man himself would be but a poor judge of Americanism, for he comes from a district where almost the entire population is foreign born- [Applause.] For myself, I believe that this great old ship of state is already heavily loaded with the freight of ignorance. I feel that we owe a duty to those on board, whose That duty is to secure the safety chosen representatives we are. of the voyage. It may seem harsh and cruel to those who are clamoring to be put aboard, but our greater duty is to safe-guard against sinking the ship by taking on these weighty cargoes of vice and ignorance.

Mr. Chairman, however much I commiserate the downtrodden peoples of the earth, I am unwilling to put the liberties of my own country in peril by opening wide its gates to the ignorant hordes who flee from a tyranny they are helpless to oppose to a free Republic, whose institutions they are powerless to main-

You who profess that the people should have more power should remember, my progressive friends, that the people can safely have power in proportion only to their intelligence and to their patriotism, and that every time you unload a cargo of ignorant illiterates from the south and east of Europe into this Republic you make it necessary to take a part of the power away from the people who are already here.

The power of self-government is the power of intelligence and the power of patriotism based upon intelligence. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Powers].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, it has been said by one of America's most distinguished sons, ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, that next to the conservation of our natural resources immigration was our most important national problem. In the minds of many immigration is even more important than conservation, because it goes a long way in settling the kind of people who will make up the population of this country now and in the future; and the kind of people there are in a country inevitably determines the kind of citizenship, the kind of government, and the kind of civilization the country has; and the kind of citizenship determines the liberty, the sort of happiness, and the measure of progress which prevail in it. The importance therefore of the subject of immigration can readily be appreciated by every thoughtful American. A little history of the legislation of this country on the subject of immigration may not be amiss.

The immigration to the United States is naturally divided into two periods:

First. The immigrants arriving before the year 1880, known as the old immigration; and Second. Immigrants after that time, known as the new immigration

From the first settlement of this country down to about 1835 immigrants came here as a matter of course. Practically up to that time the only legislation enacted, and practically all that was proposed, was the law of 1819 regulating steerage passengers at sea and making provision for recording statistics relative to immigration. None were kept before this.

From 1835 to 1860 the subject of immigration to this country was much discussed, and there sprang up what was known as the "native-American" and "know-nothing" movements, largely basing their opposition to immigrants to this country who embraced the Catholic faith. These movements soon assumed the form of a political organization known in history as the American Republican Party and later the "Know-Nothing Party." As a result of these organizations, in the main, affiliating with the new political movement, the United States Senate in 1836 passed a resolution directing the Secretary of State to collect information respecting the immigration of foreign paupers and criminals to the United States.

The House of Representatives in 1838 agreed to a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee of the House to consider the propriety of passing a law prohibiting the importation of vagabonds and paupers into this country as well as to considering the expediency of making our loose naturalization laws more stringent. This resolution was referred to a committee of seven Members, and their favorable report was the first congressional report ever made concerning any phase of the immigration question.

A bill was introduced in Congress upon the recommendation of the majority report of the committee, which bill provided that any master of a vessel who took on board an alien passenger who was an idiot, lunatic, maniac, or one afflicted with an incurable disease or one convicted of an infamous crime, with the intention of transporting such person, to the United States, should, upon conviction, be fined $1,000 or be imprisoned from one to three years. This bill was not even considered by Congress, and for some 10 years following little attempt was made to secure immigration legislation; but the great increase in immigration to this country from Europe from 1848 to 1850 put new life and fears in the breasts of those fighting immigration; and it is recorded that in 1855 both the governors and Legislatures of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, California, and Kentucky were "Know-Nothings." The slogan of the "Know-Nothing Party" was that Americans must rule America, and their greatest strength was in the Thirty-third Congress, from 1854 to 1856, when they claimed 43 Representatives and 5 Senators. Ten years later, however, in the Thirty-eighth Congress, there was not a "Know-Nothing" Representative in the House, and the "Know-Nothing Party" disappeared without having accomplished anything against immigration. The truth is that in 1864 Congress passed a law to encourage immigration, especially the importation of contract labor. This law was repealed, however, in 1868, leaving on the statute books the act of 1819, amended slightly by the acts of 1847 and 1848, providing improved conditions in the steerage of immigration ships. The law of 1864 stands out as the only attempt on the part of the National Government to promote immigration. The States, however, have frequently made such attempts. New York, in 1824, passed a law requiring all masters of vessels arriving at the port of entry to make a written report, giving the name, age, and last residence of every person on board during the voyage, and whether any of the passengers had gone on board any other vessel with a view of proceeding to New York.

Another section of the law gave the mayor of New York City the power to require bond of every master of a vessel to indemnify the mayor and the overseer of the poor from any expense incurred for passengers brought in and not reported. This law was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, and in 1829 the State of New York passed another law, which provided that the master of every vessel arriving from a foreign port should pay to the health commissioner $1.50 for every cabin passenger, $1 for every steerage passenger, mate, sailor, or marine, and 25 cents for every person on a coasting vessel.

In 1837 Massachusetts passed a law requiring the owner of a vessel to pay $2 for each alien passenger brought to her ports and to give bond that certain immigrants should not become a public charge. Both the New York and the Massachusetts statutes were later held in part to be unconstitutional. California and Louisiana passed statutes looking to the limitation of immigration, which were held to be unconstitutional. In California the question of Chinese immigration was so acute that recourse was had to the Federal Government, which resulted in the Burlingame treaty, which was proclaimed on July 28, 1868, and which was the first treaty to deal with Chinese immigration to the United States.

The attitude of the United States in this treaty toward Chinese immigration was not popular in the Pacific Coast States, and they continued their agitation for further restriction of Chinese immigrants, which resulted in the Congress of the United States passing the act of March 3, 1875, aimed at immigrants from China, Japan, and other oriental countries. This law prohibited the importation of convicts, women for immoral purposes, coolie labor, and Chinese and Japanese subjects without their free and voluntary consent, and fixed heavy penalties for a violation of the provisions of the statute. Later other treaties and Chinese and Japanese exclusion acts forbade the immigration of Chinese and Japanese to this country as well as Korean laborers, skilled or unskilled. And that is the way the matter stands to-day. So the bill now before the House is not intended to exclude Chinese, Japanese, or Korean laborers, skilled or unskilled, as that is aiready provided for.

And while the National Government was experimenting with immigration in this way the various States had from time to time, as I have said, tried their hands at it. New York, Massachusetts, California, Louislana, and other States passed immigration statutes of one form and another, the constitutionality of a number of which in time reached the Supreme Court of the United States for final decision. It became apparent that the subject of immigration was too big for State control, and in a very unusual decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on March 20, 1876, that court decreed that—has been confided to Congress by the Constitution; that Congress can more appropriately and with more acceptance exercise it than any other body known to our laws, State or national; that by providing a system of laws in these matters applicable to all ports and to all vessels, a serious question which has long been a matter of contest and complaint may be effectively and satisfactorily settled.

We are of the opinion that this whole subject-

This decision virtually put the subject of immigration under Federal control, and on July 6, 1876, following the decision of the Supreme Court in March of that year, Senator Conkling and Representative Cox, of New York, introduced bills in Congress for the national regulation of immigration. No legislation, however, of this sort was put on the statute books until August 3, 1882. This law provided, among other things, that a head tax of 50 cents each be levied on all aliens entering the ports of the United States to defray expenses of regulating immigration and caring for needy immigrants after landing; that lunatics, idiots, convicts-except for political offenses-and persons likely to become public charges should not be permitted to land, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be charged with executing the provisions of the act, and that he be empowered to enter into contracts with such State offices as the governor of any State might designate to take charge of the local affairs of immigration within such State.

On February 26, 1885, the first act of Congress was approved forbidding the importation of contract labor to the United States. This law was defective in that no arrangement was made for its general execution, no inspection of the alien was provided for, nor deportation of the contract laborer, if found so to be. This act, however, was amended by an act of February 23, 1887, which gave the Secretary of the Treasury authority to deport within one year from landing any alien who had come to this country contrary to the provisions of the contract-labor

In 1889 a standing committee on immigration was established in the Senate of the United States, and a select committee on immigration and naturalization was established in the House.

In 1800 these committees were authorized to make a joint investigation of the immigration question, and especially to look into the various State laws on the subject. These committees, in making their report, suggested that while no very radical changes in the immigration laws were at that time advisable, still they found that throughout the country there existed a strong sentiment for a stricter enforcement of these laws.

The fact is that in the year 1800 one or more political parties in 23 different States demanded additional regulation of immigration. Responsive to this demand for stricter immigration laws and regulations, the Congress of the United States passed, and it was approved on March 3, 1891, an additional immigration act amendatory of previous acts. This act added to the list of aliens heretofore excluded those "suffering from a louth-some or contagious disease," "polygamists," and those "whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another or who is assisted by others to come," except, however, that any person living in the United States could pay the way of a relative or friend, provided, of course, that the relative or friend did not belong to some of the excluded classes. strengthened further the existing contract-labor law by prohibiting the encouragement of immigration by promises of employment through advertisements published in any foreign country, and steamship companies were forbidden under penalty to solicit or encourage immigration.

The law of 1891 also created the office of Superintendent of Immigration, and instead of some State officer, by appointment of the governor, having charge of the execution of the immigration laws in that State, as provided for in the act of 1882, the whole question of immigration for the first time was completely under Federal control.

This act also provided that the commanding officer of every vessel carrying aliens to our shores should furnish to the proper immigration officials the name, nationality, last residence, and destination of all immigrants on board; that medical examination of immigrants at United States ports should be made by surgeons of the United States Marine-Hospital Service, and within one year after arrival any immigrant might be returned who had come to this country in violation of law, and that, too, at the expense of the transportation company that brought him. For the first time inspection of immigrants on the Mexican and Canadian borders was established. this was the most stringent immigration act passed by Congress up to this time, still the subject of immigration continued to be much discussed, and a strong movement for further restriction developed, owing largely to the industrial depression from 1890 to 1896. Investigations more or less extensive were conducted by joint committees of Congress and also by the Industrial Commission.

In 1894 an act was passed raising the head tax from 50 cents to $1, but President Cleveland vetoed another bill passed by both branches of Congress providing for a literacy test.

Based upon the report of the Industrial Commission made to Congress February 20, 1902, a bill was introduced in the House providing for a complete codification and rearrangement of all immigration acts from March 3, 1875, to the act of 1894. An amendment was offered to this bill and passed by the House by a vote of 86 to 7 providing that all persons over 15 years of age who were unable to read the English language or some other language should be excluded, making an exception in favor of wives, parents, grandparents, and children under 18 years of age. The bill so amended passed the House May 27, 1902. When it reached the Senate it eliminated the educational test, raised the head tax from $1 to $2, and made it unlawful for any person to assist in the entry or naturalization of alien anarchists. The House agreed to these amendments, and the bill was approved by the President March 3, 1903.

It was not until February 20, 1907, that any other immigration act of much import was passed by Congress, although by an act of February 14, 1903, the Department of Commerce and Labor was established and the Commissioner General of Immigration was placed under that department, his official position being that of a head of a bureau. On June 29, 1906, the Bureau of Immigration was changed to the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens was provided for, and the administration of the new naturalization law was charged to this bureau.

A little history of the immigration act of February 20, 1907, the latest now on the statute books, with a small amendment of March 26, 1910, and the one sought to be amended by the bill we are now considering, may not be amiss:

A bill introduced by Senator Dillingham, of Vermont, was favorably reported by the Senate committee on March 29, 1906. This bill sought to amend the immigration act of 1903 by increasing the head tax from $2 to $5, by adding imbeciles, feebleminded persons, children under 17 years of age unaccompanied, and persons "who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of such a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living," were added to the excluded classes. The section of existing law excluding prostitutes was amended by adding "women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose."

A Division of Information was created in the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and steamship companies were for the first time required to furnish to the proper immigration officials lists of outgoing passengers. In the Senate the bill was amended by the insertion of literacy tests very similar to the one this House is now considering and which I will later quote, and the Senate bill as amended by the literacy test passed the Senate May 23, 1906.

When the bill reached the House it was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and they amended it by substituting one of their own, in many respects similar to it, including the literacy test. In the conference between the House and the Senate conferees the head tax was made $4, the literacy test eliminated, and a commission composed of nine members was authorized to make a complete investigation of the immigration question and report its findings to Congress. Composing this commission were to be three Members of the House, appointed by the Speaker, three Members of the Senate, appointed by the President of the Senate, and the other members of the commission to be appointed by the President of the United States. This commission, after an extensive investiga-tion, both in this country and in Europe, costing $1,000,000 and covering a period of four years, made a voluminous report covering 42 volumes of printed matter, covering all phases of the immigration question. This commission, after a most thorough investigation of the immigration question, found certain facts to exist and made some specific recommendations to Congress

In the first place, the commission found that there were too many immigrants coming to this country; that there is now an oversupply of unskilled labor in the basic industries of the United States; that restrictive legislation ought to be passed by Congress; and that the literacy test was the best single method of accomplishing the desired end. Let me quote the exact words of the commission:

The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in industries of the country as a whole, a condition which demands legislation restricting the further admission of such unskilled labor. It is desirable in making the reduction that a sufficient number be debarred to produce a marked effect upon the present experts of unskilled labor. supply of unskilled labor.

And after enumerating more than a half dozen ways by which this reduction could be brought about, the commission added:

A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

And this is not a partisan political report for political pur-It is a report by men of both parties after a most careful and painstaking investigation. The fact is that the question of immigration is not a political one.

I have briefly reviewed the legislation on this question, and before taking up and beginning to discuss the merits of the bill now pending before this House I want to adduce some proof to show that the question is nonpolitical and that restrictive legislation has been demanded in the national platforms of the two dominant political parties in this country. Away back in 1896, more than an eighth of a century ago, when the evils of immigration were not so great and not so well known as now, the Republican Party in its national platform of that year not only demanded a restriction of immigration but specifically indorsed the reading and writing test as a means to accomplish that end. The plank in the platform to which I refer is as follows:

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

This is one of the planks in the platform upon which the beloved McKinley was elected, and in his inaugural address he specifically indorsed the immigration plank and recommended an intelligence test to alien immigrants, to the end that American citizenship be protected and American institutions preserved.

In the Republican national platform of 1900 we find this language:

In the further interests of American workmen we favor a more effective restriction of the immigration of cheap labor from foreign lands, etc.

In his first message to Congress in 1901 ex-President Roosevelt indorsed unequivocally the restriction of immigration and an educational test. He used this pointed language:

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure a careful, and not merely perfunctory, educational test; some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens.

The Republican national platform this year (1912), the latest expression of the party on the subject, reads as follows:

We pledge the Republican Party to the enactment of appropriate laws to give relief from the constantly growing evil of induced or undesirable immigration, which is inimical to the progress and welfare of the people of the United States.

That the Republican Party stands for a restriction of immigration there is no room to doubt.

The Democratic Party, too, has put itself on record in regard to this great question. In its national platform of 1896 it used this language:

We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market.

In its national platform of 1900 the Democratic Party, while containing no plank upon the general subject of immigration, indorsed the Chinese exclusion law and recommended its application to the same classes of all Asiatic races.

And the Democratic national platform of 1904 contained no plank upon the general subject of immigration, but did specifically oppose the admission of Asiatic immigrants in this language:

We are opposed to the admission of Asiatic immigrants, who can not be amalgamated with our population.

The Democratic national platform of this year (1912) indorses more stringent immigration laws.

This is the latest expression of the Democratic Party on this important subject of immigration. Not only have the two dominant political parties in this country repeatedly expressed themselves in their national platforms in favor of restricting immigration, but the Republican platform of 1896 and the Republican President elected upon the Republican platform of 1900 have in express terms favored the literacy test-such a literacy test in substance that we are now considering. And what is that literacy test and what are the terms of the bill now before us? Before the adjournment of the second session of the Sixty-second Congress the Senate of the United States passed, on April 19, 1912, an immigration bill known as the Dillingham bill, which covered many phases of the immigration question. That bill was sent over to the House on April 20, 1912, and referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. For reasons which will appear later, the House committee amended the Senate bill by striking out all of it except the enacting clause and substituted the Burnett literacy bill, which reads as follows:

That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit: All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or the language or dialect of some other country, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted or any citizen of the United States may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to land.

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read or not the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with copies of uniform slips, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plain type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

Sec. 3. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of this act, to wit: (a) All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit through the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States and

The Burnett bill does not differ materially from a provision in the Dillingham bill providing for an educational test, except that the Dillingham bill provides that the immigrant should be required to read not less than 20 nor more than 25 words of the Constitution of the United States before being admitted, while the Burnett bill does not require the immigrant to read so many words of the Constitution of the United States, with the terms, meaning, and expressions with which the immigrant is unfamiliar, but only requires that the immigrant read from 30 to 40 words "in ordinary use printed in plain type" in some language or dialect, which the immigrant himself has the right to select.

This literacy test for the purpose of preventing objectionable foreigners from coming to this country is not a new proposition, as I have already observed. Not only have political parties in their national platforms specially declared for it, but Congress itself has unequivocally indorsed it.

The House, in the Fifty-fourth Congress, passed such a measure by the decisive vote of 195 to 20, while the Senate passed it by a vote of 52 to 10.

That literacy-test bill would have become a law but for the veto of President Cleveland.

In the Fifty-fifth Congress an immigration bill again passed the Senate, which carried a literacy-test provision, by a vote of 45 to 28.

In the Fifty-seventh Congress an illiteracy-test amendment to an immigration bill passed the House by the sweeping majority of 87 to 7.

The fact is that at no time in the history of the country has a literacy-test provision in any immigration bill ever been defeated by either House of Congress.

Upon the contrary, such a provision has invariably been passed by decisive majorities when the question was submitted to a vote.

And the various votes by both Houses of Congress on this subject is but a reflection of public opinion on the question.

Not all the newspapers, periodicals, and magazines of the country favor this legislation, but I think I am safe in saying that the bulk of the press do favor it.

Resolutions, petitions, memorials have poured in upon Congress, expressing their views and making known the wishes of large and representative bodies of our citizenship on this momentous and far-reaching question.

The Legislatures of the great States of Ohio, Tennessee, Vermont, and other States have memorialized Congress to pass more stringent immigration laws, and have specifically indorsed the literacy test.

The various farmers' organizations throughout the length and breadth of the land, the great labor organizations all over the country, the patriotic societies, powerful bodies representing charity, commerce, and the like, have upon divers occasions passed resolutions memorializing Congress to enact a law embodying an educational test and more stringent immigration laws generally.

There are a greater number of the people of the United States engaged in agriculture than in any other calling. National Congress, a body representing the highest ideals in agriculture in all the States of the Union and composed of representative farmers and students of agriculture from all the States, holds a national convention each year. Delegates are selected to attend these conventions by the governors of the various States as well as by the great agricultural organizations and bodies from the most skilled and scientific agriculturists in the whole country.

At these national gatherings they discuss the various problems affecting the welfare of the farmer, and often express their views in the form of resolutions.

At the last National Farmers' Congress they passed the following resolution:

Whereas the congressional Immigration Commission's report of 40 volumes has just been published and recommend the very measures which this organization has been advocating in its resolutions for years to judiciously restrict undesirable immigration:

*Resolved, That we enthusiastically approve the commission's legislative recommendations that the head tax be increased, the illiteracy test be enacted, the foreign steamships be fined for bringing undesirables, and that other judicious measures be adopted, which are hereby urged upon the Congress of the United States.

The Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union has a membership of over 3,000,000.

This is possibly the most powerful in point of members and influence of any of the farmers' organizations in this country. This organization has been much interested in restrictive immigration laws and has frequently indorsed the literacy test.

At a recent meeting of this organization it expressed itself in this fashion:

this fashion:

Whereas the Immigration Commission, after a four years' investigation at home and abroad, involving an expenditure of a million dollars, reports that "many undeniably undesirable persons are admitted every years"; that "there is a growing criminal element in this country, due to foreign immigration"; and that "substantial restriction is demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations"; and

Whereas that commission recommends increasing the head tax, excluding illiterate adults, requiring some visible means of support, fining the foreign steamships for bringing undesirables that could be rejected on the other side, and other measures, law in other new countries, and urged for years by this organization in its resolutions, before congressional committees, and otherwise; and

Whereas it is proposed to relieve the Northeast of its intolerable immigration evils and to continue the unloading of undesirables upon this country by diverting and distributing the incoming, ever-increasing influx from southern Europe, Asia, and northern Africa over the agricultural sections of the South and West.

Then it goes ahead to pass strong resolutions and asks Congress to put on the statute books the laws they desire on this subject.

The American Federation of Labor, the largest labor organization in this country, has for years at its annual gatherings been passing resolutions and petitioning Congress to pass more strict immigration laws, and it has specifically indorsed the educational test-in substance the test we are now considering.

The Grand International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, the Knights of Labor, and other organizations have repeatedly passed resolutions specifically indorsing the literacy test and memoralized Congress to make it a law.

And what are the reasons for this widespread interest in favor of stricter immigrations? Why has the American Congress from 1819 to 1907 been adding one restriction after another to the continued stream of immigrants flocking to our shores?

The law of 1819 was but a little makeshift, regulating steerage passengers at sea.

The law of February 20, 1907, the latest on the statute books and the one we now promise to amend by adding a literacy test, provides in section 2:

The law of February 20, 1907, the latest on the statute books and the one we now promise to amend by adding a literacy test, provides in section 2:

That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeclies, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamy; anarchists, or persons who admit their bellef in the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons hereinafter called contract laborers who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, expressed or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind skilled or unskilled; those who have been,

This section debars many undesirables, but it needs further amendment.

Even under its provisions there reaches the shores of our country every year in the neighborhood of 1,000,000 alien immigrants, from 30 to 40 per cent of whom can neither read nor write.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] struck at the root of this proposition in his remarks a few moments ago. The question is not the excluding of immigration entirely; the question is not as to the excluding of desirable immigrants; but the question is, Shall this country be flooded each year with some 250,000 ignorant immigrants from the old country? As I have observed, the character of citizenship of any country in the world determines the character of its civilization, the character of its institutions, and the character of its government. Will the dumping of 250,000 foreign immigrants into the United States yearly who can not even read and write add to the standard of American citizen-ship? If they will do it, then this bill and all that pertains ship: It they will do le, then has but an early better to it is wrong in principle. If, upon the other hand, the bringing into this country and dumping upon our shores yearly 250,000 people who know nothing of American institutions and who are incapable of learning much about American institutions and American life will injure the character of American labor and American ideals, then this bill ought to be supported by every man who wants to elevate the standard of American citizenship, because the purpose of it is to exclude this character of foreign immigration.

The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] in his remarks but a few moments ago said that this country owes much of its greatness to those who come to our shores from Europe and other countries. That is unquestionably true; but the gentleman ought to remember that away back yonder in 1869 there was less than 1 per cent of the character of immigrants which this bill proposes to exclude that came to Italians—those of them who can not read—and the south Italians—those of them who can not read—and the south Italians, and the Poles. And in the year 1869 there was less than 1 per cent of this character of immigrants coming to America, while 75 or 80 per cent of the desirable immigrants—the English the Search per cent of the desirable immigrants— America, while its or so per cent of the desirable inhingrants the English, the Scandinavians, and the others—at that time constituted the large part of the immigration coming into this country. But year by year the north Italians and the South Italians, and the Poles, and the Slavs increased in number, and from year to year the desirable immigrants decreased in number, until in 1911 about 80 per cent—I am not exactly sure as to the accuracy of the percentage—but, in the neighborhood of 80 per cent of the immigrants coming to this country were immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, composed of the north Italians, south Italians, Poles, and Slavs,

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. POWERS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the same objections that are made now to the present immigrants were made to the desirable immigrants which you have mentioned, who came to this country up to 1860? Were they not also called then undesirable and vicious?

Mr. POWERS. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I want to say that in part the same objections possibly were made, but not in the whole. If the gentleman from Illinois remembers, about five years ago, on the floor of this House, men who were then opposing the literacy test, as men are opposing the literacy test now, opposed a bill similar in character to the bill now under consideration, and succeeded in having a commission appointed to investigate the whole subject of immigration. That commission was appointed, composed of three Members of the House, three Members of the Senate, and three men appointed by the President of the United States. And after four years of investigation by them in this country and in Europe the commission came to the unanimous conclusion that there was an oversupply of unskilled labor in this country, and that the foreign immigration should be largely curtailed.

Mr. SABATH. That was in the years of 1907 and 1908, during the Republican panic.

Mr. POWERS. In further answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I desire to say that this commission was appointed at the instance of men who were then opposed to the literacy test, and that commission, appointed by men opposed to the literacy test, made a report in which they stated that the best single method possible of restricting immigration was by means of the

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.
Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman inform the committee what the percentage of illiteracy is in his own State, in all persons over 10 years of age for 1910?

Mr. LOBECK. In his own district. Mr. POWERS. I have not the figures at hand, Mr. Chair-

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] wants to know if it is not true that there is a large percentage of illiteracy in Kentucky-as much as 10 per cent among the whites and 30 or 40 per cent among the colored-and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Cantrill] also stated that while Kentucky has as good a class of citizenship as any State in the Union, still he added that the mountain section of the State-the Republican section-was where the high percentage of illiteracy abounds.

In reply to these gentlemen and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Lobeck], I desire to say that no section of this Union has brainier or better people than live and dwell in the mountains of old Kentucky. There is there this day the purest reservoir on the American Continent of pure old Anglo-Saxon blood. They may fall a little below the people of certain other sections of the Union on technical book information—they have not had the advantages of some other sections-but in education, in the true sense of the word, they are inferior to none.

They are educated in hand and educated in heart, educated in honesty and educated in industry. In homely virtues they have no peers. In strength of manhood and purity of womanhood they have no equals. I will enter no further defense of the people of the mountains of Kentucky. They need none. They are destined to control the affairs of the State politically. and financially

It comes with bad grace from the gentleman from California or any other gentleman to prate about the illiteracy of the colored people in Kentucky or elsewhere. Ground down with the chains of slavery for 250 years, denied, aye, forbidden, to read a printed page, no wonder there exists some illiteracy among them now.

But few races in the world have made more progress than the colored people since the master's lash was taken from their bare backs and them given an opportunity to make some strides along educational and other lines.

But if it be true, as contended here by gentlemen opposing the literacy test for immigrants, that there is a high degree of illiteracy in the South, and that for that reason we ought not to insist on an educational test for immigrants, my answer is that that is all the more reason why we should insist upon it.

If there is much illiteracy in the South, why add more to it by admitting a horde of illiterate foreigners? Should it not be our duty rather to get rid of what we already have by educating our own people? If the education test had been applied to foreign immigrants years ago, no negro slaves would have been brought from Africa. There would have been no negroes in the South. We would not have had any Civil War, and there would not to-day be 30 or 40 per cent of uneducated negroes in the South, as stated upon this floor. But I am digressing. I have, just laid the foundation for a discussion of this question of immigration, and before the Dillingham and Burnett bills finally pass this House I shall ask the indulgence of the House for a more extended discussion of this question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 18 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley] is recognized for 18 minutes.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, a very pertinent question was asked the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Powers] by the gentleman from California with reference to the degree of illiteracy in the State of Kentucky, and the answer furnished by the gentleman from California was that it was more than 10 per cent.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. CURLEY. The singular part of the illiteracy project is that the figures stand out clearly and indisputably that in the so-called dumping ground for the illiterates, namely, New York, the percentage of illiteracy among children of foreign born is but 5.9 per cent, while in Louisiana, in the South, it is nearly 30 per cent.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURLEY. Surely.
Mr. DYER. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the statistics for 1910 show that in the State of Kentucky the illiterates numbered 87,516?

Mr. CURLEY. If the gentleman says that is so, I will accept his statement.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. CURLEY. I regret I can not yield. The total number of illiterate native whites of native parents was 29,188, or 9.2 per cent, in the State of New York. The total number of illiterate whites of family how payents was 18,162 in the State of the st erate whites of foreign-born parents was 18,162 in the State of New York, or only 5.7 per cent, so that the higher percentage of children of foreign-born parents who are illiterate is only a little less than one-half as great as that of the native born in New York, and that is the section of the country from which the great hue and cry arises in favor of shutting out the illiterates. Louisiana, in your southern section, has the highest percentage of illiteracy of any section in the entire Union, namely, 38.5 per cent.

I have sat here and listened to the talk about the Black Hand. Why, Mr. Chairman, I can not distinguish any differ-ence in the disregard to established law between a lynching bee in the South and the operation of the Black Hand in New York. If the Black Hand of New York is bad, its evil does not exceed the evil of the lynching bees in the South.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. CURLEY. Yes. Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman forgot to refer to an infamous lynching that occurred in Pennsylvania a short while ago. Does the gentleman forget that?

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, there are exceptions to every good rule, and apparently lynchings are a good rule in the South.

Now, I listened to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DES], who said that the immigration that is coming here is incapable of assimilation, and I want to say that I can not understand from what examination and upon what phase of that question he draws the deduction that he presents here, for after all, Mr. Chairman, the study of the Italian race is the most interesting study for persons who desire full and complete knowledge of all that is best in art, in literature, in science, and in Those whom you term the representatives of a despised race and whom you claim are unassimilable stand predominant among all the races of the entire world. Is it undesirable to perpetuate the blood, the memorials, and the traditions of the greatest Empire of antiquity, which spread the light of its civilization from the Mediterranean to the North Sea and the Baltic? Do the gentlemen who cast the stigma upon Italians recall that this stock was the fountainhead of the Renaissance that dispelled the gloom of the Middle Ages? What authority proscribes the land that gave birth to Gailleo, the most forceful demonstrator of the earth's motion and orbit, or decries the achievements of Columbus and the Cabots, who brought an unknown world to light, to redress and restore the balance of the Old World?

Strange is this flood of prejudice—because, after all, it is prejudice—and every fair-minded man will admit that this propaganda was put in operation and the support of organizations of labor was enlisted, including that of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, to make successful the move of the new proscriptive organization known as the Junior Order of American Mechanics.

Is there a man here who would like to see our Government go back to the days when, because Roger Williams was a Baptist and believed in doing kindness, he was led to the outskirts of Massachusetts Bay Colony in the dead of a New England winter and, without even food or sustenance, told to find a new abode? Is there a man here who would have this Nation return to the witchcraft days of old Salem? It is the same old cry. It was raised against the Germans when they were weak. It was raised against the Irish when they were weak. It is raised to-day against the Poles and against the Italians and against the Jews because they are weak, and those who are most desirous that a literacy test be applied display their ignorance by questioning the ability of the Italian people to conduct a govern-

How strange, Mr. Chairman, is this flaunt of prejudice in the faces of Dante and Tasso and Petrarch, of Raphael and Michael Angelo and Canova, of Verdi and Rossini, Bellini and Donizetti, of Ristori and Duse and Salvini and Rossi, of Alfieri and Gicometti, of Cavour and Mazzini. [Applause.]

I should like to ask these brilliant exemplars of literature, of science, and of art, who never heard of an Italian civilization. who never heard of Italian government, who never heard of Rome, who never heard of its arts, of its literature, of its science, what freak of conceit ignores historians like Carlo Botta and Pasquale Villari, romancists like Manzoni and D'Annunzio, masters of language like Bartelli and De Amīcis, and overlooks astronomers like Schiaparelli and electricians like Ferraris and Marconi on the loftiest ranges of applied science? In the field of railway engineering there are no more extraordinary memorials than the three grand passageways of the Mount Cenis, St. Gothard, and Simplon tunnels, the enduring monuments of "southern Latin" engineers and constructors, who are said to be unassimilable. [Applause.]

What country owes more to Italy for its impulse than the socalled boasted Anglo-Saxon England? The foremost English poets and dramatists—Chaucer, Wyatt, Surrey, Spencer, Greene, Webster, Ford, and Cyril Tourneur—show distinctively the Italian molding in poetry and drama. Even the master minds of greatest force and fertility, Bacon and Shakespeare, would frankly acknowledge their debt. "Shakespeare's most romantic heroines, Juliet and Desdemona," observes Wilfred Scawen Blunt in The Speaker, "were both borrowed, as we know, and not without the loss of dignity from Bandelle's Italian original. not without the loss of dignity, from Bandello's Italian origi-

Dante, Petrarch, Boccaccio, and Aristo became English house hold words through translations and imitations. From the dawn of early English art and literature Italy has been a mecca for her artists and scholars. The lofty imagination of Milton first expanded in Italian air. Here, too, the restless and embittered heart of Byron sought solace. All that is mortal of Shelley and Keats lies under the shadow of Rome. In Florence the genius of Browning reached its zenith, and his memorial tablet in Venice bears the lines of his poem, "Open my heart and you will see graved inside of it Italy." The influence of the leader, even in decadence, was deathless.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CURLEY. If I felt that it would add to the sum of human knowledge I would gladly do so, but I regret that I do not think it will. Therefore I refuse to yield.

And can America forget her distinctive indebtedness? New World owes to Italy the debt of the old and more. she not well remember that it was the son of a Genoese wool comber whose unflagging spirit revealed her existence to Europe; that the Florentine, Amerigo Vespucci, was her god-father, and that the voyages of the Cabots and Verrazano first traced the North American coast line and cleared the way for pioneer immigration. There must be a strange lack of memory and of recognition of service when prejudice against southern Latin origin would put up an irrational bar of entry in the face of the countrymen of Columbus. [Applause.]

The Italian by training and environment is a child of sun-shine, and is less responsible for the slum conditions obtaining in our large cities than is the owner of the property or makers of laws which allow insanitary conditions to obtain.

Wherever Italian colonies have been founded success has attended their labors, as in the case of the Asti Colony, of Sonoma, Cal., which to-day boasts the largest dry-wine vine-yard in California, where for two months each year are pressed 300 tons of grapes each day.

And this product carefully matured is now shipped to all parts of the world, even to France, where it finds a ready market in competition with the home product.

Forty-five thousand Italians are now living in the 56 counties of California, own 2,726 farms, conduct 837 business concerns, and have an invested capital of $20,000,000.

The Canadian Government in 1903 expended $642,913 to promote immigration, and their success, in this country at least, is a good cause for apprehension, as we are annually losing 100,000 of our best citizens.

In the year ended June 30, 1903, of 233,546 Italians admitted, 197,267 were between the ages of 14 and 45 years, so that it is wrong to contend that we are a dumping ground for the criminal, the aged, and the infirm.

And if the economic value of an able-bodied immigrant over 20 and under 35 years is $1,000, then Italy's contribution has been tremendous.

We expend millions in the construction of irrigation canals to provide proper distribution of water, yet we do not expend any money for proper distribution of immigration, whereas if our water supply were choked off in the same manner that we now propose choking off immigration, our country would necessarily be less productive than it is now.

The healthy, honest, willing laborer in any field of employment is an addition to the Nation's working capital.

We embellish our public buildings with names dear to lovers of all that is grand and great in art, science, and literature, and the names occupying the most prominent places are those of Italians, today termed undesirable.

When our tourists go abroad they gaze enraptured at the sculpture, art, and architecture of Rome, preserved through rapine, savagery, and fanaticism by the undesirables, so called, and I venture to say if the gentlemen so anxious to proclaim by law their physical and mental superiority ever do visit the center of art and the birthplace of those they consider as un-desirable beings, a realizing sense of their own inferiority will cause them forever to regret the step to-day contemplated.

The heavy burden of this ill-timed and ill-advised legislation will fall heaviest upon the liberty-loving Jew, who, denied the advantages of education by the tyrannical rule of monarchial government abroad with all its unspeakable rapine and savagery, is to be denied an asylum in this land of the free by reason of a force of agencies that are wholly beyond his control.

It is the glory of these United States that since the establishment of the Republic in 1776, and even before the promulgation of the Federal Constitution, freedom of religion has absolutely prevailed in this Nation, and this insidious law would prevent the entry of a splendid type of the Jewish race, for a haven of free religious worship, and carry out the same vindictive and iniquitous policy of his barbarous conqueror across the

The disappearance of persecution, the era of tolerance, the very recrudescence of liberality—this is the message of the day and hour, and this infamous bill would turn back the pages of American history to the odium attending a policy of pro-scription which thrived during the early days of the nineteenth century, and when the outcome, politically considered, was, thank God, the complete extinction of the party organization which had fostered it and the permanent, endless discredit in the eyes of the American Nation of the political leaders who had promoted it.

Why, almost a hundred years before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock the Jews, driven forth by relentless persecution, had made their homes in the Spanish Provinces, whence they came to the United States. And in the dedication of the little colonies to freedom there the Jewish pioneer shared the hardships and perils of the new land with his compatriots.

Such was the story of Dutch New Amsterdam, the wilds of Georgia, the ancient Providence plantations, and the Quaker colonies of Pennsylvania.

The duty of good citizenship has been the heritage of the Jewish race in every State within this Union since the foundation of the Republic.

The Jewish population of America to-day is a determining civic entity, a moral sinew, and a splendid material asset for all that is best in manhood, character, and the highest development of the American citizen.

Every great national movement that has marked the history of this Republic and which has moved forward and upward for the strengthening and the maintenance of the Government of our land has found the Jew in the forefront as an active participant.

They fought in the War of the Revolution and sacrificed their lives and gave freely of their means that there should be established a true liberty and the greatest free government that has ever marked the children of destiny.

Whenever affliction has beset the American Nation, the Jew has ever been in the forefront, giving generously of wealth for the succor of the unfortunate.

As a distinguished American economist has both well and truly said-

The Jews have not only found liberty in America in the fullest sense, but a brotherhood among the composite population of the United States. And in return for this liberty and brotherly treatment the Jew has given this great Republic one of its highest types of citizenship. The American Hebrew statistically is proven to be the most valuable kind of a citizen. He is among our largest property holders and taxpayers; he is in the vanguard of all progressive moral and material movements; he is a large contributor to philanthropy, education, and charity. The Jew is everywhere acknowledged to be a first-class American citizen, and since the foundation of our American national life his exemplary conduct as citizen and man has earned for him the respect and fellowship of all self-respecting Americans.

And this bill would deny to hundreds of liberty-loving Jews an asylum in America, driven hence by a passion-blinded populace, and compelled-as 5,000,000 of them are abroad-to live in a district embracing but one-twenty-third of the ruling Empire. With starvation and discontent ever rife through this ill-judged crowding of the Jewish race abroad, this bill will deny a haven for the oppressed, who are driven to either starvation or emigration by the despotic Government of the Czar.

What a shameless contrast this proscriptive bill presents when compared with the writings of George Washington, the father of our liberties. In a letter written to the Hebrew congregations of the city of Savannah, Ga., in 1790, Washington said:

I rejoice that a spirit of liberality and philanthropy is much more prevalent than it formerly was among the enlightened nations of the earth, and that your brethren will benefit thereby in proportion as it shall become still more extensive; happily the people of the United States have in many instances exhibited examples worthy of imitation, the salutary influence of which will doubtless extend much farther if gratefully enjoying those blessings of peace which under the favor of heaven have been attained by fortitude in war, they shall conduct themselves with reverence to the Delty and charity toward their fellow creatures creatures

May the same wonder-working Deity, who long since delivered the Hebrews from their Egyptian oppressors, planted them in a promised land, whose providential agency has lately been conspicuous in establishing these United States as an independent Nation, still continue to water them with the dews of heaven, and make the inhabitants of every denomination participate in the temporal and spiritual blessings of that people whose God is Jehovah.

A little more of the magnanimity of Washington would not be out of place in this day and generation of ours

Washington later in August, 1790, writing the Hebrew congregation of Newport, R. I., said:

It is now no more that toleration is spoken of as if it were by the indulgence of one class of people that another enjoyed the exercise of their inherent natural rights, for, happily, the Government of the United States, which gives to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance, requires only that they who live under its protection should demean themselves as good citizens in giving it on all occasions their effectual support.

May the children of the stock of Abraham who dwell in this land continue to merit and enjoy the good will of the other inhabitants, while everyone shall sit in safety under his own vine and fig tree, and there shall be none to make him afraid.

Why, my friends, the towering shaft that commemorates the first battle of the Revolution at Bunker Hill in my own city was made possible by the liberal contribution of a Jew, Judah Touro, who was seriously wounded at New Orleans in the War of 1812, and of the gross sum of $55,000 donated for the monument, he himself contributed $10,000.

And a body of no less distinguished Americans than John Quincy Adams, Daniel Webster, Joseph Story, Edward Everett, and Franklin Dexter were appointed a committee to prepare an inscription for a tablet to be placed within the monument in behalf of the liberality of this benevolent Jew.

To the economic side of this question a word is also certainly due. It stands to reason that every immigrant becomes a customer of those already occupying the same vantage ground. And further, that as each must produce as much as he consumes, the community is in the end an inevitable gainer by his presence. And as a very large majority produce more than they consume, it is manifest that in their earnings the community gains doubly by their presence.

American history emblazons no more heroic figures than Pulaski, who, after vainly striving to lead his own countrymen against the Russian tyrant in 1768, came to America to give up his life in our great contest for liberty, and of Kosciusko, who came here to fight for the independence of our country and then returned to fight vainly for the freedom of his own land.

While the financial contribution of Haym Salomon to the Treasury of the country during the War of the Revolution was the largest individual aid extended Washington by any resident of the thirteen States, and came at a crucial time, when the Colonial Army was disintegrating from sheer force of poverty, and history records no finer example than that of Manuel Mordecai Noah, of South Carolina, who, unsheathing his sword as a member of Gen. Washington's staff, gave his fortune of approximately $100,000 to advance the cause of the colonists.

While there were but 3,000 Jews in the Colonies at the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, we find that no less than nine Jews were enrolled when the first nonimportation resolutions were signed as a material protest to the exactions of Great Britain—Benjamin Levy, Samson Levy, Joseph Jacobs, Hyman Levy, jr., David Franks, Mathias Bush, Michael Gratz, Barnard Gratz, and Moses Mordecai.

In the War of the Revolution we find Joseph De Leon, of South Carolina, a most distinguished officer; and when Gen. De Kalb fell mortally wounded at Camden he, with Maj. Nones and Capt. de la Motta, all Jews, carried the wounded De Kalb from the field under fire. Samuel Benjamin was an ensign of the Eighth Massachusetts, and Benjamin Aaron served in a like capacity with the Eighth Connecticut. Maj. Benjamin Nones served with marked gallantry upon both the staffs of Gens. Washington and La Fayette. Col. Solomon Bush served with great bravery in the Pennsylvania Militia.

Maj. Lewis Bush was a first lieutenant of the Sixth Pennsylvania, and, after establishing a wonderful record in the field, fell mortally wounded at Brandywine.

Jacob Cohen served gallantly with Gens. Moultrie and Lin-coln; Philip Jacob Cohen was a distinguished Georgia colonist, and Mordecai Davis an ensign of the Second Pennsylvania Battery.

Reuben Etting enlisted at Baltimore when 19 years of age, served in the North with gallantry, was made prisoner at Charleston, was captain of the Independent Blues of Maryland, and later served as marshal of his State under appointment by President Jefferson.

Col. Isaac Franks, of Philadelphia, served as aid-de-camp to Gen. Washington, and with the title of colonel served throughout the war. His residence at Germantown was for some time occupied by President Washington as his home.

Col. David Franks was also an aid-de-camp upon Gen. Washington's staff, and served with conspicuous gallantry.

David Hays, jr., served with great ability upon Long Island with the Colonial Army, and his house and store were both burned by the British.

Moses Isaacks, of Newport, R. I., was a very active supporter of the Colonial Army and entertained Gen. Washington at his home.

Isaac Israel was first lieutenant of the Eighth Virginia and served also in the Fourth Virginia in the same capacity, while Jacob Leon was a staff officer serving with Gen. Lasky. Levy was ensign of the First New Jersey Regiment and Nathaniel Levy a member of Lafayette's command.

Israel de Lieber rose from the ranks to a position of honor and trust under Washington, Benjamin Moses served on the staff of Gen. Pulaski, while Isaac Moses gave almost his entire property of $15,000 to the Army.

Emanuel de la Motta served both in the War of the Revolution and the War of 1812 and was promoted from the ranks for marked bravery to positions of great trust and honor, while Jacob de la Motta was a captain upon the staff of Gen. Pulaski, Philip Moses Russell was a distinguished surgeon, and cared for the Continental Army during the terrible winter at Valley Forge-1777 and 1778.

Joseph Sampson was a lieutenant of Cotton's Massachusetts Regiment and Ezekiel Sampson a lieutenant of Baldwin's Artillery, and many other Jews served their adopted country with marked valor upon every field of battle.

It is well to bear in mind among the last words of the late ex-President Cleveland, his expression upon the position of the Jew in American life. He said:

I know that human prejudice, especially that growing out of race or religion, is cruelly inveterate and lasting. But wherever in the world prejudice against the Jews still exists, there can be no place for it among the people of the United States, unless they are heedless of good faith, recreant to the underlying principles of their free Government, and insensible to every pledge involved in our boasted equality of citizenship.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CURLEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. SHARP. If the immigrants who are now coming from Italy to our shores are the worthy successors of the distinguished men whom the gentleman from Massachusetts has named, is there any particular hardship imposed by this bill in requiring them to read and write? [Applause.]

Mr. CURLEY. I will answer by saying that if the restriction that is proposed in this bill had been in operation a hundred years ago undoubtedly the gentleman from Ohio would not be here now, and certainly I would not, [Applause.] I believe that applies with equal force to 90 per cent of the men in this House. Yet the cry which goes up from one end of the country to the other is the cry for labor. The chairman of the committee says we are not getting desirable immigrants from northern Europe. It is more profitable for the immigrant to remain where he is in his own country. Denmark, Norway, Sweden, the countries that the gentleman cites as furnishing the higher type of immigration, are to-day countries of immigration and not emigration, and what is true of those countries is true of England, Scotland, Germany, France, and Ireland, and every one of the countries that possess what are termed desirable immigrants were as undesirable 50 years ago as the Italian and the Jew are to-day.

The German is not coming here, because they have harnessed the streams and Germany has developed manufactures, and it is more profitable for the German to remain at home. The Irish are not coming here because I guess nearly all of them are here at the present time. [Laughter.]

By the way, it is a funny thing, but my friend's question recalls a peculiar thing. We talk about immigration. I find here a book on Rochambeau that was published by order of the I was amused in looking over the book to find the names of the Frenchmen who accompanied Rochambeau to this There was the regiment De Dillon.

country. The colonel was Le Comte Dillon; the second was Théobald Chevalier Dillon; the lieutenant colonel was Barthelemy Dillon; the major was Jacques O'Moran; the paymaster was Barthelemy Monearelly; and the captains were Moore, Purdon, Bancks, Nugent, Swigny, Shee, Moore, O'Neill, O'Brien, and Taaffe—all Frenchmen. [Laughter.]

Of the second captains there were Mandeville, MacGuire, O'Reilly, Kelly, MacDermot, Noolan, O'Doyer, Lynck, and Coghlan.

Then there was another regiment—the regiment De Walsh.

Then there was another regiment—the regiment De Walsh. The colonel was Thaddeous O'Brien, the captains De Fitzmauric, De Walsh, O'Neil, De Nagle, O'Brien, and D'Orcy.

The second captains were O'Croly, O'Connor, and the lieutenants Plunkett and O'Riordan, and second lieutenants O'Gorman and MacCarthy—all patriotic Frenchmen. [Laughter.]

When these men offered their services for the cause of human liberty, was there anybody to rise up and say, "You can not live here; you can not come here because you can not read and write"? [Applause.]

I hate to destroy all illusions, Mr. Chairman. I have no respect for the man who dispels the old story of Santa Claus or St. Nicholas. But I was amused the other day to find that the shot that was fired at Lexington that was heard around the world was fired at Fort William and Mary in 1774, under the command of a man by the name of Sullivan, and 80 Irishmen, and no man asked if they could read or write. Instead of the shot being fired at Lexington that could be heard around the world, it was fired at Portsmouth, N. H., December 13, 1774.

I have read of the Boston tea party and always supposed it emanated from an indignation meeting at the old South Church, but I have discovered that it was concocted in John Duggan's Tavern in Corn Court, Boston, afterwards known as the Han-cock Tavern; and if the men disguised as Indians who threw the tea overboard were properly characterized, it would be

"John Duggan's tea party" instead of "the Boston tea party." [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the rehearsal by the gentleman from Massachusetts of the great names and great deeds of some Italians, and I beg mildly to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts and to the committee, that no one of those great Italians would have been excluded from the United States under the present bill. They would all be admissible if this bill were a law.

I intend to vote for this bill, not because I am wholly satisfied with it, for I am not. I am not fully satisfied with the methods proposed for weeding out undesirable immigrants as the best that could be devised. I am not satisfied with it, further, because I should be glad to see other provisions in this bill than are found in it, but I believe it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman, 30 years ago the immigration to this country was made up largely, if not entirely, of young men in whose breasts the spirit of liberty was stirring, and who looked to this land of the free as a place for larger opportunity and for the better facilities it offered of acquiring a competency and the pursuit and enjoyment of happiness. While this condition existed it constituted a method of natural selection that secured for this country the very best elements of the populations of the countries from which they came; and if that condition still existed I should be opposed to this legislation or any other legislation that would prevent the coming to this country of immigrants of the character of those of that time, but that condition is entirely changed. Mr. Chairman, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read in my time a paragraph from the report of the Commissioner General of Immigration of the United States for 1911, which expresses the present situation in this regard.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, is that Mr. Keefe's report? Mr. HAYES. It is.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOURCES OF AND INDUCEMENTS TO IMMIGRATION.

Considerable space has been devoted in previous reports to this important and interesting subject. It has been shown that (1) the sources of our immigration have undergone a decided change in recent years, one which is of great significance to the country and its people, and (2) much of the immigration which we now receive is artificial, in that it is induced or stimulated and encouraged by persons and corporations whose principal interest is to increase the steerage-passenger business of their lines, to introduce into the United States an overabundant and therefore cheap supply of common labor, or to exploit the poor, ignorant immigrant to their own advantage by loaning him money at usurious rates; or, as now so frequently happens, in the organized and systematized state of the business, a combination of the three elements, so that money lenders and ticket agents abroad, the transportation companies, and the labor brokers and large employers of common labor here each receive their portion of the benefits and proceeds. Meanwhile the alien and the country suffer—the alien by being thrown into new and untried conditions, not conducive to his health or happiness, under circumstances which place him at a serious disadvantage by reason of being loaded with debt, which, unless promptly settled, multiplies with interest, and which he knows must soon destroy his own or his family's property mortgaged in security, and the country by having its standards of labor wages, and living not only temporarily lowered but permanently injured—and who can question the economic axiom that injury to its wage earners is a direct injury to a country?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, it has been demonstrated by the hearings before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of this House that the statement just read is absolutely We have had evidence tending to show not only great misrepresentation on the part of the steamship companies and their agents in nearly all the countries of Europe in order to stimulate immigration, but evidence has been produced to show that in this country men having confederates on the other side do a large business in inducing immigration in order that the ignorant immigrant, when he comes here, may be subject to the exploitation of those who are in this conspiracy.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAYES. I yield. Mr. SABATH. The gentleman has stated that it has been demonstrated before the Immigration Committee that the report of the Immigration Commission is true. Will the gentleman kindly state by whom it has been demonstrated?

Mr. HAYES. Oh, I have no time, Mr. Chairman, to go into We have had large numbers of people before us. those details.

Mr. SABATH. Mention two or three.
Mr. HAYES. I do not care to stop to mention anybody.

Mr. SABATH. Mention only one; that will not take much time.

Mr. HAYES. I can not stop for such interrogatories.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HAYES. As I say, it has been demonstrated, to a larger extent than my colleague from Illinois will admit and to a much larger extent I have no doubt than is known to most Members on the floor of this House, that this sort of work is going on in this country, and the immigrant is brought in not for his good, not for the good of this country, but in order that he may add to the income of the steamship companies and be exploited generally by his own countrymen in this country, who make it a business to prey upon the ignorant and unprotected immigrant who comes here. I think there is no question about I am surprised that my colleague would deny that this is the fact.

Mr. SABATH. I say this, that the commission that has investigated the conditions does not say so.

Mr. HAYES. I beg the gentleman's pardon. If I can read the English language, it says so; but I can not yield further. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HAYES, Mr. Chairman, it must be patent to everybody that it is the ignorant, those who can not read and write, and. therefore, who know nothing about the ways of the world and the wiles of the dishonest people who would make use of them for profit, who become the victims of these conspiracies and these frauds, and so, I say, this legislation will not only be beneficial to the country in weeding out at least some of those who will become undesirable citizens, but it will be a great benefit to, by preventing the coming here of, the ignorant immigrant, when by reason of his ignorance he is unable to protect himself from the dishonesty and chicanery that he finds here among his own countrymen who are engaged in the business of boatage or peonage, a thing which the immigration authorities have found it hard to prove even when they know it exists.

It has been sought to show on this floor that this legislation is championed by only one side of this House. I believe this question is too big to be a partisan question, and I beg to state that the Republican Party has gone on record for years in favor of this legislation. I read from the platform of the Republican Party for the year 1900:

For the protection of the equality of our American citizenship and of the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly en-forced and so extended as to exclude from entrance into the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Mr. SABATH. That is also true of the platform of the Republican Party of 1912, is it not?

Mr. HAYES. It is not; but I wish it were.

Mr. SABATH. It has been in there.

Mr. HAYES. It has been repeatedly incorporated in substance in the Republican platforms in this country. That is the Republican doctrine, as I understand it. Following that I call attention to the first annual message of President McKinley in the year 1897, in which he states:

Our naturalization and immigration laws should be further improved to the constant promotion of a safe, a better, and a higher citizenship. A grave peril to the Republic would be a citizenship too ignorant to understand or too vicious to appreciate the great value and beneficence of our institutions and laws, and against all who come here to war upon them our gates must be promptly and tightly closed. Illiteracy must be banished from the land if we shall attain that high destiny as the foremost of the enlightened nations of the world under Providence we cought to achieve. ought to achieve

I also call attention to the message of President Roosevelt in 1901, where he states in his annual message addressed to the Congress of the United States:

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure by a careful, and not merely perfunctory, educational test some intel-ligent capacity to appreciate the American institutions and act sanely as American citizens.

So, Mr. Chairman, I might continue with quotations from the leaders of the Republican Party and from its platform to demonstrate that the Republican Party stands for this kind of legislation as well as the party on the other side of the aisle. have received thousands of communications from not only my own district and State, but from all over the land asking my support of the provisions of this bill. I know that this legislation is demanded by all patriotic societies, without a single exception; also by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, by the Grange, by the American Federation of Labor, and, as I believe, by a very large majority of the population of the United States without regard to party; this legislation is being now considered here in obedience to an overwhelming popular demand.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. HAYES. I will.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Has the gentleman from California ever studied the statistics on births in this country? If the Chinese are excluded on the western coast and Europeans are excluded on the eastern coast of this country what would be the annual increase of population in this country without immigration?

Mr. HAYES. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I will tell you what it would be.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman is not a prophet; he can not tell, and neither can any man.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can say this, that according to scientists the increase should be 11 per cent; that the surplus of births over deaths should be 13 per cent where social conditions in the country are right; but in the United States but for immigration the increase would be only one-half of 1 per cent.

Mr. HAYES. I think the gentleman is stating it much too I have not the figures at hand, so I can not controvert the statement he has made.

And that one-half of 1 per cent is mostly Mr. BARTHOLDT.

found among the immigrants.

Mr. HAYES. All that has nothing to do with the subject. disclaim any prejudice against any nation or against foreigners in general, but I am jealous of the interests of my country; I am anxious that the highest possible citizenship should find residence within its borders, and therefore I am anxious that those only who are capable of becoming selfrespecting, self-governing American citizens should be allowed to come here, and those who have not the intelligence or the capacity to become such should be excluded. I am glad to support this bill and any other proper measure looking in the same

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I come from a city which is peopled by men and women from every nation in the world. I have lived in that city long enough to see its population grow from 100,000 to 2,500,000—the second city in the Union—and its people are as law-abiding as any people throughout the world. I have seen immigrants come who were unable to read and write. I have watched their children through their childhood and into manhood and womanhood. After having been educated in the public schools of our great city, we find that no better citizens live anywhere, and that is true as to every nationality. strict the opportunity of men and women to live under the freedom enjoyed by American citizens is unjust. Many of us would not be here if our people had been required to read and write when they were admitted to this country. We boast that this is the land of opportunity. A man's moral worth is not gauged by the amount of education he has. A man who can neither read nor write may be an infinitely better citizen than the man who can read and write in every language. Let those who live where no opportunity is given them to secure an education come to our shores where they can have the benefit of our public institutions of learning, where they can learn the grandeur of American institutions. We have in the city of Chicago 200,000 children of foreign-born parents attending our public schools. They are quick to learn; they soon become filled with love for the adopted land of their parents; they grow up to be our best citizens; we are proud of them. I say, let their parents come; there is no danger in admitting them to our shores.

It has been said by the gentleman in charge of this bill that the men who are allowed to come to the United States under the present immigration laws cheapen labor. No such thing. He says they glut the labor market. Not at all. He would make no such statement if he understood the situation. wishing to employ labor everywhere throughout the United States to-day are unable to find it. The price of labor was never so high in America as it is to-day. Opportunities for employment never were so great. The standard of living never so high. We boast that this is the land of opportunity; then give those of the Caucasian race who want to come the opportunity. Let their children mingle with ours in the public schools. Give them the opportunity for the enjoyment of the liberty of which we are so proud. Teach them to proclaim this liberty to their less fortunate fellows in other lands. Make them missionaries to carry the light of liberty to every quarter of the globe. Let them become the instrumentalities through whom we may show the world that here in free America we make men as well as merchandise. We need have no fear of our inability to assimilate all who come. The industrial development of the Nation goes on apace. We need the men if we are to keep step with the onward march of progress. There is room and to spare for all who come. The price of labor is not lowered by their coming. Immigration is greatest in the years of our greatest prosperity. When labor is not in demand they do not come.

The percentage of immigration is no greater now than at any other period of the Nation's history, population considered. It is complained that immigrants congregate in the great centers of population and thereby reduce the chances of employment for those already there. It is the demand for labor which attracts them to the centers. If that demand was in the rural districts, there they would go. The man who comes here to work becomes an asset, not a liability; he helps to create the wealth of the Nation. The question of whether the immigrant can read is not of as much importance as is the question of whether his heart is right. It is through the hearts of men that our citizenship is made great. To the hearts of those who come, then, we must appeal. We must teach them love of liberty, love of our institutions; show them that here all men are to be encouraged in the race for success; that all are to be measured at their true worth. No; immigration is not a menace. It is but one more evidence that the liberty we proclaim has reached the peoples of less favored lands and that they come here to take advantage of its privileges. Let them come. I have not the time nor the knowledge to make the careful analysis of the immigration question which its importance justifies, but I thoroughly agree with the able analysis made by Isaac A. Hourwich, Ph. D., in his work on Immigration and Labor, and I print his Summary Review, found on pages 1 to 39 of his book, as a part of my remarks. I am sure it will prove interesting and instructive and convincing.

Summary Review, found on pages 1 to 30 of his book, as a part of my remarks. I am sure it will prove interesting and instructive and convincing.

It is the purpose of this review to state briefly for the benefit of the busy reader the results of our inquiry into the various phases of the immigration question. Such a summary must necessarily be dogmatic in form. Every proposition is advanced here, however, merely as a theorem, whose demonstration is presented in its proper place in another part of the book.

It is recognized on all sides that the present movement for restriction of immigration has a purely economic object; the restriction of competition in the labor market. Organized labor demands the extension of the protectionist policy to the home market in which 'hands'—the laborer's only commodity—are offered for sale. The advocates of restriction believe that every immigrant admitted to this country takes the place of some American workingman. At the inception of the restrictionist movement, in the eighties and the carly inletties, they were avowedly opposed to immigration in general. The subsequent decline of immigration from the British Isles, Germany, and the Scandinavian countries and the increase of immigration from southern and eastern Europe lance diverted the attack from immigration in general to "the new immigration" from southern and eastern Europe and the Asiatle Provinces of Turkey. Yet while the root of all evil is now sought in the racial make-up of the new immigration, as contrasted with the old, every objection to the immigrants from southern and eastern Europe is but an echo of the complaints which were made at an earlier day against the then new immigration from Ireland, Germany, and even from England. Three-quarters of a century ago, as to-day, the only good, immigrants were the dead immigrants.

There is no real ground for the popular opinion that the immigrants of the present generation are drawn from a poorer class than their predecessors. It is a historical fact that prior to 1820 th as the Germans who have lived in the United States the same length of time.

The only real difference between the old immigration and the new is that of numbers. To the workman who complains that he has been crowded out of his job by another it would afford little comfort to feel that the man who had taken his place was of Teuton or Celtic rather than of Latin or Slav stock. The true reason why the "old immigration" is preferred is that there is very much less of it.

As stated, the demand for restriction proceeds from the assumption that the American labor market is overstocked by immigration. Comparative statistics of industry and population in the United States show, however, that immigration merely follows opportunities for employment. In times of business expansion immigrants enter in increasing numbers; in times of business depression their numbers decline. The immigration movement is further balanced by emigration from the United States. As a rule, the causes which retard immigration also accelerate the return movement from this country. It is customary to condemn the "bird of passage," but so long as there are variations in business activity from season to season and from year to year, the American wage earner has no cause to complain of the immigration who choose to leave this country temporarily while there is no demand for their services, thereby reducing unemployment in its acutest stage.

It is broadly asserted by restriction advocates that the hundreds of thousands of Slav, Italian, Greek, Syrian, and other immigrant mine and mill workers have been "Imported" by capitalists—in other words, that they are all contract laborers. This belief offers to the student of folklore a typical example of twentieth century myth building. None of the official investigations of immigration has disclosed any evidence of importation of laborers under contract on a large scale, aithough prior to the enactment of the law of 1885, excluding contract laborers, there was no reason to conceal the fact. It is quite conceivable that in the case of a strike a great corporation might have resorted to the importation of a large force of strike breakers regardless of cost. As a general rule, however, with hundreds of thousands of immigrants coming to this country annually, it would be a waste of money to "induce" immigration. The few actual violations of the contract labor law that clude the vigilance of the immigration authorities can not affect the labor market.

importation of a large force of strike breakers regardless of cost. As a general rule, however, with hundreds of thousands of immigrants coming to this country annually, it would be a waste of money to "induce," immigration. The few actual violations of the contract labor law that clude the vigilance of the immigration authorities can not affect the labor market.

The real agent immigrants already in the United States. It is they that advance the cost of passage of a large proportion of the new immigrants. When the outlook for employment is good, they send for their relatives or encourage their friends to come. When the demand for labor is slack, the foreign-born workman must hold his savings in reserve, to provide for possible loss of employment. At such times no wage earner will assume the burden of providing for a relative or the interest of the provide for possible loss of employment. At such times no wage earner will assume the burden of providing for a relative or the interest of the provide for possible loss of the provide for a relative or the interest of the provide for a relative or the interest of the provide for a relative or the provide for a provide for a relative or the provide for a provide for a relative or the provide for a relative or the provide for a relative or the provide for the provide for a relative or the provide for the relative provides and the provides and the relative provides Still, an oversupply of labor may produce a latent form of unemployment which could be described as underemployment; all employees may be kept on the rolls, and yet be idle a part of every week. Again, however, we find that the average number of days of employment per wage earner increases as immigration increases and declines as immigration described acclines as immigration.

wage earner increases as immigration increases and declines as immigration declines.

The relation between immigration and unemployment may thus be summed up in the following propositions: Unemployment and immigration are the effects of economic forces working in opposite directions; those which produce business expansion reduce unemployment and attract immigration; those which produce business depression increase unemployment, restriction of immigration is not a contributory cause of unemployment. This supposition is negatived by the experience of Australia, where emigration exceeds immigration Australia is a new country with an area as great as that of the United States, while its population at the census of 1906 was half a million short of the population of New York City at the census of 1910. Yet Australia has as much unemployment as the State of New York, which is teeming with immigrants. It is evident that unemployment is produced by the modern organization of industry even in the absence of immigration. There is a widespread belief that, although on the whole the United States is in need of immigrant labor, "the new immigration" has a tendency to stagnate in the overpopulated cities, while there is a keen demand for hands in agricultural sections. A retrospective view of the history of immigration shows that this tendency is not peculiar to "the new immigration." For the past 90 years public men and social theorists have sought to relieve unemployment in the cities by directing the current of immigration to the farm, but the immigrants have always preferred to seek employment in the cities. The popular mind which accounts for individual conduct by the "free will" of the individual applies the same criterion to social phenomena; the Italians and the Slavs concentrate in the cities because they have a "racial tendency" to concentrate in the cities. That most of the immigrants of those nationalities have grown up in agricultural communities and that many of them after working a few years in a great American city return home and go back to the soil argues against the assumption of a "racial" dislike for agriculture. The real cause of the concentration of immigrants in the cities is economic. Even the "desirable" immigrant from northern and western Europe who lands with a capital of fifty and odd dollars lacks the funds to rent a farm. At best he can obtain employment only as a farm hand. Since the early days of Irish and German immigration, however, the growing industries of the cities have offered a better market for labor than agriculture.

The industrial development of the United States has manifested itself in a relative, and in some sections an absolute, depopulation of rural territory. There is a large migration of native Americans of native stock from country to city. This movement is the result of the revolution in American farming conditions and methods, which has tended to reduce the demand for labor on the farm. The American farm of the first half of the nineteenth century was the seat of a highly diversified industry. The members of a farm household made their own tools and part of the furniture; they were spinners and weavers; they made their own clothes, and soap, and candles for their own use. With such a variety of occupations there was work for a hired man at all seasons of the year. But industrial differentiation has removed from the farm one industry after another. The time during which a hired man can be kept employed on the farm has been reduced in consequence to a fe earn a full year's wages in a rural community was gone.

While in manufacturing the invention of labor-saving machinery has resulted in the gradual displacement of the small proprietor by the wage earner. In American agriculture, on the contrary, the machine has tended to eliminate the wage earner. As late as the middle of the nineteenth century the agricultural methods of the American farmer differed little from those of his ancestors. Grass was moved with a scythe. Grain was cut with a sickle and thrashed with a flail. Flailing and winnowing grain was the chief farm work of the winter. Corn was planted by hand, cultivated with the hoe, and shelled by scraping the ears against the handle of a frying pan. The cultivation of a farm in this primitive way sustained a demand for steady farm help in all seasons. To-day there is some implement or machine for every kind of farm work. It is estimated that the quantity of labor saved by machinery represents the services of 1,500,000 men working every week day in the year.

In consequence of limited demand, agricultural labor is the least machinery represents the services of 1,500,000 men working every week day in the year.

In consequence of limited demand, agricultural labor is the least remunerative of all occupations. The hours of labor on the fagm are longer than even in the steel mills of Pennsylvania. Small pay, long hours, and irregular employment is what the immigrant can expect on a farm. His preference for city work which pays better can be easily explained without delving into the mysteries of race psychology. It merely confirms the rule that immigration follows the demand for labor. The effect of immigration upon labor in the United States has been a readjustment of the population on the scale of occupations. The majority of Americans of native parentage are engaged in farming, in business, in the professions, and in clerical pursuits. The majority of the immigrants, on the other hand, are industrial wage earner. Only in exceptional cases has this readjustment been attended by actual displacement of the native or Americanized wage earner. In the course of industrial evolution some trades have declined owing to the introduction of new methods of production. In such cases there was naturally a decrease of the number of native as well as of foreign born workers. As a rule, however, the supply of immigrant labor has been absorbed by the increasing demand for labor in all industries without leaving a surplus sufficient to displace the native or older immigrant passe earner. There were but few occupations which showed an actual—not a relative—decrease of native Americans of native stock. This decrease was due to the disinclination of the young generation to follow the pursuits of their fathers; the new accessions from native stock were insufficient to replace the older men as they were dying off, and the vacancies were gradually filled up by immigrants. But for every position given up by a native American there were many new openings filled by native American there were many new openings filled by native American wage earners.

The westward movement of American and Americanized wage earners and the concentration of immigrants in a few Eastern and Central States have been interpreted as the "displacement" of the English-speaking workmen from the mills and mines of the East by the new immigration. An examination of the figures shows, however, that during the past 30 years mining and manufacturing grew much faster in the West and South than in the East and drew some of the native workers and earlier immigrants from the older manufacturing States. But the demand for labor grew in the old States as well. The places left vacant by the old employees who had gone westward had to be filled by new immigrants.

The description of mills and factories by native American girls has also vacant by the old employees who had gone westward had to be filled by new immigrants.

The desertion of mils and factories by native American girls has also been explained as their "displacement" by immigrants. The motive assigned is not economic, but racial; it is the social prejudice against the immigrant that has forced the American girl to quit. It seems, however, that this explanation misisakes cause for effect; the social stigma attaching to working association with immigrants is not the cause but the effect of the desertion of the mills and factories by native American women. The psychological interpretation overlooks one of the greatest economic changes that has taken place in the United States since the Civil War—the admission of women to most of the pursuits which were formerly regarded as peculiarly masculine. For every native woman of American parentage who left the mill or clothing factory there were 40 women of the same nativity who found new openings. The increase of the number of native American professional women was nearly five times as great as the decrease of the number of native American factory girls. The marvelous progress of the American educational system has fitted the native American woman for other work than manual labor and has at the same time opened to her a new field in which she does not meet the competition of the immigrant.

There is absolutely no statistical proof of an oversupply of unskilled labor resulting in the displacement of native by immigrant laborers.

No decrease of the number of common laborers among the native with of native or foreign purentage appears in any of the great States which of native or foreign purentage appears in any of the great States which one of the States affected by the new immigration has there been a decrease in the number of native miners. Such States as Pennsylvania one of the States affected by the new immigration has there been a decrease in the number of native miners. Such States as Pennsylvania to the foreign and native purentage. The iron and steel milts are another industry from which the recent immigrants are popularly believed immigrants. The fact is, that in the earlier period of the industry, when immigration from southern and eastern Europe was negligible, the minigration from southern and eastern Europe was negligible, the meridod, of account of the industry, when immigration from southern and eastern Europe was negligible, the production of the industrial was coming in large numbers, the number of American Europe have been coming in large numbers, the number of a dealing place in the iron and steel industry.

Industrial wage carners has been the elevation of the English-speaking workmen to the status of an aristocracy of labor, while the immigrants workmen to the status of an aristocracy of labor, while the immigrants workmen to the status of an aristocracy of labor, while the immigrants workmen to the status of an aristocracy of labor, while the immigrants have been raised to the plane of an aristocracy of reduction of the company o These gains are in no small way due to the progress of organization among German wage earners, which was practically prohibited prior to 1891. Since that time the membership of labor organizations has advanced by leaps and bounds, leaving behind the older British and American trade-unions. The growth of the labor movement in Germany has directly and indirectly stimulated labor legislation, which has conferred material benefits upon the German wage earner. Whereas industrial progress in modern times has generally led to the elimination of the independent artisan who has been pushed lint the ranks of wage earners, in Germany this process has been checked by the development of cooperation. The general improvement of the economic conditions of all classes of the working people necessarily affected the rate of emigration for the past 20 years.

Yet it is worthy of note that while immigration from Germany to the United States has in recent years been much below the level of the early elightles, the average annual immigration from Germany was much higher during the past decade of the nine teenth century. In other words, German immigration increased with the increase of Italian and Slav immigration we find that the number of breadwinners coming to compete in the American labor market virtually reached its maximum during the past decade. The only change is that, whereas the earlier Scandinavian immigration was mostly of a family type, among the recent Scandinavian immigration was mostly of a family type, among the recent Scandinavian immigration was mostly was a help, while the new Scandinavian immigration to the United States was in no way affected by immigration from southern and eastern Europe, come chiefly to seek industrial employment. That Scandinavian immigrants, like the new Immigration from southern and eastern Europe is evidenced by the change in the direction of the United States was in no way affected by immigration from southern and eastern Europe is evidenced by the change in the direction of the United States was in no way affected by immigration from southern and ea rise of the peasant farmer, due chiefly to the rapid spread of cooperation in all branches of farming. The progress of agriculture has attracted immigration to Denmark.

While the wave of emigration from Great Britain and Ireland to the United States has receded from the high-water mark reached in 1880-1889, yet, eliminating that exceptional decade, we find that during the 20-year period 1890-1909, marked by the influx of immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, the United States received more immigrants from Great Britain and Ireland than during the 20-year period 1800-1879. Another fact that must not be lost sight of is the recent development of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, which has naturally drawn a part of the emigration from Great Britain and Ireland. The policy of restriction adopted in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa has conferred a special privileze upon limnigrants of British nationality. On the other hand, the Governments of Canada and Australia are making systematic efforts to induce and assist immigration from the mother country. That the financial assistance offered to immigrantis from the United Kingdom has diverted a part of them from the United States is but natural.

The decline of Irish immigration began as far back as 1861. It rose again in the eighties, in the turbulent years of the Irish Land League agitation, and once more during the past decade. That the "new immigration" to the United States was not the cause of the decline of Irish immigration is clear from the fact that the emigration movement from Ireland to other countries has also declined, while, on the other hand, of those Irish who did emigrate the proportion destined to the United States was higher during the period of the great influx of minigrants from southern and eastern Europe was negligible. There have been forces at work to reduce the number of Irish univest of the eighties forced the British Parliament to enact remedial legislation, which gave to the tenant-at-will a legal title to his salarled man with a fixed income tends to lower the family's standard of living. It is significant that the decline of the birth rate is unfigerant competition. Their standard of living is higher than that of the wage carner. Yet it is precisely the desire to preserve this higher than that of the wage carner. Yet it is precisely the desire to preserve this higher than that the absence of immigration in the past would have talsed the native wage carner's standard of living to that the sake of argument, that the absence of immigration in the past would have talsed the native wage carner's standard of living to that the sake of argument, that the absence of immigration in the past would have talsed the native wage carner's standard of living to that the sake of a standard of living to the native of the sake of the

that he will accept a wage just sufficient to provide for his own subsistence. The Italian section hand who lives on vegetables does not save money for the railroad company. The economic interests of the American wage carner are therefore not affected by the tendency of the recent immigrant to live as cheaply as possible and to save as much as possible. Whether he spends his wages for rent and dress, or saves his money to buy steamship tickets for his family; whether he invests his savings in a home in the United States or sends them to his parents for improving the home farm, his wants in one case are as urgent as in the other, and he must demand a wage which will enable him to satisfy them.

in the other, and he must demand a wage which will enable him to satisfy them.

On the other hand, though the standard of living of the native or Americanized wage earners be higher than that of the new immigrants, this difference is not necessarily indicative of a higher cate of wages; the higher standard is very often maintained with the earnings of the children, whereas the southern and eastern European immigrants are mostly young people whose children have not reached working age. The supposed difference in the standard of living can therefore have no effect upon the comparative rates of wages of English-speaking workmen and of recent immigrants.

But it is argued that the newly arrived immigrant must have work at once, and is therefore glad to accept any terms. The immigration commission, after a study of the earnings of more than half a million employees in mines and manufactures, has discovered no evidence that immigrants have been hired for less than the prevailing rates of wages.

The primary cause which has determined the movement of wages in the United States during the past 30 years has been the introduction of labor-saving machinery. The effect of the substitution of mechanical devices for human skill is the displacement of the skilled mechanical devices for human skill is the displacement of the skilled mechanical devices for human skill is the displacement of the skilled mechanical devices for human skill is the displacement of the skilled mechanical devices for human skills the displacement of the skilled mechanical devices for human skills displacement of the skilled mechanics by the expansion of industry; while the ratio of skilled mechanics to the total operating force was decreasing, the increasing scale of operations prevented an actual reduction in numbers. Of course this adjustment did not proceed without friction. While, in the long run, there has been no displacement of skilled mechanics by unskilled laborers for the industrial field as a whole, yet at certain times and places individua labor.

To prove that immigration has virtually lowered the rates of wages would require a comparative study of wages paid for the same class of labor in various occupations before and after the great influx of immigration. This, however, has never been attempted by the advocates of restriction. In fact, the chaotic state of our wage statistics precludes any but a fragmentary comparison for different periods. In a general way, however, all available data for the period of "the old immigration" agree in that the wages of unskilled laborers, and even of some of the skilled mechanics, did not fully provide for the support of the wage earner and his family in accordance with their usual standards of living. The shortage had to be made up by the labor of the wife and children.

living. The shortage had to be made up by the labor of the wife and children.

If the tendency of the new immigration were to lower the rate of wages or to retard the advance of wages, it should be expected that wages would be lower in great cities where the recent immigrants are concentrated than in rural districts where the population is mostly of native birth. All wage statistics, concur, however, in the opposite conclusion. Since the United States has become a manufacturing country average earnings per worker have been higher in the cities than in the country. The same difference exists within the same trades between the large and the small cities. Country competition of native Americans often acts as a depressing factor upon the wages of recent immigrants. This fact has been demonstrated in the clothing industry, in the cotton mills, in the coal mines, etc.

often acts as a depressing factor upon the wages of recent limingrants. This fact has been demonstrated in the clothing industry, in the cotton mills, in the coal mines, etc.

Furthermore, if immigration tends to depress wages, this tendency must manifest itself in lower average earnings in States with a large immigrant population than in States with a predominant native population. No such tendency, however, is discernible from wage statistics. As a rule, annual earnings are higher in States with a higher percentage of foreign-born workers.

The conditions in some of the leading industries employing large numbers of recent immigrants point to the same conclusions. In the Pittsburgh steel mills the rates of wages of various grades of employees have varied directly with the proportion of recent immigrants. The wages of the aristocrats of labor, none of whom are southern or eastern Europeans, have been reduced in some cases as much as 40 per cent; the money wages of the skilled and semiskilled workers, two-thirds of whom are natives or old immigrants, have not advanced notwithstanding the increased cost of living, while the wages of the unskilled laborers, the bulk of whom are immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, have been going up.

whom are natives or old immigrants, have not advanced notwithstanding the increased cost of living, while the wages of the unskilled laborers, the bulk of whom are immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, have been going up.

Another typical immigrant industry is the manufacture of clothing. The clothing industry has become associated in the public mind with the sweating system, and since the employees are, with few exceptions, immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, the conclusion is readily reached that the root of the sweating system is in the character of the new immigration. Yet the origin of the sweating system preceded the Jewish clothing workers by more than half a century. Throughout the second quarter of the past century native American and Irish women worked in the sweat shops of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia for only board and lodging, or even for board alone, depending upon their families for other necessities, whereas the Jewish factory girls of the present day are at least self-supporting.

In the cotton mills of New England the last quarter of the nineteenth century, when the operatives were practically all of the English-speaking races, was a period of intermittent advances and reductions in wages; on the whole, wages remained stationary. The first years of the present century, up to the crisis of 1908, were marked by the advent of the southern and eastern European, Armenian, and Syrian immigrants employed in the New England mills. As a general rule the employment of large numbers of recent immigrants has gone together with substantial ndvances in wages. This correlation between the movements of wages and immigration is not the manifestation of some mysterious racial trait, but the piain working of the law of supply and demand. The employment of a high percentage of immigrants in any section, industry, or occupation is an indication of an active demand for labor in excess of the native supply.

To be sure, the rise in wages is paralleled by a similar movement of prices. The employer of labor seeks to recoup the advance in wages by advancing the price of his product to the consumer. When the advance in the price of manufactured products becomes general, the wage earner as a consumer is forced in effect to give up a part or all of his gain in the money rate of wages. The increased cost of living then stimulates further demands for advances in wages. Since combinations of capital in all fields of industry have reduced competition among employers of labor to a minimum, the wage earners have been at a disadvantage in this continuous bargaining. In general it has been observed by economists that wages, as a rule, do not rise as fast as prices. That this rule holds true irrespective of immigration is illustrated by the movement of wages and prices during the Civil War. With the exception of the first year, the period was one of prosperity in every branch of industry. The wage earners were apparently in a favorable situation. The Army drew hundreds of thousands of workers from industrial pursuits, while immigration declined. There were at that time no immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, nor was there any oversupply of unskilled labor. Yet while the depreciation of the currency caused a rapid increase in the cost of living, money wages did not keep pace with prices. In other words, real wages decreased. It must be noted that during the war a lively labor agitation was going on; strikes were usually successful. Withal, labor was unable to win increases in wages commensurate with the increased cost of living.

The growth of manufacturing industries in the South being restricted by the natural increase of her native population, the manufacturers, in order to extend their operations, must resort to the employment of children, as did their predecessors in New England a century ago, before immigration came to supply the needs of American industry. This situation is by no means confined to the South. Absence of foreign immigration has created a demand for the labor of rural and semirural Missouri. The principal inducement for locating new shoe factories in rural sections of a continuous conti highly paid recent immigrant living in a large city. But the longer hours of the native American wage earner in the country admit of no such explanation.

Among the many charges against the recent immigrants not the least important one is that their ignorant acquiescence in dangerous and insanitary working conditions is a menace to the safety of the older employees. The immigration commission has accepted without criticism the employers' defense in work accidents, viz, that the majority of accidents arise from the negligence, the ignorance, and inexperience of the employees. There is, however, another side to the question. Many experts hold that most of the risks are humanly preventable, and their continuance is due to economic conditions beyond the control of the employee. Effective prevention of accidents in mines presupposes a carefully planned equipment involving considerable expense. But competition forces the mine operator to follow unsafe mining methods, which inevitably result in unnecessary sacrifice of human life. It is not the carelessness of the mine workers, but the carelessness of mine operators and their representatives that is, according to expert opinion, the cause of the high fatality rate in American mines. Similar dangerous conditions once existed in France and Belgium, but they were removed by stringent legislation and by an effective enforcement of the law. The theory which shifts the blame for accidents from the mine operator to the Slav miner tends to prevent the enactment of such legislation in the United States. the United States.

In the iron and steel mills there is the same popular disposition to shift the responsibility for accidents to "the ignorant foreigner," whereas expert opinion views the tremendous speed at which the plants are run as the real cause of danger. The greatest risk of death and personal injury is assumed by railway trainmen, who are all either Americans or natives of northern and western Europe. They have strong organizations and could not be replaced by non-English-speaking immigrants. Yet "acquiescence in dangerous and insanitary working conditions" appears to be the general attitude of organized and unorganized workers alike, irrespective of nationality. Obviously, organized labor does not feel strong enough to make demands which would involve large outlays by employers for safe equipment.

Organization of labor is nowadays generally recognized in the United States as the most effective of all existing agencies for the increase of wages and improvement of working conditions. It would therefore be a cause for grave concern if it were true, as claimed, that the recent immigrants were not organizations with disruption. The fact is, however, that the origin and growth of organized labor in the United States are contemporaneous with the period of "the new immigration," and that the immigrants from southern and eastern Europe are the backbone of some of the strongest labor unions. A notable example is the coalmining industry, where the mine workers' organization has gained strength only since the southern and eastern Europeans have become the predominant element among them. One of the most troublesome problems which the organization of these immigrants has had to face has been the competition of the unorganized Americans of native stock.

Before 1889 all labor organizations were small in membership and their effect upon economic conditions was negligible. Like everywhere, during the infancy of organized labor, a union would spring into exist-ence under the impulse of a strike, would flourish for a while, if successful among wage earners is thus accounted for by the fact that both are stimulated by business prosperity and discouraged by business depression.

The question arises, however, whether the progress of trade-unionism would not have been greater had there been no immigration from southern and eastern Europe during the past decade of industrial expansion. An answer to this question is furnished by the comparative growth of trade-union membership in New York and in Kansas. The ratio of foreign born in Kansas has been steadily decreasing since 1880. At the same time Kansas has shared in the recent industrial expansion. Statistics show that the relative number of organized workmen is much higher in New York with its large and growing southern and eastern European population than in Kansas, where more than nine-tenths of the population are of native birth.

These comparisons prove that recent immigration has not retarded the progress of trade-unionism, except, of course, where it is the policy of the unions to exclude the recent immigrants by prohibitive initiation dues and other restrictive regulations intended to limit the number of competitors within their trades.

Language is nowadays no longer a bar to organization among immigrants. The membership of every union includes a sufficient number of men of every nationality through whom their countrymen can be reached.

Meny of the more recent immigrants from southern and eastern men of every nationality through whom their countrymen can be reached.

Many of the more recent immigrants from southern and eastern Europe had acquired a familiarity with the principles of organization in their home countries. In Italy organization has lately made rapid progress not only among industrial workers, but also among agricultural laborers. In Russia, previous to the revolution of 1905, labor organizations and strikes were treated as conspiracies, but the revolutionary year 1905 outmatched the labor-union record of any other country. The strikes of that year affected one-third of all the factories employing three-fifths of all factory workers. The total number of strikers, at a conservative estimate, exceeded three and a half millions. The strikers drew together wage earners of all those nationalities which make up the bulk of our immigration from Russia—Hebrews, Poles, Lithuanians, Russians, and Ruthenians (Little Russians). In this connection it is worthy of note that the organizations of clothing workers in New York City, nearly all of whom are Russian and Polish Jews and Italians, comprise a higher proportion of the total number employed in the industry than the average trade-union in the United States.

If organized labor in the United States has not succeeded in welding together a majority of the wage earners, the fault is neither with immigration in general nor with immigration from southern and eastern Europe in particular. The primary cause is the substitution of machinery for human skill, which is taking the ground from the craft union. The latter, however, as a rule, does not seek to organize the unskilled laborers. Situations have arisen where the interests of the craft union have been antagonistic to organization among the unskilled. That organization among the unskilled. Another obstacle to the progress of trade-unionism is that the prin-

Another obstacle to the progress of trade-unionism is that the principal industries to-day are controlled by combinations, which have reduced competition among employers of labor to a minimum. In a contest of endurance between a trust and a trade-union the former is able to hold out longer, since it can shift the losses to the consumers. The only successful strikes against trusts have been those in which the majority of the strikers were immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, viz, the strikes in the anthracite coal nines of Fennsylvania and in the woolen mills of Lawrence.

One of the reasons for the greater power of resistance exhibited by the southern and eastern Europeans is the predominance among them of men without families. (The proportion of married men among the recent immigrants employed in bituminous coal mines varied from 49.4 per cent to 77.2 per cent; the proportion of married men whose families were living abroad averaged 27.9 per cent for all races, varying from 19.5 to 80.4 per cent.—Reports of the Immigration Commission, vol. 6, Tables 102 and 104.) The single European wage earner who manages to save a portion of his earnings can fall back on his savings if necessary. This relieves the pressure upon the strike fund. On the other hand, the families of recent immigrants, being inured to the most simple life in their home countries, can more easily endure the hardships of a strike than the families of native American wage earners. The southern and eastern European strikers are therefore able to hold out longer in a wage contest than the native wage earner.

The defeat of many strikes is charged against the inmigrant, who, though supposedly too tractable under normal conditions, is said to be inclined to violence when aroused. Suffice it to say that strike riots are as old as strikes in the United States.

On the other hand, however, the United Mine Workers of America, whose members are mostly immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, has put into practical operation an industrial parliament, with separate representation for employeers and employees, for the orderly regulation of the terms of employment. And lately another organization of recent immigrants, the Union of Cloak, Suit, and Skirt Makers, has created a joint executive body for the sanitary control of workshops. It can not be said, then, "as a general proposition * * that all improvement in conditions and increases in rates of pay have been secured in spite of the presence of the recent immigrant." (Reports of Immigration Commission, vol. 1, p. 541.)

The results of the preceding discussion can be summed up as follows:

(1) Recent immigration has displaced some of the native American

The results of the preceding discussion can be summed up as following the payon of the native American wage carners or of the earlier immigratios, but has only covered the shortage of labor resulting from the excess of the demand over the domestle supply.

(2) Immigration varies inversely with unemployment; it has not increased the rate of unemployment for the recent immigrants is not lower than the tandand of Iving of the recent immigrants is not lowered the standard of Iving of Americans and older immigrants are saged in the same occupations. Recent immigration has not lowered the standard of Iving of Americans and older immigrant wage earners upward on the scale of occupations. It prevented an increase in the rates of wages; if has pushed the native and older immigrant wage earners upward on the scale of occupations. The proportionate quota to the membership of every labor organization which has not always the proportionate quota to the membership of every labor organization which has not discriminated against them, and they have firmly stood by There is a general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general labor problem, which comprises many special problems, such as general propertion of work accidents, etc. None of these problems being affected by immigration, manufacturing and mining.

Scarcity of unskilled labor would hasten the general introduction of mining machinery. The labor that would thus be displaced would form one substitute for immigration.

The mines and mills of the Southern States which have failed to attract immigrants utilize the labor of farmers and their sons. The two million tenant farmers offer great possibilities as an industrial reserve available during the winter months. The farm being their main source of subsistence, they are able and willing to offer their labor during the idle winter months more cheaply than freshly landed immigrants. The efforts of trade-union organizers among this class of English-speaking workers have met with scant success. The substitution of the cheap labor of the American farmer for the labor of the Siav or Italian immigrant would tend to weaken the unions and to keep down wages.

The discontinuance of fresh supplies of immigrant labor for the mills and factories of New England would give a new impetus to the establishment of factories in the South, where there is an abundant supply of child labor, and in the rural districts of agricultural States with an available supply of cheap labor.

The employment of all these substitutes for regular wage earners certainly has its limitations. But there is in the United States, as in all industrial countries, a steady flow of labor from rural to urban districts. In the absence of immigration of unskilled laborers the depopulation of the rural districts would be accelerated. A stimulated movement of labor from the farm to the factory would check the growth of farming; the prices of foodstuffs would rise in consequence, which would tend to offset the advantages to the wage earners from a possible rise of wages.

Still, should all the substitutes for immigration prove inadequate, the rural districts would be accelerated. A stimulated movement of labor from the farm to the factory would check the growth of farming; the prices of footstuffs would rise in consequence, which would tee wages.

It prices the advantages to the wage carners from a possible vise of wages.

Still, should all the substitutes for immigration prove inadequate, it does not necessarily follow that scarcity prices would rule in the American labor market. It must be borne in mind that capital is international. Parallel with the immigration and emigration of labor to and from the United States, there has been going on an immigration of European capital to the United States and an emigration of American capital abroad. It is estimated that the total amount of European capital invested in the United States is approximately $6,500,000,000. In other words, European capital came together with European labor to assist in the development of American industry. Should there arise a scarcity of labor in the United States, new investments of European capital will seek other fields. On the other hand, billions of American capital are already invested in foreign enterprises. At present these investments can not compare with the profits of American industries annually reinvested at home. If, however, a scarcity of labor were created in the United States, more American capital would seek investment abroad.

Velopment of foreign countries with cheap labor must eventually react upon labor conditions in the United States. Certain of the most important American industries depend in part upon the export trade. A scarcity of labor in the United States would induce many American manufacturers to follow the example of their English, French, Belgian, and German competitors who have found it more profitable to establish factories in foreign countries than to export their products to those countries. Such an emigration of American capital would materially affect the export trade of the United States and eventually throw out of employment a number

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

[Mr. SMALL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] ready to go on?

Mr. BURNETT. I prefer that the gentleman use some of his time now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, never before in the history of our country has an attempt been made to restrict immigration at a time of great prosperity and when American labor was fully employed. Thus far such efforts have been confined to periods of industrial depression, when our own labor was unemployed or when an influx of foreigners would accentuate hard times. Therefore it is inconceivable to me why the fundamental policy of this Government with respect to immigration should be changed now, when new immigrants are so largely in demand in nearly all parts of the country.

There is certainly no economic reason for further restriction, and the arguments occasionally advanced by the American Federation of Labor in favor of such a policy, while comprehensible at other times, have really no application to present conditions, and a careful survey of the industrial field, I am sure, would convince our labor leaders of that fact.

Ponder as I may, I can find no excuse for the proposed action of the majority, except it be political expediency. It is intended perhaps to clear the deck, so to speak, and to relieve the incoming administration, which has blown hot and cold on this subject, of a vexatious problem. If the immigration bill is disposed of now, assuming that the Senate would also pass it, there will be divided responsibility, inasmuch as the House is Democratic and the Senate is Republican. This would enable our Democratic friends to wash their hands of the whole business and to avoid the necessity of assuming the burden at a time when they will have full control of all branches of the Government.

It has been argued, and with a great deal of justification, that after the people have decided on a change of parties in the Government no more important action should be taken by the old régime; and no one is more zealous in the advocacy of this view than the gentlemen on the other side of this aisle. In deference to this contention, our Democratic friends even so far as to refuse in the other House to confirm presidential appointments such as are regularly and legally made under powers conferred upon the President by the Constitution.

Under these circumstances, I say, the question certainly arises whether the Republican minority of this House should aid the Democratic majority in what seems to be purely a political game, and whether it would not be right and proper for the Republican minority to refuse this aid when it comes to the solution of a fundamental problem and the change of a traditional policy of the Government. My own judgment is that the immigration problem should be left to the next Congress to solve, a Congress which will come fresh from the people and which will be controlled by a party that has received a popular mandate to decide such questions, not as we wish to decide them but as the newly selected Representatives see fit to solve them.

There is only one other explanation for the precipitate action of the majority in this matter, which, however, I can not quite reconcile with my conception of American public spirit. Could it be possible, Mr. Chairman, that Members have been intimidated by certain secret societies, by organizations which are proscribing people on account of their religion, and are opposing immigration on such un-American grounds? I can hardly persuade myself that the great Democratic Party, which, the same as the Republican Party, has always stood for freedom of conscience and religious liberty, should have fallen to the depth of heeding those who are daily preaching a religious war. I know this to be an issue in this country at the present time, although few have the courage to speak about it. For one, I shall not hesitate to speak out, however, for it has been my firm conviction that if the proud temple of our liberties should ever crumble to dust it will not be because of those who publicly assail it, but it will be because public men, as well as the public press, are afraid to discuss and warn the American people of the hidden dangers which are threatening our liberties.

I speak from my experience during the last campaign. About a month before the adjournment of the last session of Congress I received a circular in which certain questions were propounded; among others, whether I favored an educational test for immigrants. There was no name given. Merely a post-office box was mentioned, to which I was expected to direct my answer.

I replied courteously that I should be glad to answer all their questions, but before doing so must request them to mention at least one name, as I had made it a rule of my official as well as private life never to answer anonymous communications. I never received a reply. Not one member of that organization was man enough to step to the front and mention his name.

No sooner had the campaign begun in earnest than an anonymous circular made its appearance and was distributed in hundreds of thousands of copies all over my district in which I was blacklisted as a "pro-Romanist," with a footnote to the effect that I had "always voted for pro-Roman immigration." This, Mr. Chairman, in spite of the fact that no immigration bill has been voted on in this House for many years.

I am sure the membership of this House will agree with me when I say that if a public man is to be stabbed in the back with daggers hidden under the cloak of "Americanism" simply because he refuses, in legislating on the subject of immigration, to make religious distinctions, we are confronted with a problem much more serious than is the problem of immigration, for if acquiesced in it would signify the death at the hands of a political mafia of religious liberty; and it will also be conceded, I hope, that those who make the assault on him on such grounds are a danger to American institutions, because they are violating the spirit and genius of true Americanism. I am a Lutheran. My father and mother were Lutherans. My wife is a Lutheran, and my child was christened in that faith. believe in a complete separation of church and state, and in this belief go so far as to assert that the daily prayers in this House, as well as all Sunday laws, are unconstitutional, because they signify a mixing of church and state. These views, although Lutheran doctrine, I hold not as a Lutheran, but American who reveres the Constitution. too, I believe in religious freedom and religious tolerance. Therefore, and I say it with utmost deliberation, when I am called upon to violate the eath which I have made 10 times in this House to uphold the Constitution, when I am asked to discriminate between citizen and citizen because of their religion and to vote to restrict immigration because part of it happens to come from Catholic countries, rather than comply with such a demand, Mr. Chairman, I would resign my seat in this House, take pen in hand, and write editorials against such an infamous proposition. [Applause.]

Whatever may be the fate of this bill, whatever motives or reasons there may be in your minds for its passage or defeat, I sincerely trust that among the Members who favor it there is not a single one to be found who is impelled by fear of an un-American Black Hand in his district such as I have described. I say again, the men who from religious prejudice practice such intimidation on political candidates and by implied threats and dark-lantern methods exact pledges from them at election time are enemies of our institutions; and a public servant, by allowing himself to be thus coerced, would be faithless to the Constitution and to one of the most sublime American ideals.

[Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, permit me briefly to discuss the merits of this bill. It is needless to say that in dealing with immigration we are dealing with a very grave subject. It means to interfere artificially with a natural phenomenon caused by an inherent instinct of humanity—their migration. We are playing not with material interests or dollars but with souls—in fact, with human lives. One line in an immigration bill might affect the fate of thousands, and one word might change the life career of as many human beings. The question of immigration is one which, in my judgment, is more talked about and less understood than almost any other problem before the American people. As a rule people only see the surface without grasping its deeper significance. Its dark side is systematically paraded and its bright side hidden from view. When we have to deal with a sincere demand for restriction, based upon economical conditions, the problem is perhaps not so difficult to solve, but when, as is undoubtedly the case, a good part of the opposition to immigration is based upon what I believe to be innate prejudice, then the difficulties presented become insurmountable, because neither reason nor arguments will be of any avail.

I am in favor of restricting immigration to the extent it is now restricted; I want to see excluded all the classes now mentioned in the laws, but I am opposed to further radical restriction, because I think that, under present conditions, particularly at this time, it is no longer the serious problem it was even a few years ago. Before I go into facts and figures to make good that statement, I want to lay down a few fundamental propositions: In the first place, we must remember that every immigrant is really a valuable addition to the capital of this country. Europe is paying the expense of raising and educating men and women, and then when they become old enough to pay back the outlay to European society these men and women emigrate to the United States to identify themselves with our institutions, to offer us their brain and brawn for the They must purpose of aiding us in building up our country.

Another suggestion I should like to make to determine the value of immigration. It is this: Whenever in cities and towns of this country the census figures show an increase in population there is general rejoicing; in other words, the people regard such an increase as an evidence of growth and progress and prosperity. And they also have a right to regard it as indicating an increase in values, because it is population which makes values. Take half of the people out of the city of New York and the property of that city would be worth but one-half of what it is worth to-day. If you would put 10,000,000 people into Texas to-day, the value of property in that State would rise from $50 an acre to probably $500 an acre. In other words, population determines values. The more people the higher the value of land and property.

We have not sifted the facts connected with immigration up to something like 20 years ago. Until that time people came in, and the supposition was that the vast majority came for the purpose of bettering their condition; in other words, they were people imbued with energy and a desire for aiding themselves.

As Bismarck once said, "Immigration does not consist of the poorest classes of Europe by any means." By that the great German statesman meant to say that the man who is able to raise enough money to defray the expenses of the trip to the New World for himself and family is not a pauper in the sense in which we accept that term. He must be a man of some push and energy; and these, I submit, are the very qualities which count in life and which we welcome to these shores. From my study of the subject, extending over 40 years, I believe I can truthfully say that even to-day the vast majority of the immi-grants come with the idea in their minds of bettering their economic condition.

We are all agreed, I believe, that immigration has been a great boon, if not the greatest, to this country, and that of all the factors which have contributed to its wonderful growth and development none has been more important. Even to-day immigrants or the sons of immigrants are performing half of the real hard work of the country and they assimilate so rapidly that the second generation are as good Americans as And in the whole history of the country no instance can be cited of any serious trouble caused by lack of assimilation or nonassimilation. There have been labor troubles, yes, but they were always of an economic and not a racial nature and merely proved my contention, often made on this floor, that if an immigrant finds—and he discovers this soon after his arrival—that he has to pay American prices for American goods, he will also demand American wages. It is my deliberate judgment that if you seriously restrict immigration, and this is the avowed purpose of this bill, you do not solve a problem, but you create a new one, and a problem much more serious than the one you complain of now. But I shall speak of this phase later.

One of the arguments in favor of restriction is the possibility of overcrowding the United States. Let me say a word on that subject. In the United States we now have 25 heads to the square mile, figuring the present population at 90,000,000. Germany they support 308 heads to the square mile, and Belgium supports 650 people to the square mile. If the United States should ever become as densely populated as Belgium is to-day, we could support a population of 2,342,593,500 people. The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that you can move all the people of the United States into the State of Texas, and then Texas would not be populated as densely as Belgium is to-day; and I claim that that country represents the highest type of civilization which is able decently to support the largest number of people to the square mile.

Of course if we eye immigration askance, if we regard these waves of humanity as a sort of hostile invasion, then all these arguments would have no value with us. If those who hold such views are right, then it would be better and more consistent to shut the doors of the Republic altogether. But I am one of those who still believe in immigration, because we can not do without it. There is congestion in the large cities, true; but that same congestion exists in London, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, and all other large cities of the Old World, yet there no attempt has ever been made to exclude foreigners.

Last year I was passing through a part of Germany where they were building a railroad, and I talked to one of the men, trying to find out what character of labor they were employing. Although I addressed the man in German, he could not understand me. He pointed out the foreman to me, who I found was a German, and I asked him what kind of labor he was employing. He replied they were Italians, every one of them. Says I, "Italians? Can't you find labor in such a densely populated country as Germany?" "No," he said, "Germans are doing a better class of work; they will not build railroads; we can not get them for this purpose." And he said that the Italians were sober, industrious, and reliable, and particularly competent in railroad construction work, and for these reasons they employed them. There you have a country with 308 people to the square mile, and yet not one word of protest is raised on the part of labor against the employment of these Italians, while here, in a country with but 25 people to the square mile, the cry is persistently kept up that immigration should be stopped on the ground that it is a serious competition with American labor.

If you will look at the latest bulletin, the October bulletin, issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor, you will find a very remarkable fact, Mr. Chairman, in relation to the departures. I am glad the figures are now being given in regard to the departures. At the time I was chairman of the Immigration Committee, 18 years ago, we could not get any figures on the departures of emigrants. In this bulletin you will find that in the year ended June 30, 1911, 155,000 laborers—I only give the round numbers—came to this country, and in the same year 172,000 laborers departed; in other words, 18,000 more laborers left our country than came here as immigrants. Now, is not that a very important fact? And this strange phenomenon seems permanent. Look at the figures for the fiscal year 1912. You find in the official reports that of the class of immigrants styled "laborers" there arrived during the year ended June 30, 1912, 135,726, while in the same period 209,279 departed. In other words, over 73,000 more left this country than arrived in that period of time. These figures certainly show that immigration is no problem at this time. The total immigration last year was 878,000. Deduct from that number the 295,000 who returned to their native countries and we have 582,000 left. Deduct from that number the 246,000 women and children, who certainly should not be counted as competitors with American labor, and there is left a total of only 336,000. I do not believe there is a civilized country on earth that does not get just as many foreigners as that number represents every year. And I go further, and say there is not a country on earth which would not be glad to receive them at the present time. A few years ago at Bremen one of the captains of industry of that city told me they could find immediate employment in the city and its surrounding territory for at least 8,000 men.

We see them pass through here

He said-but no inducements of any kind will stop them. They are bent on embarking for America, although we are offering them high premiums for staying with us.

I now come to the question whether we need this influx of laborers or whether we can get along without them. Let us see. I hold in my hand a number of newspaper clippings. A Pittsburgh dispatch to the New York Times says:

Pittsburgh is experiencing a labor famine so serious that many big industries are advertising far and wide to get men. Last week the shortage in the Connellsyille coke region necessitated the blowing out of 1,200 ovens at a time when record prices are being charged for foundry and furnace sizes. Contractors having big jobs are offering higher wages than have been paid since the boom years preceding the panic of 1907. Some concerns in the Pittsburgh district sent agents to accost men walking in the streets who appeared to be idle. The employing agent of one corporation said he could give work to 7,000 laborers.

The New York Evening Post says:

There is almost universal complaint in the iron and steel industry that it is difficult to secure a sufficient supply of labor, and this is true not only of the foundries, rolling mills, steel works, and blast furnaces, but of the coke works as well. Indeed, according to the Iron Trade Review, the scarcity of labor is particularly pronounced in the Connells-ville coke region.

In another New York paper I find the following, under the

NEW YORK NEEDS 100,000 SERVANTS.

An exhaustive report on New York employment agencies, which Commissioner of Licenses Herman Robinson has prepared, was turned in to Mayor Gaynor yesterday by the commissioner. The servant problem, which is dealt with in detail, shows that there is a great scarcity of servants. More than 100,000 of them could find employment if they were here.

The New York Herald contains, under the headline "All industries need men—Prosperity that is sweeping country causes enormous demand for labor," the following:

From every direction reports continue to come in showing that in various industries there is much more labor to be performed than there are men for the jobs, although wages paid to-day are higher and more attractive than at any other time in the history of the country.

Construction work is suffering from perhaps the greatest dearth of labor ever experienced; machinery factories, steel mills, cement works, brickyards, lumber yards, stone quarries, and innumerable other lines of trade and industry are crying for workmen. The shortage includes all lines of labor, skilled and unskilled.

Mr. Chairman, these are only a few samples of the reports.

Mr. Chairman, these are only a few samples of the reports to be found in the newspapers of all sections of the country. Therefore am I not right in saying that the real problem today is not how to keep out immigrants, but how to get them and to keep them here? And is it not pure folly to try and restrict immigration at such a time?

The advocates of restriction lay great stress on the fact that many of the new immigrants do not remain with us, but return to their home countries after they have accumulated a little money. For one, I should not like to criticize what is a natural impulse of the human heart—the longing for home, the desire of a man to visit again the scenes of his childhood. And from an economical standpoint the going and coming of certain immigrants is even desirable. They go where there is work to do, but if the opportunity for employment becomes limited these "birds of passage," as they have been called, go back home and leave the field to American labor, only to come again when times become better. In this manner immigration regulates itself. And as to the money they take to Europe, let us be just and remember that they have given an honest equivalent for every dollar they have in their pockets. Why should we criticize those poor people when we remain indifferent to the example of the wealthy nabobs who go to London and Paris to spend their American money and actually look with scorn upon American democracy and American institutions after having once basked in the sunshine of royal splendor? For one I would find less cause for criticism in the longing for home of the poor fellow who has earned his few dollars in the sweat of his face than in the extravagances of the rich man, who, though a native American, forgets his own country in lavishing his wealth upon European society.

I want to discuss this question fully from the standpoint of the laboring man, Mr. Chairman, but before doing so let me say a word about the illiteracy test. The advocates of restriction know full well that the ability to read is no test of character. They know that to impose it would admit the anarchist, the nihilist, the crook, and the man who for some reason or other has to leave his own country, while it would bar out the unfortunate but honest poor man who comes with two strong arms and a healthy mind and a willingness to identify himself and his children with our institutions,

I regard an illiteracy test not only as a hardship on the very men we want and need, but I consider it unwise and unjust besides. In imposing it we are practically punishing a lack of opportunity. A man has been raised under conditions in Europe which have made it impossible for him to acquire the faculty of reading. That is his misfortune, of course, but when he comes to this country and we propose to punish him for his unfortunate lack of opportunity by shutting our doors in his face, is this not adding injury to his misfortune? This lack of opportunity is brought about by conditions over which he has no control. He has been raised in such poor circumstances that his parents were unable to send him to school; he had to work, perhaps, from the time he was 8 or 10 years old, and he has had no opportunity to learn to read and write. Now, this illiteracy test does not apply to Germans, because I do not think more than half of 1 per cent of Germans would be kept out of this country if the test were applied; nor would it affect the Scandinavians, Irish, English, and so on; it mainly applies to immigrants from southern and southeastern Europe. I do not believe that those who can read would make better Americans, from the standpoint which we should consider, than those who can not. We have, of course, educated classes and schooled laborers in great sufficiency in the United States, but it is a question whether the educational test would not keep out the very men we need most. It would not apply so much to skilled laborers; it would mainly affect unskilled labor, and that, I believe, is the very kind we want and need in the United States, namely, men who will perform work which your son and my son and even the son of the German and Irish immigrant will not do-the rough and the menial work of the country.

It has been well said that the newcomers are lifting upon their shoulders those who had come previously and enabling them to secure a better kind of employment. I have always been opposed to the illiteracy test for the reasons I have stated, but one time in my career I was compelled to report a bill which provided an illiteracy test. I was outvoted in my committee, but as chairman of the committee I was compelled to report that bill, and I have been sorry for it ever since. passed both Houses, but President Cleveland vetoed it, and there are many citizens of this country who give Cleveland credit, even to-day, for that message, in which he took the ground that the anarchist, the agitator, the man who makes long fingers, the man who has certain reasons for wanting to leave the Old World would be fully competent to pass this test, while the desirable emigrant, the man who comes, as I have said, to offer us his muscle and brawn, would be barred and shut out.

And its foolish educational test, which would have kept the mother of Abraham Lincoln out of the country, is designed to keep out of our country millions of honest, earnest, sincere men and women that the country needs.

Fortunately the bill will not pass. The House retains enough of honest Americanism to stamp it out of existence by a vote, and if the House should fail, the President is compelled to retain his consistency and self-respect by stamping it out of existence by a veto.

I believe the illiteracy test to be hypocritical pretext. its advocates have in view is not education, but restriction, They want to keep out immigration, and as they can not discriminate between the different countries, as it would be a viola-tion of international comity to say, "We want no more im-migrants from Italy," they have resorted to the subterfuge of a test which, if applied early in our history, would have kept out of the country some of its very best blood, and probably many of the ancestors of those who are on this floor to-day. the Germans and Irish and Scandinavians were still coming in large numbers, some other pretext would be devised to keep them out, for what is the objection to the Italians? Is it right and just to proscribe a whole nation because of the misdeeds of a few? Who are the dynamiters, the lynchers, the White Caps, the moonshiners? Are they Italians? Not one of them. In fact, there is not an immigrant among them. They are all Americans.

The vast majority of the immigrants from Sicily and southern Italy are like the immigrants from other countries-honest, thrifty, and industrious people. Like every other element of the population they may have occasional fights, yet the police records of the large cities show them on the whole to be good, sober, law-abiding, and hard-working people; and as to their assimilation, I have seen them in the schools of St. Louis when on the Fourth of July they carried aloft the Stars and Stripes and sang American songs, and I made up my mind then and there that these future citizens of our country would be just as good Americans as I am or anybody else can possibly be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say a word about the competition of immigration with American labor. You will admit that if restriction is to be resorted to because of such competition partial restriction would afford but partial protection. In that case nothing short of total prohibition would cure the evil, and as a friend of the wageworker I should be the first to advocate such radical legislation. It might be a violation of principle, of good morals, of the spirit of liberty, and of international comity, but self-preservation, being the first law of nature with nations as well as with individuals, would justify the closing of the doors of the Republic. But how easy it is to prove the fallacy and absurdity of these arguments.

In the fifties, and more especially under Buchanan's administration, when the Know-nothing movement was at its height, this country witnessed the same outcry, even more furious than now, against the admission of foreigners, only at that time it was more justified because the country passed through a crisis, many factories being closed and labor being unemployed. Congress was asked to stop immigration, which was erroneously regarded as the source of the trouble. But the appeal was unheeded, and how fortunate for the country, for the 50 years which have since elapsed no one will deny were destined to be the most glorious, the most prosperous period in our history in -some will even assert because of—the fact that immigration had practically remained unrestricted.

If the influx of foreigners tends to a reduction of wages and to an increase of the number of unemployed and is generally detrimental to the country, why is it that during the last 50 years, the period of the largest immigration, wages were higher than ever before, labor more universally employed, and the American people more prosperous than at any previous time? Answer these questions in your own mind, and you will irresistably be led to the conclusion that immigration and prosperity are corelated factors. Of course, we Republicans know that the change from hard to good times, wrought in spite of continued immigration, was mainly due to a change of our economic policy from free trade to protection; but this is not what I wish to discuss here, except in as far as it has a bearing on the pending question. Under free trade Europe, of course, manufactures to a greater extent for the American market, and then the influx of immigrants always decreases, because Europe itself furnishes better opportunities for employment, while under the protective system and the consequent better times Europe's idle laborers are naturally attracted hither. This fact, by the way, is frequently forged into a weapon against the protective system. We exclude the fabrics, they say, but let the hands that make them come in. Suppose this is so. Is it not infinitely better than if we were to admit the fabrics and leave the hands that make them in Europe to spend their money there? It must be remembered-and this most important factor is generally overlooked by the restrictionists—that every immigrant is a producer and a consumer at the same time. Every newcomer brings, as Speaker Reed once tersely expressed it, his job with He needs food, clothing, and shelter, and while he himself produces he at the same time consumes the products of The vast majority of the newcomers enter upon their life here by performing menial labor; consequently the competition with American skilled labor is ridiculously small. But if their coming should result in some competition, is not this counterbalanced by the fact that the needs and necessities of an additional half a million people are to be supplied by the American market?

There was a time when workingmen were induced to smash the machines which temporarily threw them out of employ-To-day they ridicule the idea, because they have learned, first, that hands are required to construct the machines, and, second, because all labor-saving inventions have so increased the consumption of the articles manufactured by their aid as to leave just as much work to be done as before. It is exactly the same with immigration. The increase of productive power caused by it is practically neutralized by augmented consumption. So the machine and the immigrant bring their own salvation with them. When the time comes, however-and no doubt it will come-that labor-saving appliances will be so perfected as to bring about a continuous excess of the world's supply over the world's demand, then the only logical remedy will be a reduction of the hours of labor. But never will I believe that the voice of labor, of intelligent American labor, will in seriousness be raised against the downtrodden of the Old World who knock at our doors begging for the privilege of breathing under the sun of a free country. American labor cherishes its constitutional rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and will never deny them to others. It will never kick shipwrecks, while attempting to board our well-supplied craft, back into the roaring sea.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, and many others which I have not time to discuss, let us as a Nation of immigrants adhere to the great doctrine, the genuine American doctrine, that the man who comes to us with strong arms and a stout heart and a determination to better his condition by honest labor is a valuable and welcome addition to our population, and do not let us forget what we owe to immigration; how since 1840 it has changed the face of this continent; how it has turned deserts into flower gardens, forests into thriving towns; how it has removed the line of civilization from the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean; how it has aided by hard, manual work, by the Pacific Ocean; how it has aided by hard, manual work, by energy and untiring effort, to make this Nation the greatest industrial nation of the world. "The American of a hundred years from now," said Rev. De Witt Talmage, "is to be different from the American of to-day. German brain, Irish wit, French civility, Scotch firmness, English loyalty, Italian æsthetics, packed into one man, and he an American! It is this intermarriage of nationalities that is going to make the American Nation the greatest nation of the ages.

Remember, also, that besides its brain and muscle, which represent untold amounts of capital, immigration brings millions upon millions of cash to our shores, and let no one forget that the wealth of this country in land, forest, and mountain is barely scratched; that where some now think we have room for no more will in the future be found the happy homes of mil-

ons of people. [Applause.]
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Austin].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to give this bill my support and, in the brief time allowed me, will give some of my reasons. My only regret is that it does not go far enough and include a character test as well as an educational test. The Republican Party, 16 years ago, in national convention, when it nominated William McKinley for President, declared as follows:

For the protection of the quality of American citizenship and the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Following that declaration our leader, the leader of the party to which I owe my allegiance, the good, wise, and beloved Mc-Kinley, sent this message to Congress:

Our naturalization and immigration laws should be further improved to the constant promotion of a safe, a better, and a higher citizenship. A grave peril to the Republic would be a citizenship too ignorant to understand or too vicious to appreciate the great value and beneficence of our institutions and laws, and against all who come here to war upon them our gates must be promptly and tightly closed. Illiteracy must be banished from the land if we shall attain that high destiny as the foremost of the enlightened nations of the world under Providence we ought to achieve.

President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress, said:

The second object of a proper immigration law ought to be to secure by careful and not merely perfunctory educational test some intelligent capacity to appreciate American institutions and act sanely as American citizens.

The great Republican Party, in its convention at Chicago in 1912—this good year—wrote this declaration or pledge:

We pledge the Republican Party to the enactment of appropriate laws to give relief from the constantly growing evil of induced or undesirable immigration, which is inimical to the progress and welfare of the people of the United States.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have only five minutes. Had I as much time as my genial friend from Missouri, I would gladly yield to him. This is not a political question. It is not a religious question. This is a patriotic question in which is involved the civilization, the progress, and the happiness of the American people.

Who demands this legislation? We created a commission composed of three Senators, three Members of the House of Representatives, and three leading citizens from private life, and they spent a million dollars of the money of the taxpayers in four long years carefully studying this great question here and abroad. Of that commission composed of nine men, eight of them favored the provisions of the Burnett law and recommended favorable action on the part of Congress. At the other end of the Capitol practically a united Senate, composed of Democrats and Republicans alike, passed a bill in line with the declarations and pledges of the Republican Party.

Who else demands it? The Democratic Party is on record in its platform of 1896 in favor of legislation along these lines.

The Knights of Labor favor this measure. The American Federation of Labor, with more than 2,000 delegates—
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

May I have two minutes more? Mr. AUSTIN.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. AUSTIN. I say the American Federation of Labor, with more than 2,000 delegates in convention, demand the educational test, a money test, an increased head tax, and the abolition of the Distribution Bureau in the Department of Commerce and Labor.

The Farmers' Union, with a membership of 3,000,000, demand it: the National Grange, the Farmers' National Congress, the Junior Order of American Mechanics, with a membership of over 400,000, demand it; and I deny the statement that this patriotic organization is anti-Catholic or antireligious.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Order of Railroad Conductors, the Trainmen's Association, and the Patriotic Sons of America—practically every labor organization and every patriotic organization—both political parties, Democratic and Republican, are on record demanding this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, prior to 1883, 2.7 per cent of our foreign immigrants were illiterates. To-day 33 per cent are illiterates. Out of 1,500,000 immigrants from Italy 800,000, or 54 per cent, are illiterates. How many of them seek American citizenship under our naturalization laws? Practically none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. AUSTIN. If the gentleman will yield me some time, I will be glad to do it.

Mr. SABATH. I wish I had some time to yield the genfleman.

Mr. AUSTIN. Seven-tenths of these Italians do not naturalize or attempt to secure American citizenship. [Applause.] Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL].

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to engage in this debate until the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. Kahn] saw fit to cast a slur upon the good old State of Kentucky, and so long as I am a Member upon this floor coming from that State no other Member of this House can cast aspersions upon my old Kentucky home without a word of protest from me. [Applause.] It was very unfortunate in the gentleman from California to raise the question of illiteracy in Kentucky, because if he will examine the statistics he will find that that portion of Kentucky where he says this illiteracy exists is the solid Republican portion of Kentucky, and the Democratic Party in Kentucky to-day is giving its energy to bringing about a reform in our educational matters. As our educational standing progresses, so the Democratic vote in Kentucky progresses. But, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that the citizenship of eastern Kentucky, where this illiteracy in large extent exists, is the purest American blood in this Nation.

It is the peer of any citizenship in the Nation, and as a citizen of Kentucky I stand here to say that to-day it is a problem in our Commonwealth, to the solution of which all of our citizens, Democrats and Republicans alike, are directing their energies, and we have dedicated ourselves to educating our illiterate citizenship of our State, regardless of any political conditions and regardless of the color of that citizenship. Our people after the Civil War, with their estates swept away, did not have the opportunities that you gentlemen of the North had. You left upon our hands an ignorant, uneducated people, several hundred thousand negroes, and the Democratic Party in Kentucky to-day makes no discrimination in its rate of school taxation on account of color. We are endeavoring to educate that burden which you put upon our shoulders. I am here to make the prophecy that within the next 25 years the eastern portion of Kentucky, with its noble citizenship, the purest American blood in this Nation, when the coal mines have been developed, will stand without a peer in this whole Nation. We in Kentucky have been doubly taxed. You gentlemen have not been. We are taxed by the Federal Government to support the Union soldier; we are taxed by our State government to support the needy Confederate soldier. We cheerfully submit to both. We in Kentucky are levying heavy taxes for education, and striving hard to work out the great problem before us. It ill becomes anyone on this floor, when the patriotic citizens of Kentucky are to-day struggling along under a double taxation to put that State in the front rank of the States of the Nation, to cast a slur upon it. And we will put Kentucky in the front ranks of the States of this Union, where she rightly belongs. [Ap-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I think it was Whittier who said:

It is the heart and not the brain, That to the highest doth attain.

The world's permanent betterment and advancement will come through the hearts of men rather than through that which we call education; and I think that one of the most practical tests of the heart of a man, his motives in life, is the fact that he intends to be a useful man to any country in which he lives, and to the world. The workingmen, whether they come from Italy or Poland or Ireland or Germany or France. the men who come here with their families or without their families, for the honest purpose of work, whether it is within an organization or out of it, may, as a rule, be counted as men of pretty good hearts and good motives in life. If these men whom you intend to exclude by this bill are fundamentally and constitutionally wrong in their hearts and motives and in their purposes to earn a living, you are liable, so far as the bill is concerned, so far as you educate them, to place a weapon in their hands for injury.

Educated villainy is more dangerous than honest ignorance; and many of our own people, I think we must admit, are using the weapon of education to wrong and oppress their fellow men. I believe that usefulness wherever a man lives is true education. The useful hand and the useful brain—and true educa-tion is that in which the hand and brain work together—are a benefit to any country. And we can not in human legislation pick out the man of genius or the man whose work is to be most effective in the advancement of civilization. Marconi was an Italian; his father an Italian, his mother an Irish peasant girl from northern Ireland. Luther, whom my friend from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] honors and respects in his religion, was the child of poor miner peasants in Germany. Lincoln was born in the heart of obscurity and came up out of the wilderness of poverty and pain. Genius is often born in the hovel. God takes the weak things to confound the mighty, and for us by this species of legislation to say that a man who can barely read may be admitted and that this is to be the test of his citizenship seems to me puerile. I do not believe in it. I believe that this country is destined to amalgamate and bring out of many races the glory of the future ages. Some people laugh at what we call the "melting pot." Call it what you I call it that spirit which comes from the best heart of America to unify mankind and to establish a fraternal relation by means of which we are to solve this and other perplexing problems of to-day. It is true we are a Nation of extremes. We have abnormal wealth at the top and resentment and, perhaps, bitterness at the bottom. We have wrong and injustice here and resentment there, but the human brain and that which we call education will not solve it. It must come from the hearts of men. It must be the spirit that unifies men; it must be in the spirit of good will to men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. NYE. We are prone to attribute the ills of our social life to anything and everything but ourselves. It is always the other fellow. But our national perils are not from without so much as from within. The clever native-born American, who is often as unscrupulous as he is clever, may well claim our attention when we study the causes which menace our national hap-To get rich quick or to get something for nothing is not strikingly peculiar to our foreign-born population, and especially the working classes. These have no monopoly of vice and crime. Virtue is more often the companion of industry than of idleness, and the people we seek to exclude by this bill are as a rule industrious. Jefferson believed in an aristocracy of virtue and talent rather than an aristocracy of wealth. The foreigner as a rule gives us a constant lesson of industry and economy, which many of the native born may well emulate. He lives within his means, and generally saves from his earnings, even if they are small; and while we are wasteful, he is frugal; while we are idle, he works. He adapts his expenses to his income, and he succeeds where we fail. I do not mean this is true in all cases, but everywhere in country and city it is so common that none can fail to observe it. I would not disparage the native-born citizen, but let us not be blind to our weaknesses nor ignore our faults or the vices of our civilization which we are responsible for. The New World is the child of the Old. We are united by millions of family ties, which every law of nature forbids we should sever by narrow and arbitrary enactments of law. The hardships the foreigner must undergo in leaving his home and native land and fighting the battle of life after he gets here is in itself proof that he is good for something. We are not getting the most wealthy of Europe, but the most worthy—men of metal, men of grit and perseverance. The sturdy sons of northern Europe give strength and character to our citizenship, while southern Europe, the land of historic genius in painting, sculpture, music, literature, and philosophy, gives her best blood to the New World to make complete the foundations of a future civilization whose possibilities are beyoud the dreams of men. May we not hope that in this land, so richly endowed by Heaven and under a diviner democracy than any yet known to the children of men, the Old World may find its renovation in the New and the New gather inspiration from the Old? Patriotic, liberty-loving America of the future, the land that holds the hope of humanity, must answer this question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman from Alabama ready to go on?

Mr. BURNETT. Not now.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, in the majority report of the committee on this bill they say, "It will be seen that the main purpose of the bill is to exclude from the United States alien immigrants over 16 years of age who are unable to read their own language or dialect." This is hardly the fact. The real object of the bill is to stop, in part, the flow of immigrants to this country from Russia, Poland, Italy, Greece, and the other countries of the southern and eastern part of Europe.

It is certainly amusing to one who personally knows many of these people who have come from these countries to listen to some of the arguments which are made by gentlemen in support of this bill.

I represent more of these people than any other man upon this floor. I have more Poles in my district than there are in any other congressional district in the United States. I have more Italians in the district-from the south of Italy at that. I have most of the Greeks in our city. I have the Germans and the Irish. I have as many Jews as in any other district. In fact, I have a scattering of every nationality on the face of the earth. I know very few Americans in the district. in that district just as many schools, just as good colleges, just as magnificent churches as there are in any other congressional district, attended by just as law-abiding people as in any other section of the country. We have merchants there engaged in business, with beautiful stores, great business houses. We have immense manufacturing plants, comparing favorably with those of any other district. They are owned largely by these people. They have comfortable homes of their own there, wherein there is as much contentment and happiness as is found in any other district.

So I say it is amazing and surprising to listen to these people talk of improving conditions by shutting out a few people who can not read or write. We have people there who can not read or write but who have made just as much progress and are just as comfortably situated, and many of them have just as much money and are just as patriotic as they are in any other much money and are just as patriotic as they are in any other district. They are good citizens, who understand the duties, responsibilities, and privileges of citizenship under our form of government. Besides, we have a number of banks there, where the savings accounts of these thriving and industrious people will compare favorably with the deposits in other banks. the fact that a man can not read and write is no evidence of character. Because a man can not read and write is no reason that you are going to improve conditions by shutting him out. If you are going to shut out undesirable people, shut them out. Because a man is ground down to poverty and has not had an opportunity to improve himself, is it a crime? Many immigrants come from countries where public education is unknown. Does anybody believe that poverty is a crime? Still you would be led to believe so in listening to the speeches of the gentlemen in the interest of this bill. We have in our neighborhood children in the schools who are making as much progress as they are in any of the schools in this country. I have had the honor to serve on the board of education, in Chicago, for years. Our night schools are filled by immigrants, many of them men and women, striving to learn the English language—to read and write it.

In our colleges and universities their children are preparing for a life work in all the different professions, as well as in music, in art, and in the sciences. In the public life of our city, county, and State immigrants and the sons of immigrants can be found in offices of trust and responsibility, from the governor of our State down. Remove from this body the foreigner and his direct descendant and a quorum will not remain. Hull House and Chicago Commons, settlement houses, are great institutions that have no comparison. They are in my district, and they are doing a splendid work for the benefit of mankind. We have public playgrounds for our children in my district, with baths and athletic equipments of all kinds-none better in Do you wish to deprive them of the opportunities the world. so freely offered and so gladly enjoyed by them? We are producing a manhood that fears no race suicide.

I have seen Chicago grow from a quarter of a million to over two millions and a quarter in population. It is largely made up of people from every quarter of the globe. Does anybody believe that we have not as much progress, as much prosperity. and just as good citizenship in Chicago as they have in any other city in America? [Applause.] There is no man who visits that city, who knows its history and its possibilities, who does not feel proud of the progress that we have made. From a village on the prairie it has become a great metropolis within the memory of many now living and ranks fourth or fifth among the world's greatest cities. Many who were engaged in making my home city what it is were, no doubt, deprived of an opportunity for education in the country from which they came. still there are people here talking about undesirable citizens. One-third of the population of the United States is composed of immigrants or the sons of immigrants. The population west of the Mississippi River, take it in its entirety, would not compare with the immigration that has come here and made this country prosperous and the Nation what it is. I do not like the kind of argument made here. I do not believe there is any-thing in it. If you are going to shut out the characters that are undesirable, bring in legislation that will shut them out; but do not fool yourselves that this class of legislation is going to shut out undesirable citizens. Let me read for your benefit the views of the minority of your committee on this bill. They

The illiteracy test provided in the bill will not serve to keep out the viciously inclined, the criminal, or the otherwise really undesirable

viciously inclined, the criminal, or the otherwise reany undestrated allen.

Experience has demonstrated the fact that, with the educational facilities afforded in this land, thousands of illiterates who, unhappily, were denied educational opportunities in their native lands have learned to read and write here, and have shown an eagerness to acquire knowledge and fit themselves to become good citizens. It will also be noted that the exceptions provided in the bill are not broad enough to fully guard against the separation of families, though the majority of the committee admit that on humane and moral grounds separation of families should, as far as possible, be avoided and prevented. In our opinion the desirable immigrant is the healthy, law-abiding worker, who comes to this country in good faith, and the undesirable immigrant is the clever and educated schemer, who, immedately upon arrival, begins to find fault with our institutions.

You propose by this bill to prohibit the landing of immigrants who can not read or write. Let me ask, Where do you expect to obtain the help that is required to do the work that these men are now doing? With the tendency toward compulsory education and free textbooks, will our public-school system pre-pare our youth for such work? Will our graduates do it? Who will clean the streets of our cities, lay our sewers, and do such work? Will our graduates go to our mines or upon our farms? Will they build our railroads? Will they become domestic ser-Reports from the argicultural districts show that crops are rotting for want of men to gather them. Does the farmer's son stay on the farm? My observation is that he is anxious to live in our cities. When you look around for men to do the work that the immigrant now does you will find very few to do it if this bill becomes a law.

The foundation for our present Bureau of Immigration was an act approved July 4, 1864, a most fitting day, which itself suggests freedom to worthy and downtrodden human beings. It was introduced by Mr. Washburne, a Representative from my State, who served in this body for 16 years. He was a friend of Lincoln; also Secretary of State under Grant. President Lincoln, in his message to Congress, December 6, 1864, speaking in reference to this act that had for its object the encouragement

The act passed at the last session for the encouragement of immigration has, so far as was possible, been put in operation. It seems to need amendment which will enable the officers of the Government to prevent the practice of frauds against the immigrants while on their way and on their arrival in the ports, so as to secure them here a free choice of avocations and places of settlement. A liberal disposition toward this great national policy is manifested by most of the European States, and ought to be reciprocated on our part by giving the immigrants effective national protection. I regard our immigrants as one of the principal replemishing Streams which are appointed by providence to repair the bavages of internal war and its waste of national strength and health. All that is necessary is to secure the flow of that stream in its present fullness, and to that end the government must in every way make it manifest

THAT IT NEITHER NEEDS NOR DESIGNS TO IMPOSE INVOLUNTARY MILITARY SERVICE UPON THOSE WHO COME FROM OTHER LANDS TO CAST THEIR LOT IN OUR COUNTRY.—Abraham Lincoln,

It must be seen by observing people that the main purpose of this bill is not to exclude from the United States immigrants who are unable to read and write their language or dialect. It must be for some other purpose. It is said it will tend to improve labor conditions of this country. Will it be contended that the men advocating the passage of this bill on this floor are anxious to pass legislation that will benefit labor? "Beware of the Greeks bearing gifts." I have always endeavored to assist and aid labor on all occasions in securing legislation for shorter hours and for improving their conditions in general. I doubt if many of the people speaking in favor of this bill can sav as much.

Our immigrants are law-abiding citizens and just as loyal to our Government as any other people. They have taken part in our wars and have shown themselves to be as brave as the most gallant defenders of the Stars and Stripes. This is borne out by our country's history, and many of the monuments which serve to beautify our Capital City perpetuate their devotion to the cause of liberty and freedom.

They come here among us and they ask us to give them the same greeting as accorded other unfortunates who have come. They have joined with us to make this country free and independent, and have worked for the upbuilding, advancement, and general welfare of every part of our country. Let us still welcome them to our shores and extend to them the freedom we enjoy. The immigrants were with us in the Revolutionary War, the Civil War, and the War with Spain, and in the struggle that may yet come they will be found ready and willing to answer our country's call. [Applause.]
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill because I am opposed to any bill that will prevent the coming to this country of honest men who may from any cause be in the so-called ignorant class, but under which educated crooks of all kinds can come in without restriction.

Under this bill thieves, cutthroats, and blackmailers at heart who happen to thus far escape arrest or conviction, who have been lucky enough to keep out of the clutches of the law, can come in freely and without restriction of any sort, because forsooth they can read or write, but the poor honest fellow, who is good at heart and wants to come to be a law-abiding resident-and ultimately a citizen-here, as he has been in his native country, is kept out because, unfortunately, he can not stand the literacy test.

That sort of law is not American. It is not for the good of all or any of the people of this country. It is not in keeping with the spirit of those who gave their lives to free and later preserve the Union.

This Burnett bill excludes all aliens over 16 years of age who are unable to read English or the language or dialect of some other country, and permits an admissible alien to bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, his unmarried or widowed daughter whether able to read or not, and is therefore inconsistent.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] favors the bill or a restriction for a period of 10 years. He wants to keep the United States for the so-called Americans. If the United States were to depend for its increase of population upon the class or classes for whom he wishes to keep it, it would not be long before this great country would be showing a decrease in its population.

I have been waiting for the chairman of the committee and father of this bill and other advocates to say something about the effect of foreigners upon the labor situation. It is just as well they have not, in view of the fact that the worst enemy of organized labor is prison-contract competition, which has its highest exemplification in States from which some of the advocates of this bill come, and of which the ball and chain, the striped uniform, and the mounted guard are the badges.

There was a time in the history of this country, a time of dire distress, when men were needed to save it from enemies within and without. In the call to arms there was no prohibition because the volunteer could not stand a literacy test. was not asked if he could read or write. He was asked if he was loyal, if he was strong of heart and body, and if he could

There was no talk of restriction then; there should be none

This country is big enough for all who care to come and who are honest at heart. If perchance some get in who are bad at heart, who are undesirable, that is not a sufficient reason to pass a law that would exclude all who can not stand certain tests of education, no matter how honest they may be. the bad come if they can read.

Pass this bill and in due time will come its logical successorthe raising of the test until it will necessitate the possession of a university diploma to permit landing on these sacred

What do some of the leading men of our country think of this literacy test? Here is a brief extract from the report of Secretary Nagel, of the Department of Commerce and Labor:

I believe it is intended as a piece of legislation for wholesale exclusion, and I don't believe in that kind of legislation. If you want to exclude certain nationalities, say so, and meet the issue squarely. I don't believe literacy is a fair test for the admission of an immigrant. I will say again what I said a year ago, that I care more for the sound body and the sound mind, and the straight look out of the eye, and the ability and willingness to work, as a test than any other test that can be given.

In his veto message in 1897 President Cleveland said:

A radical departure from our national policy relating to immigration is here presented. Heretofore we have welcomed all who came to us from other lands, except those whose moral or physical condition or history threatened danger to our national welfare and safety. Relying upon the jealous watchfulness of our people to prevent injury to our political and social fabric, we have encouraged those coming from foreign countries to east their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

President-elect Wilson, writing to Dr. Adler, says:

* * I am in substantial agreement with you about the immigration policy which the country ought to observe. I think that this country can afford to use and ought to give opportunity to every man and woman of sound morals, sound mind, and sound body who comes in good faith to spend his or her energies in our life, and I should certainly be inclined, so far as I am concerned, to scrutinize very jealously any restrictions that would limit that principle in practice. * * *

Here is part of a great speech on this question by Hon. Bourke Cockran:

We who oppose the educational test believe the man who works with his hands, who is trained to efficiency in labor, is the desirable immigrant. The test that we wish to impose is one that will establish his ability and his willingness to work. * * There is not a vicious man in any community outside of the poorhouse that is not more or less educated. He can not live by his wits rather than by his hands unless those wits are trained to some extent. Any unlettered immigrant shows that he must have virtuous instincts by the very fact that he comes here, for he can have no other purpose than to support life by his toil. he comes h by his toil.

Among others who oppose this proposed legislation are Cardinal Gibbons; ex-President Eliot, of Harvard University; President Himmel, of Georgetown University; President Schurman, of Cornell University; United States Senator O'GORMAN, of New York; and United States Senator Stone, of Missouri. Many leading newspapers have pointed out the danger of this sort of restriction.

Restriction of time prevents me from further discussing this un-American bill. It is inherently wrong, because it keeps out good men and admits bad men to the benefits of our great country, that has long been considered the refuge of the wronged and oppressed of all nations, who are honest at heart and come here with high motives. It is not American; it is not demo-cratic, and should not be passed by a House that is supposed to represent the truest Democracy.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of those who wish to be heard in opposition to the bill, I desire to say that there will not be sufficient time within the limit fixed by the rule for all to be recognized, but I think it is fair to announce that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Berger], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham], the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Dyer], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Murray], gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Th.son], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Scully], and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Lobeck] all would have spoken in opposition to the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] proposes to make a motion.

Mr. BURNETT. What was the statement of the gentleman about the gentlemen he has mentioned?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I stated that they all desired to be heard in opposition to the bill, and that they would not have an opportunity in view of the time fixed by the rule.

Mr. BURNETT. Is your request to extend remarks?
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; I made no request for them. I announced that they desired to be heard, but would not have an opportunity under the limitation of time fixed by the rule.

Mr. BURNETT. All right. Will the gentlemen proceed now? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman wishes to All right. Will the gentlemen proceed now?

make a motion— Mr. BURNETT. How much time is there left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] 15 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, then I will ask the gentleman if he intends to conclude the general debate to-night's

Mr. BURNETT. As we have to go over to another day, I think we might as well conclude now.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A motion to rise now would be entirely satisfactory to this side.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I could not quite understand the colloquy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time for debate continues to run while this is going on.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hay, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3175, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," and had come to no resolution thereon.

IMMIGRATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record, following this debate to-day, the bill H. R. 13500, relating to immigration. That bill will be discussed when the present bill on immigration is discussed under the five-minute rule, and I desire it should be printed in order that the matter may then be before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13500) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask what the request

The SPEAKER. The request is that the bill H. R. 13500 be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RAKER. It is in relation to Asiatic immigration and the rules and regulations covering the admission of that kind of immigrants.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if it is his intention to offer the provisions of that bill as an amendment to the House substitute for the bill now under consideration?

That is my purpose, if I can get the recogni-Mr. RAKER.

I shall not object. Mr. MANN.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] if he thinks that would be germane?

Mr. MANN. I have not examined it. It will be printed in

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Following is the bill referred to:

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken or who will speak on this immigration bill may have five legislative days in which to print their remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak on the immigration bill shall have five legislative days after the disposition of the bill by the House in which to extend their remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think a request of that kind ought properly to come after the consideration of the bill is concluded, and for the present I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object? Mr. MANN. I just stated that I did.

DECEMBER SALARIES, HOUSE AND SENATE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the Speaker lay before the House Senate joint resolution 144, to pay the employees of the House and Senate their December salaries on the day of adjournment for the holiday recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House Senate joint resolution 144, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 144) authorizing payment of December salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment for the holiday recess.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, borne on the annual and session rolls, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1912, on the day of adjournment for the holiday recess; and that the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized to pay on the said day Members and Delegates their allowance for clerk hire for the said month of December.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to ask the gentleman from New York if it is customary for this resolution to emanate in the Senate?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It usually originates in the House. Mr. MANN. I thought that was one of the prerogatives of the House

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not an appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I understand; and lots of others are not. I shall not object. Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not think it worth while to raise that objection. Mr. MANN. If I were in the gentleman's place I would raise it. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Fitzgerald, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will this bill or the ordinary Monday business have the right of way on Monday, in the opinion of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. The Unanimous Consent Calendar, suspension of the rules, and the Discharge Calendar will have the right of way on Monday.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 16, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. PAGE. I am compelled to announce the continued illness of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and his necessary absence from the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present, The Chair will ask the Secretary to read an extract from the Journal of the Senate.

The Secretary read from the Journal of the Senate of Thursday, May 11, 1911, as follows:

day, May 11, 1911, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lodge in the chair) called the attention of the Senate to the fact that, having been called to the chair by the Vice President before the Senate had proceeded to the election of a President of the Senate pro tempore, he did not under clause 2 of Rule I of the Senate have the right to occupy the chair at this time. On motion by Mr. Balley and by unanimous consent, Ordered, That clause 2 of Rule I of the standing rules of the Senate be suspended, and that the present occupant of the chair should preside during the election of a President of the Senate pro tempore.

On motion by Mr. Shively, and by unanimous consent, Ordered. That clause 2 of Rule I of the standing rules of the Senate be suspended, and that the present occupant of the chair preside during the proceedings connected with the election of a President of the Senate pro tempore.

Whereupon.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Lodge in the chair) directed the roll to be called. (Senate Journal, May II, 1911.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The entry of May 15, 1911, will be read.

the Congressional Record, page 1204, are as follows:

The President Officer. The Senate will proceed to the election of a President pro tempore.

The Chair desires to say, before action is taken, that on Thursday last the Senate, by unanimous consent, suspended clause 2 of Rule I, which provides that the Secretary shall take the chair pending the election of a President pro tempore, and continued in the chair its present occupant. Whether that action was intended to be continuous, covering all proceedings connected with the election of a President protempore, or was for that day only, it is not for the Chair to determine. It is for the Senate to determine that question before we proceed further.

mine. It is for the Senate to determine that question before we proceed further.

Mr. Shively, I ask unanimous consent that clause 2 of Rule I be suspended and that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] occupy the chair during the proceedings to elect a President pro tempore.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from Indiana moves that the present occupant of the chair continue to occupy it during the proceedings—

Mr. Shively. If the Chair please, I made no motion. I asked unanimous consent.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that clause 2 of Rule I be suspended, and that the present occupant of the chair continue to occupy it during the proceedings connected with the election of a President pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. (Proceedings of Senate, May 15, 1911.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Acting under that resolution, as the term for which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] was chosen President pro tempore has expired, the present occupant of the chair has called the Senate to order for the purpose of choosing a President pro tempore.

Mr. SMOOT. On Saturday, December 14, I offered an order and asked for its immediate consideration—

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BRISTOW. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, The Senator from Kansas will state it.

Mr. BRISTOW. There is no business in order except to proceed by ballot to elect a President pro tempore under the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked on Saturday that the order might lie on the table, and now I ask that it be presented to the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. I make the point of order that that is not in order until a President pro tempore has been elected, and the way to elect a President pro tempore under the rule is by ballot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator read the rule?

Mr. BRISTOW. Page 84, Jefferson's Manual:

In the Senate a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice President, is proposed and chosen by ballot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first rule of the Senate states that the Senate shall choose its Presiding Officer, which is the language of the Constitution. No method is stated either in the rule or in the Constitution as to the manner in which the Senate shall choose. In the opinion of the Chair the Senate may choose by ballot, by calling the roll, or by resolution, and the last course has been followed over and over again. Secretary will read the resolution offered by the Senator from

The Secretary read the order submitted by Mr. Smoot on the 14th instant, as follows:

14th instant, as follows:

Ordered, That Jacob H. Gallinger, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including December 16, 1912, to and including January 4, 1913; that Augustus O. Bacon, a Senator from the State of Georgia, be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including January 5, 1913, to and including January 18, 1913; that Jacob H. Gallinger be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including January 19, 1913, to and including February 1, 1913; that Augustus O. Bacon be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including February 2, 1913, to and including February 15, 1913; and that Jacob H. Gallinger be, and he hereby is, elected President of the Senate pro tempore to hold and exercise the office from and including February 16, 1913, to and including March 3, 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the ador-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask for a roll call on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and mays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Davis] and will withhold my vote.

Mr. LEA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Lippitt] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. OLIVER (when Mr. Penrose's name was called). My colleague [Mr. Penrose] is detained from the Senate to-day by important business in Pennsylvania. He is paired with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams].

Mr. POINDEXTER (when his name was called). I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether or not it is in order to cast a vote for some other person than one named in the resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not on this question. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A further inquiry. Does not that deprive the Senate of the privilege of voting by ballot for the presiding officer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution. The Chair thinks nothing else is in

Mr. POINDEXTER. I vote "nay" on the resolution.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. Warren's name was called). My colleague [Mr. Warren] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON (when Mr. Watson's name was called). My colleague [Mr. Watson] is absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs].

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], but I am informed by his colleague that if he were present he would vote " yea." I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULBERSON. I note the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Du Pont], with whom I have a general pair. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to state on behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] that he is absent now, and has been for two weeks, on business of the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to inquire if the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. MYERS. Then I announce that I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] and withhold my

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to inquire if the Senator from

New Mexico [Mr. Fall] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] has not voted.

Mr. BRYAN. I am paired with that Senator, but I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea.' Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GARDNER] is necessarily absent from the Senate and that he has a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Crane].

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Bradley] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Kern]; that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Warson]; that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Carbon] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Shively]; and that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson].

The result was announced-yeas 51, nays 18, as follows:

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, which was approved.

PRESIDING OFFICER FOR IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, for reasons sufficient to the Chair, the Chair begs to be relieved from the duty of presiding over the Senate while it sits as a Court of Impeachment in the trial of Robert W. Archbald, and asks that the Senate shall select a Senator to preside over such proceedings.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in view of the statement just made to the Senate by the President pro tempore, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 409) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows .

Resolved, That the Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, be, and he is hereby, appointed to preside during the trial of the impeachment of Robert W. Archbald, circuit judge of the United States.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. SMOOT submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 410), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected Jacob H. ANNUAL REPORT OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 946).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the Twenty-sixth Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

DEMOTION OF WILLIAM HALL AND OTHERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General, stating, in response to Senate resolution of December 4, 1912, calling for the correspondence in the possession of the Post Office Department relative to the demotion of William Hall, C. H. Erwin, J. J. Negley, and C. P. Rodman, clerks in the Railway Mail Service, that the papers will be furnished at the earliest date practicable, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 144) authorizing the payment of December salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment for the holiday recess.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the city council of Boston, Mass., relative to the high price of coal, which were referred to the Committee on Education

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Kenyon-Sheppard interstate liquor bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram, which is one of many I have received bearing upon the same subject. I ask that it be read for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Lansing, Mich., December 14, 1912.

Hon. WM. ALDEN SMITH, United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

At a conference of committee representing the following State organizations—Michigan State Sunday School Association, Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Anti-Saloon League, and State prohibition committee—held in Battle Creek December 9, the following action was taken:

Resolved, We request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote for the passage of the Kenyon interstate liquor shipment bill.

E. K. Wareen, Chairman.
F. W. Coreat, Secretary.

Mr. SANDERS. I offer resolutions passed at a meeting of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union on December 15, with the request that they be read and printed in the Record. There being no objection, the resolutions were read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolutions passed at a meeting of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, December 15, 1912:

Whereas the shipment of alcoholic liquors into prohibition States to be sold contrary to the laws of those States is the greatest hindrance to the enforcement of the prohibitory law; and

Whereas it is manifestly wrong for out-of-State liquor makers and liquor sellers to have the protection of Federal law in sending alcoholic liquors into States to be sold contrary to law:

Resolved, That we respectfully petition the United States Congress to pass the amended Kenyon bill or some similar measure.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have a very large number of petitions in favor of the passage of the Kenyon-Sheppard bill. Several thousand citizens of Kansas petition for it. I will not ask to have them read, but that they be noted and filed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The petitions are as follows:

From sundry citizens of Monument, Arkansas City, Holton, Winona, Lebanon, Norton, Scott City, Sylvia, Ransom, Graham County, Wichita, Agra, Hoxie, Muscotah, Hill City, Potwin, Atchison, Utica, Glade, Mankato, Harvey, Sedgwick, Wellington, Ozawkie, and Osage City, all in the State of Kansas.

Mr. GRONNA. I have received a large number of petitions and resolutions signed by citizens of my State for the passage of the so-called amended Kenyon bill. I will not ask to have the petitions read, as they all bear on the same subject matter. I ask, however, that the heading of one of the petitions be embodied in the Record and that the remainder be appropriately

There being no objection, the petitions were ordered to lie on the table, and the heading of one of the petitions was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Hon. A. J. Gronna, United States Senate, Washington, D. C .:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The undersigned, citizens and residents of the State of North Dakota, realizing the evil effects of the liquor traffic and the difficulty of enforcing the prohibition law of this State under the present interstate-commerce law, earnestly request you, as our representative, to use all legitimate means within your power to secure the passage of the bill known as the amended Kenyon bill, No. 4043, which will come up in the United States Senate on December 16 next.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have sent for some petitions in behalf of the Kenyon-Sheppard liquor bill, which I desire to have noted and filed as soon as I can get them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Permission is granted.
Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, as I understand the rule, either petitions or private claims bills may be filed with the Secretary at any time during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They can be filed with the Secretary under the rule.

Mr. CLAPP. And they do not have to be presented in open ssion' The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of the Michigan State Sunday School Association, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of the Antisaloon League, and of the State Prohibition committee, of Lansing; of the congregation of the First United Brethren Church of Grand Rapids; of the Christian Endeavor Union of Detroit; of the board of directors of

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CHILTON (for Mr. WATSON) submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. REED submitted 42 amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

*AMENDMENTS TO THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of certain employees in the office of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati, Ohio, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be

JOHN W. CUPP.

Mr. CLAPP. On July 16 last the bill (S. 3159) for the relief of John W. Cupp was reported adversely from the Committee on Claims, and it was postponed indefinitely. But I understand, in talking with members of the committee, that possibly it was inadvertently done. Therefore, notwithstanding the adverse report, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely, and I move that the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit to the clerk of the Committee on Claims the papers in connection with it, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the action of the Senate indefinitely postponing the bill will be reconsidered and the request of the Senator from Minnesota will be complied with.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday, immediately after the morning business, with the consent of the Senate, I desire to address the Senate upon the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the land-grant colleges in the several States.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR TAYLOR.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Friday, February 7, 1913, I will ask that the business of the Senate may be suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to the memory of my late colleague, Robert Love Taylor.

PROCEDURE IN IMPEACHMENT TRIALS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 412) as follows:

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 412) as follows:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate is instructed to prepare and report to the Senate such amendments and additions to the rules for impeachment trials as are necessary and appropriate to provide that in all impeachment cases hereafter instituted, except when the President or Vice President of the United States, a member of the Cabinet, or a member of the Supreme Court of the United States is impeached, the testimony may be taken by the Judiciary Committee and together with findings of fact reported to the Senate for its consideration and judgment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the provision of the Constitution with reference to impeachment is as follows:

The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose, they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law.

That is the only provision of the Constitution with reference to the functions of the Senate in trying impeacherence to the functions of the Senate in trying impeachment cases. I see no reason why the Senate may not take testimony as testimony is taken by a court of equity, for example, by reference, in the case of a court of equity, to a master, and in the case of the Senate by reference to a special committee or to a standing committee. I think it is very desirable that that course should be followed in the future, extended the state of the standard of the standar cept where the high officers named in the resolution should be involved.

The Senate has been occupied in the present trial for two or three weeks. Its time has been taken away from the important business of the Senate. Many of the Senators could not be present to hear the testimony, and of necessity they are obliged to read it before they can act. The same result, it seems to me, would be obtained by referring the case in the first instance to the Judiciary Committee to take the testimony and report it to the Senate. Of course, the findings of fact which might be presented by the Judiciary Committee would only be advisory, and not binding on the Senate.

I have not been able to find any discussion on the subject except what is very briefly said in Jefferson's Manual, at page 153 of the Senate Manual. Speaking of the practice of the British Parliament in this respect, under the head of "Witnesses," it is said:

The practice is to swear the witnesses in open House, and then examine them there; or a committee may be named who shall examine them in committee, either on interrogatories agreed on in the House or such as the committee in their discretion shall demand.

I ask that the resolution be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before the resolution is referred, I want to express the hope that it will never be adopted. In the first place, a proceeding of that kind would utterly fail to impress the country, and it would degenerate into something like a contested-election case. I indulge the hope—and I think that hope is justified by the history of the country—that impeachment trials will not become frequent enough to seriously interfere with the Senate in the discharge of its ordinary duties. But when a President or Vice President or a civil officer of the United States is impeached by the House of Representatives, I think the inquest held by this body should be as solemn and impressive as possible, and I believe the open Senate—sitting, if you please, as a Court of Impeachment—is the place where every witness should be heard. To send the witnesses in a matter of this dignity to the privacy of a com-mittee room is to make the proceeding less impressive than it ought to be, and, in my opinion, it would give some ground, now and then, for people to allege that the proceedings were not as fair and not as open as the nature of the proceedings

I sympathize with the desire of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND to save the time of the Senate; but I do not myself know how the Senate could better spend its time than in trying a case like this. It is one of the duties devolved upon us by the Constitution, and it is one of the most solemn which we can perform. I hope we will never commit the most important part of it to any committee of this body.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask what disposition is to be made of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah made the request that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee. That will be done, without objection. The resolution will go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. REED subsequently said: I ask for another reading of the resolution offered by the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection the resolution will again be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate is instructed to prepare and report to the Senate such amendments and additions to the rules for impeachment trials as are necessary and appropriate to provide that in all impeachment cases hereafter instituted, except when the President or Vice President of the United States, a member of the Cabinet, or a member of the Supreme Court of the United States is impeached, the testimony may be taken by the Judiciary Committee and, together with findings of fact, reported to the Senate for its consideration and judgment. sideration and judgment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, as a matter of information, I wish to inquire whether it was the purpose of the Senator from Utah to have a rule reported making it obligatory that these proceedings should go to the Judiciary Committee, or simply to have a rule drafted which would permit such reference by a vote of the Senate?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the resolution probably would be construed as directing an obligatory rule. myself it ought to be a permissive rule, that the Senate may do it in any particular case. However, if the rule should be obligatory, the Senate, of course, could at any time suspend it and try any particular case without referring it to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. REED. I have simply this suggestion to make: It seems to me it would be better to have that rule, if it is reported, so drawn that proceedings of this nature should not go to a committee except by an order of the Senate, leaving, at least in some form, a discretion in the Senate that could be exercised without repealing the rule.

I think there is a great deal of wisdom in the proposition advanced by the Senator from Utah, but I think the modification I have suggested or something of that nature ought to be embodied in it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator from Utah that there ought to be a change in the phraseology of one part of his resolution. I do not discuss in any manner now the question as to the propriety of the resolution, but the propriety of a change is because there is no such officer known to our law as a Cabinet officer. The designation of the officer as a Cabinet officer can not be found in the law, and could not be created as such by Congress, because Congress could not impose upon the President the selection of those whom he will choose to be his advisers. He has chosen voluntarily without any statute to have the heads of the departments as his constitutional advisers. They are constitutional only in the sense that the Constitution says he may require services at the hands of the heads of departments in the giving of information, and so These gentlemen are heads of departments, and the phraseology of the resolution, it seems to me, should be changed to conform thereto.

There is in other countries a similar body, which is in either of those countries in fact a cabinet. Such cabinets are in fact the ruling influences of the governmental affairs of the country, the executive being merely nominal. It is different with us. The Executive here is an actual Executive, and these are his advisers simply, and we call them Cabinet officers merely by courtesy. It is well recognized who they are when we speak of them as such, and there is no impropriety in speaking of them as such as a matter of courtesy; but in a legal document, especially one that seeks to prescribe the method by which impeachment proceedings should be taken against them, we should be accurate. It seems to me the only proper phraseology there would be to use the words "heads of departments" instead of Cabinet officers

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am well aware of the correctness of what the Senator from Georgia says. The law designates the so-called Cabinet officers as heads of departments. I have chosen in the resolution, which, of course, is not a rule, but simply a direction to the Judiciary Committee to prepare a walls to use the town by which they are normally known rather. rule, to use the term by which they are popularly known rather than the name by which they are legally known, and I take it the Judiciary Committee will have no difficulty in understanding what is meant.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Utah, referring to the future conduct of impeachment proceedings, be read again to the Senate. There are many who, like myself, do not understand what its effect would be if adopted.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa rises to a question of order. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KENYON. It is that this debate is not in order as a part of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent, the resolution having been referred.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the special order of the Senate the consideration of the bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases will be proceeded with. The bill will be read.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

sider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enocted, etc., That the shipment or transportation in any manner or by any means whatsoever of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, including beer, ale, or wine, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof into any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, directly or indirectly, or in any manner connected with the transaction, to be received, possessed, or kept, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State. Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, enacted in the exercise of the police powers of such State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Mr. SANDERS, Mr. President, Senate bill 4043, entitled

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, Senate bill 4043, entitled "A bill to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases," stripped of its verbiage, would read:

Be it enacted. That the shipment of intoxicating liquor from one State into any other State by any person, to be received or used in violation of any law of such State, is hereby prohibited.

Sec. 2. That all intoxicating liquors transported into any State shall, upon arrival within the boundaries of such State and before delivery to the consignee, be subject to the operation of the laws of such State.

This bill relates to nothing but the shipment of intoxicating liquors from one State into another State where it is to be sold in violation of State laws concerning same.

It does not relate to the personal use of liquor. The personalliberty cry does not therefore properly come into this discussion. With only a few exceptions, none of the States have yet attempted to prohibit the drinking of liquor, and it is not the intention of the advocates of this bill to ask the Federal Government to take such action in advance of the States.

Parts of States to which State prohibition laws do not apply, commonly known as "wet territory," are not affected by this bill.

The disposition of the States to limit or prohibit the sale of liquors is so general that the question can not be considered a sectional or local matter. Every State has more or less territory where the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited. This is commonly known as "dry territory."

Eight States have State-wide prohibition. Only six States have more wet than dry territory. These wet and dry States are scattered over the entire country.

As an evidence of the demand for such legislation, it is sufficient to call attention to the fact that 71 per cent of the area of the United States is now under State prohibition laws, and by the further fact that a majority of all the people of the United States live in dry territory.

The evils attending the use of intoxicating liquors are so well known and so generally admitted that nothing need be said on that part of the subject in the consideration of this bill.

The State I have the honor to represent is perhaps a fair example of the various States to which this bill applies is a greater or less degree. It has a State-wide law against the sale of intoxicating liquors to persons within the State. These laws are enforced in most of the counties fairly well, but are violated in the many counties, especially those having large cities, on account of the corrupting influence of the large number of mail-order liquor houses in these cities, which are in the alleged business of selling to persons in other States. The violations of the law over the State are almost all by keepers of soft-drink stands, hotels, boarding houses, restaurants, livery stables, and bawdyhouses. To these are to be added the bootlegger class, made up of loafers and other like characters.

The centers of liquor distribution were originally the saloons. They, with their attending cvils, have been banished from the larger part of the country. But with their going there has grown up what is known as the "mail-order liquor business." This is even more insidious than the saloons. It came as an afterthought.

Persons who were formerly in the saloon business in one capacity or another are now running mail-order houses or are engaged in the unlawful sale of liquor as described. The supply of liquor for almost all this business is traceable to the interstate shipment of liquor for sale in violation of the State law.

Persons in this business seek opportune times for getting liquor from the express offices, and secrete it in all manner of ways, then sell it clandestinely, making it exceedingly difficult for State officials to enforce the State laws. Under the present Federal laws this liquor is not subject to the State laws until it is delivered to the consignee, and there is, therefore, no opportunity for its detention while in transit after it comes into the State or while it is in the express office awaiting delivery.

In smaller towns numbers of persons order whisky by mail from outside of Tennessee and have it shipped to themselves in small quantities by express. The large mail-order whisky houses flood the State with their advertising matter for the purpose of getting this trade. The various wholesale liquor dealers who ship into Tennessee keep traveling representatives in the State, who visit the dealers and bootleggers and take orders from them for whisky. These orders are transmitted by the agent to his house, and the goods are shipped directly to the person ordering the same. The agent collects from the purchaser at such times as they may agree upon.

The quality of liquors sold in Tennessee at this time is genbelow the standard. Large quantities of high-proof spirits are shipped into the State, which are taken by the various rectifiers and reduced in proof and, in most instances, foreign substances are added, rendering the whisky inferior in quality and frequently deleterious to the consumer, physically and mentally. This is done because of the large increase in quantity secured thereby, which largely increases the profit. The States are not able to protect their people from fraud and imposition of this kind.

I suppose no one will say that intoxicating liquors should be sold to minors. The States all have laws against such sale. Minors are not allowed in saloons. The mail-order liquor houses send their advertising matter to minors, and in this way minors everywhere are led to buy liquor. On account of this children come out from under the restraint and protection of the law and practically from under parental restraint.

This mail-order business goes on all over the country. example of its volume is found in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, opinion No. 1596, as to the business of this kind in the Southern States, showing a total sale of more than 6,000,000 gallons annually. This would indicate that more than 6,000,000 gallons annually. This would indicate that the total of this mail-order liquor business for the whole United States is about 20,000,000 gallons per annum.

I now read from the report:

I now read from the report:

The mail-order business in packages of liquor in this country had its beginning about a quarter of a century ago. At that time it was of small proportions, very few packages being shipped, and those only to short distances. It was the spread of the prohibition movement that gave vitality to this character of traffic in liquor. Local option first drove the dealers from the localities where they had carried on a retail business to settle on the outskirts of the proscribed territory and ship liquor into it. As the prohibitive area spread the shippers were driven farther and farther back, but their business became more extended in the territory covered and larger in the volume of traffic. With Statewide prohibition came the interstate traffic in liquor. The decision of the Supreme Court that this traffic was interstate and, therefore, superior to interference by the State governments gave the industry a tremendous impetus and established the express companies as the carriers of practically the whole of this traffic.

The proportions of the business throughout the country at the present time can not be estimated with any degree of accuracy, but figures presented by the Southern Express Co. may be made the basis of a fair approximation. Jacksonville, Fla., probably the largest shipping point for liquor in the South, sends out between three and four thousand packages of 1 or 2 gallons daily, or a total of about one and one-half million gallons a year. Chattanooga ships about 786,000 gallons; Richmond, 546,720 gallons; Petersburg, 268,128 gallons; Pensacola, 267,760 gallons; New Orleans, 255,856 gallons;

Augusta, 215,150 gallons; and Norfolk, Va.; Cairo, Ill.; Emporia, Va.; Louisville, Ky.; Portsmouth, Va.; Roanoke, Va.; and Savannah, Ga., ship more than 100,000 gallons each annually.

This report also states:

This report also states:

These packages are sent express, charges paid, direct to the consumers on orders, in most cases, paid for in advance of shipment. The movement is much more active in the South than in other sections of the country, partly because of the extent of the prohibition territory in that section, partly because of the large quantities of very cheap whisky manufactured and shipped there for the consumption of the negro population. While it is not the function of this commission to be influenced in its conclusions by the moral aspect of the question, it is impossible not to recognize in this traffic one of the important factors in the race problem of the South—the evil splirit back of that problem in more ways than one. Generally speaking, the evidence presented at these hearings went to show a distinct cleavage in the industry; in the West a high grade of liquor was shipped and a better clientele appealed to; in the South both whisky and consumers were on a considerably lower grade.

The following lefter, received from the largest mail-order

The following letter, received from the largest mail-order liquor house in Chattanooga, is an acknowledgment of the fact that they know themselves to be shipping liquor into other States, to be sold in violation of the laws of such States. It also shows the extent of this pernicious business:

Allow me to write you in behalf of our business: Chattanooga is the second largest mail-order whisky center in the South, and if the Kenyon bill passes the House, which comes up before the Senate December 16, it means that our business will practically be destroyed, and I am writing to ask that you carefully consider this matter.

We certainly will appreciate anything that you can do for us, and with best wishes I remain,

Yours, very truly,

P. S.—We have 150 white employees here in our store in Chatta-nooga. This will give you some idea of the magnitude of the mall-order business out of Chattanooga.

The sale of pistols is prohibited by every State, but mail-order houses sell and ship them into every State in the same way as intoxicating liquors, and not infrequently a man orders them by the same mail, receives both by the same express, and a homicide follows.

I notice with great satisfaction that in the parcel-post regulations just issued both whisky and pistols are declared non-mailable

This bill is not all that is wished by the temperance people of the country. It only stops the business of selling liquor within dry territory by persons outside that territory in violation of law. The evil of interstate sales to consumers yet remains. When it is remembered that the Federal Government can absolutely prohibit all interstate shipments of liquor the liquor manufacturers and dealers should be gratified that the more advanced proposition of prohibiting the interstate shipments of liquor to consumers is not in this bill.

If a mail-order man feels aggrieved he has his remedy. He can require cash in advance for both the price of the liquor and the freight on same. Then he is in no danger of loss by reason of the intent of the consignees being of an unlawful nature.

As it is now no person in Tennessee can lawfully sell intoxicating liquor in Tennessee, but a person in Kentucky can sell in Tennessee. Should a citizen of Kentucky have more rights in Tennessee than a citizen of Tennessee? No man should have the personal liberty of violating the laws of any State.

As it is a State can protect its citizens against one another, but not against outsiders. A State can regulate the quality of liquor sold within the State, but it can not regulate the quality of liquor sold from outside the State.

It is the moral duty of the Federal Government to protect the States in the enforcement of their laws. There is here an invasion of State rights and a helplessness of States to protect themselves. They must therefore look to the National Government for relief. That is the object of this bill.

A Senator from New York once said:

No man can overestimate the importance of maintaining each and every one of the sovereignties of the States, and no one can overestimate the importance of maintaining the sovereignty of the Nation.

Applying this statement to the matter under discussion, I wish to add, the sovereignty of the Nation is invoked to maintain the sovereignty of the States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to meet a condition. The condition is of the same character as that which necessitated and brought about the enactment of the pure food and drug law. The statutes of practically every State in the Union contained enactments designed to protect the people of such States against fraudulent, adulterated, misbranded, or deleterious foods and drugs. The purposes of each State law were broad and comprehensive, and had it not been for certain Federal interference would have been sufficient to accord proper protection to the people of such State.

The construction of the interstate-commerce clause Constitution to the effect that the jurisdiction of the Federal Government over an article entering into interstate commerce continued, not only until the article had been received by the consignee, but also until it had actually passed out of his hands and mingled with the mass of the property of the State, rendered the State law ineffective as a preventive measure. The law could punish the innocent retail merchant but could not prevent the commission of the offense, nor reach the source of the evil, the manufacturer, in another State. The greater proportion of all food and drug products were consumed in States other than that in which they were manufactured. They came from the factory often adulterated, often mislabeled, and were quite often deleterious to health.

The retail merchant had a right to assume, when he ordered a few hundred dollars' worth of maple sirup, and when it came to him marked "Pure Vermont Maple Syrup," that he was receiving just what he ordered and not colored and flavored glucose. The State could with very little grace impose a fine upon an innocent retailer and make him suffer for an offense committed by another upon him. Nor did this vicarious punishment in any way remedy the wrong which had been perpetrated upon the consumer. It was impossible for the State authorities to watch every train at every station within its borders every day in the year to ascertain what goods were being imported into the State which were condemned by their laws. The condition demanded a remedy. The pure-food law was introduced and passed to meet the condition. It has been eminently successful.

When I drafted the bill which became the final law with almost no change, I did not draft it along the lines of this bill to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases. I had examined the authorities governing the question which had been decided at that time, and I believed that a proposal that the articles should become subjected to the police powers of a State the moment they crossed the line and before they reached the hands of the consumer of doubtful constitutionality. At that time the courts had gone so far as to hold in the Leisy against Hardin case, One hundred and thirty-fifth United States, that the power of Congress over interstate commerce extended not only from the time the consignor began to ship the goods to the time of their delivery, but also followed them in the original packages until they had passed by sale out of the hands of the consignee.

Nor did those who supported the pure-food act feel entirely safe at that time in being able to meet the claim that it would be a delegation of congressional power to authorize the divers State laws to lay hold upon an article of interstate commerce the moment it crossed a State line.

There was what we considered a much safer, if not sounder, foundation for a Government law which should meet the necessities of that situation. It had been held in many cases that the power of Congress over interstate commerce was exactly of the same character and potency as the power of Congress over foreign commerce; that under the authority of Congress to regulate and control foreign commerce Congress had again and again enacted legislation which absolutely prohibited certain kinds of goods from entering into commerce. The courts had clearly established the doctrine that the right to regulate commerce carries with it in proper cases the right to prohibit commerce. The lottery case had already been decided, One hundred and eighty-eighth United States, page 321.

In this case the court say:

If lottery traffic carried on through interstate commerce is a matter of which Congress may take cognizance and over which its power may be exercised, can it be possible that it must tolerate the traffic and simply regulate the manner in which it may be carried on? Or may not Congress, for the protection of the people of all the States under the power to regulate commerce, devise such means within the scope of the Constitution and not prohibited by it as will drive that traffic out of commerce among the States?

The court decided that Congress had such power, that it could so outlaw a commodity for the protection of the people of all the States.

Justice Harlan in that case states:

What clause (in the Constitution) can be cited which in any degree countenances the suggestion that one may of right carry or cause to be carried from one State to another that which will harm the public more or less? * * Surely it will not be said to be a part of any one's liberty, as recognized by the supreme law of the land, that he shall be allowed to introduce into commerce among the States an element that will be confessedly injurious to public morals.

Again:

As a State may, for the purpose of guarding the morals of its own people, prohibit all sales of lottery tickets within its limits, so Congress, for the purpose of guarding the people of the United States against the widespread pestilence of lotteries, and to protect the commerce which concerns all the States, may prohibit the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will allow the interruption at this time, but I wish to close before half past 1, and therefore I may not be able to yield to all interruptions.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator said a moment ago, as I understood him, that the power to regulate interstate commerce is of the same potency as the power to regulate foreign commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the statement, Mr. President.

Mr. SUTHERIAND. Does not the Senator recognize that while the language of the constitutional provision with reference to interstate and foreign commerce is the same the objects to which the language is directed are different; that the Government of the United States in dealing with a foreign nation deals in its sovereign capacity; that it may absolutely prohibit the importation of any goods from foreign countries or from any particular foreign country, but that it could not, it seems to me—I ask the Senator his view of it—absolutely prohibit the transmission of all goods from one particular State to another particular State?

Mr. McCUMBER. Congress may prohibit importations or fix any condition upon any foreign importations. The power of Congress over interstate commerce, as over foreign commerce, is plenary, is full and complete; and while Congress may not, and I have not claimed it is necessary that Congress may prohibit commerce in any and all things, there are certain things in which, exercising its plenary power, it may prohibit to enter interstate commerce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Congress may pass an embargo against the importation of all goods from France to this country, but does the Senator think that Congress can pass a law putting an embargo upon all goods from New York to any other State?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not by any means, as I will show before I get through; but Congress can prohibit some things from entering into interstate commerce, and intoxicating liquors is one of the things.

We were able to apply this reasoning directly to the pure food and drug act. No citizen had a right under the Constitution to use the channels of commerce to deceive or injure others. That will apply to this case. He had no inherent right to defraud the people of another State by selling to its citizens an article, which was falsely labeled or adulterated, for the genuine article.

And so we invoked the inherent power of Congress to prohibit entirely interstate commerce in any article designed or calculated to deceive. We held that Congress had the power to prevent the citizens of one State from perpetrating a fraud upon either the pocketbook or the stomach of the citizens of another State. This wholesome law has been upheld by the courts.

Mr. President, I have read over most hurriedly the legal arguments both pro and con given before the Committee on Interstate Commerce. To understand the force of those arguments one must understand the purpose of the bill and what condition it is sought to meet. The condition is almost the same as that which presented itself as the reason for the purefood and drug act, except that in the latter case the law was designed to protect the citizens of one State against the unlawful, fraudulent act of a citizen of another State, while in the present case the design of the law is to protect the citizens of a State against the crimes and unlawful acts of its own citizens, committed in conjunction with citizens of another State. The desire of the State is not alone to punish for the offense of the illegal sale of liquor, but to prevent the illegal sale. It has been found impossible to effectively enforce the prohibition laws of a State if the State is compelled to await its action until the offense prohibited has been committed, the property sold and mingled in the mass of the property of the State. The State seeks to reach the property before it has reached the hands of the consumer—to reach it in bulk. It desires to issue its process against the property itself and to determine beforehand whether or not it is there for an unlawful purpose; and if so, to enjoin that purpose-to proceed against it by an action in rem and condemn it as a nuisance.

This bill is not a bill to prevent interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors. The State of North Dakota is a prohibition State, made so under its constitution. So long as that law remains a law of the State of North Dakota it is my duty as a Representative of that State to assist in the enforcement of that law and to assist in the enactment of any legislation by the Federal Government which is necessary for the State to enforce its police powers. I say our State is a prohibition State; but it is prohibition only in the sense that it prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. It prevents no man and no family from importing any liquors and consuming them in the home or elsewhere. It is not aimed at the right to consume liquor, but is leveled against the open saloon. This law will not affect the importation of intoxicating liquors into the State to be used as they always have been used since we became a State. Its only effect will be to assist the officials of the State in enforcing the prohibition law against blind piggism, bootlegging, and so forth.

For the same reason that the State laws were ineffective to prevent a contemplated breach of them and called for a Federal pure-food act, so the State laws are ineffective to properly pro-tect the people against the evils which the majority of the people of such State say flow from the sale of intoxicating This is so because the State is often compelled to await action until the sale has been completed and the injury has been

Assuming that the State has the right to enforce its own laws by such method as will be effective, namely, by an action in rem against the property before it reaches the consignee or the consumer, we are met directly with the question whether Congress can legally subject an article in interstate commerce to the police power of the State while it is still in transit or before it has mingled with the mass of the property of the State.

In the consideration of this question we must admit every claim made by the opponents of the measure which have had the real sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States. We must admit that the court has held that an article is in interstate commerce until it has actually been sold in original packages, and that until it has been so sold the State laws have no control over it. To be sure, in a subsequent case the court held that Congress could authorize the State laws to attach to the property before its final sale in original packages and after its delivery to the consignee; that the sale was merely an incident to commerce and not, strictly speaking, commerce itself, and therefore the Congress could relinquish to the State authority over the article over which Congress might, if it saw fit, retain exclusive control. That is my construction of the Rahrer

The court has also held that Congress has no authority to delegate its power over interstate commerce to a State.

I, however, base my claim of the constitutionality of this proposed law upon a legal proposition which, I think, was not discussed, or at least but barely touched upon, in the argument before the committee.

First. That Congress has power to absolutely prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors. That is my position and the fundamental basis of my argument to upheld the constitutionality of this proposed measure.

Second. Having power to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors it has the lesser power, which must be included in the greater, of allowing interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors under certain conditions, and those conditions may be that the commodities shall be subjected to the police powers of a State the moment they cross the State line; not that the State law shall be the effective law and be approved by Congress, but Congress shall relinquish its hold upon the articles upon certain conditions when they arrive within a State.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho? Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. BORAH. The proposition which the Senator has just been stating is covered, I take it, by the first part of the bill; that is, section 2.
Mr. McCUMBER.

Mr. BORAH. That is a prohibition against shipping liquors into a State where they are intended to be used in an unlawful

It seems to me that Congress has that power, and I am in favor of exercising that power. But when you come to the second section it has occurred to me that there is a clause in that section which militates against the strength and effect of the first section and might involve a question of constitutionality. I do not see the necessity of section 2, and I do not believe it to be constitutional.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the second section is at all necessary, and I think it is of doubtful constitutionality in one of its provisions; but I do not desire to argue that question at this time. If the act is made clear that we do not put into effect a State law when the commodities arrive in such State, or do not delegate our authority in any manner to a State, but simply provide a condition under which the commodity may lose its commercial character, and thereby become subject to the laws of the State, the second section may be so framed as to be held constitutional.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I simply want to say, Mr. President, to the Senator from North Dakota that section 2 is the committee

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that.

Mr. KENYON. I have thought of the same suggestion that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has made. first section prohibits the shipment of intoxicating liquors with the intention to violate the law of the State, the second section would seem to recognize the transportation of liquors and at the same time apply the police powers. There is some incongruity between the two sections.

Mr. McCUMBER. One would seem to rather transfer the congressional authority over to the State, and that construction we should avoid, if possible.

Mr. BORAH. Just a word, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I have said, so far as the first section is concerned, it seems that the bill provides that Congress shall retain the control of the commerce; it says it shall not go into a State under certain conditions; it fixes the rate and regulation itself; but in the second section it is provided:

That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon arrival within the boundaries of such State or Territory and before delivery to the con-

The prohibition which has been made in the preceding section is, in a sense, abrogated in the second, and liquor is recognized as an article of commerce. Recognizing it as an article of commerce, and one which may go into the State, then the question is, Can you stop it and turn it over to the State before it is finally delivered to the consignee? In the first section you make it contraband of commerce when it is being shipped for unlawful use. In the second you recognize it as an article of commerce, but turn it over to the State before it is delivered to consignee. I do not think this aids the law in its efficiency, and I believe it unconstitutional.

Mr. McCUMBER. The whole question is our authority to attach a condition to it in order to give it a right to enter into interstate commerce.

Third. That, imposing the condition that the goods shall be so subjected to the laws of a State is not in any sense whatever delegating authority to the State to control by its legislation interstate commerce. It is the penalty prescribed in the condition by congressional action.

Fourth. That having a right to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors it has the lesser right, which is included in the greater, of declaring as a condition for the allowance of the article to enter into interstate commerce that it shall be divested of its Federal protection as a commodity in interstate commerce whenever certain conditions arise, and that the condition which will so divest it may be that it is intended to be used in violation of the police powers of the State.

This bill reads:

That the shipment or transportation in any manner or by any means whatsoever of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, including beer, ale, or wine, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof into any-other State, Territory, or District of the United States, * * * which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, directly or indirectly, or in any manner connected with the transaction, to be received, possessed, or kept, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, * * is hereby prohibited.

That is the gist of the proposed law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President. Mr. BORAH. What is the necessity of anything further after that is done?

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the question?

Mr. BORAH. I say, what is the necessity of anything further in the bill after liquor is prohibited from being shipped into the State? What is the necessity of section 2?

Mr. McCUMBER. I had stated, if the Senator will pardon me, when he first called my attention to it, that I doubted the constitutionality of section 2 and that I did not see the necessity of it. It was no part of the bill when it was introduced, but is a committee amendment. I think it is rather dangerous than beneficial. It may be open to the construction that it is a delegation of congressional authority.

Mr. BORAH. I did not catch the Senator's full statement,

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I stand upon the broad proposition that all of the provisions of the bill which subject the article to the laws of the State are simply conditions imposed upon the article as conditions precedent to its right to enter the channels of interstate traffic. That is under section 1 of the bill. Under the first proposition, this question naturally arises: Have the citizens of one State any inherent right to do a business in another State, which business is specifically prohibited by the constitution or laws of the State in which it is to be carried on and is denied to every citizen of that State? I can hardly conceive that anyone will claim such a right. The majority of the people of the State of California do not like the Celestial. The Representatives of that State insist upon a national law which will prohibit the Chinese from coming into California. Now, a great many Californians want the people They want them as laborers. They want them in the fruit-picking season. But when they insist on their personal privilege to hire whomsoever they will, the majority say, "These people debase our State citizenship and we will not have them." The majority of the people of North Dakota, of Kansas, of Oklahoma, say they do not want intoxicating liquors shipped into their States for sale; that the sale of liquors injures their citizens. What moral right has California to insist that no Chinaman shall come into her territory because of his bad influence and then object to North Dakota or Oklahoma saying that California wines, and other intoxicants shall not come into their respective territories because of their bad influence?

I do not for one moment question that where the right of Congress under the interstate commerce law attaches to a commodity it will prevail over any police power of the State. But what I do claim is that in a certain class of commodities, which are more or less under the ban of public opinion and which a great proportion of the people do not recognize as property whatever, Congress has a right to prohibit such commodities from entering into interstate commerce, and the right of prohibition carries with it the lesser power to impose conditions.

Suppose that nitroglycerine is imported into any State. The State authorities have ample evidence that it is to be used for the purpose of blowing up bridges or great works under construction. Is Congress compelled to say to the State authorities, "You must not lay your hands on this article until it has reached the hands of the consignee; you must then keep watch over the consignee to see that he does not use it for the purpose intended, and if you fail, and surreptitiously he gets some of it into the hands of a McManigal and a public building is blown up and many lives lost, you must content yourselves with punishing the perpetrator"? That punishment does not bring back the lives that are lost. The punishment of the blind pigger-the illicit seller-does not rehabilitate the homes he has destroyed nor alleviate the influence for lawlessness which his action has created. I am not asking whether the State can insist on applying its law to an article before it leaves the hands of a common carrier, without permission of Congress, but can Congress relieve the State from this onerous condition? It is a question of the authority of Congress to grant, not of the State to demand.

Has Congress the right to prohibit intoxicating liquors from entering into interstate commerce? If it has no such power, then I am willing to concede that it has no power to subject that liquor to the condition sought in the bill. If intexicating liquors as a commodity have inherently all of the rights that clothing or bread could have, then we may well doubt the constitutionality of this law.

I know that courts have held that intoxicating liquors are recognized and legitimate subjects of interstate commerce; that it is not competent for any State to forbid any commercial carrier to transport such articles from a consignor in one State to a consignee in another. But the courts have never held that Congress could not cease to recognize them as legitimate subjects of interstate commerce. I insist that Congress may cease to recognize liquors as proper subjects of interstate commerce. While it is held that it is not competent for a State to forbid any common carrier to transport such articles from a consignor in one State to a consignee in another State, it has not been held that Congress has not that authority.

Congress has again and again assumed a right to determine that a certain commodity should be deprived of its right to enter the channels of commerce. In 1897 and in the Payne bill of 1909 Congress prohibited the importation of any goods that were made in whole or in part by convict labor. Here the provision applies, even though there is no evil whatever inherent in the goods themselves. We do not need to go that far in this

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me, while he is on that point I desire, in furtherance of his argument, to show how far Congress has gone in the policy of cooperating with rather than obstructing the States in the execution of their police powers.

In the first decade of this century this state of affairs existed: Some people in some of the slave State were freeing their negroes and carrying them to free States, carrying them into free States which had laws against the residence of free negroes within those States. Congress passed a law forbidding the importation of free negroes into any State where they were not permitted by law to reside, and that law was signed by no less a strict constructionist than Thomas Jefferson himself.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that fact.

Mr. President, can anyone doubt for a moment, if the power of Congress over interstate commerce is coextensive with its power over foreign commerce, and under its authority to regulate foreign commerce it prohibits the entry of any goods into the United States which were manufactured by foreign convicts, that it can not prohibit any interstate commerce in goods which make convicts?

We have laws which have been in force more than 50 years providing for a forfeiture of any vessel which shall be brought into the United States intended to be used in the slave trade.

By section 241 Congress prohibited the importation of the mongoose, the so-called flying foxes or fruit bats, the English sparrow, the starling, and other birds and animals, and provides that all such birds or animals upon arrival at any port in the United States shall be destroyed or returned at the expense of the owner.

Section 242 prohibits a common carrier from transporting of from any State any foreign animals or birds the importation of which is prohibited, or dead bodies or parts thereof of any wild animals or birds where such animals or birds have been killed or shipped in violation of the laws of the State.

I do not know that that particular section has been passed upon by the Supreme Court, but it is a law of Congress in force at the present time.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. WORKS. Apparently the Senator from North Dakota is discussing this bill upon the theory that it expressly forbids the shipment of intoxicating liquors into dry territory. Does the Senator so understand it?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no. I have not discussed it on that theory, but have discussed the conditions under which liquors would be shipped.

The weakness of the bill, Mr. President, it Mr. WORKS. seems to me, is the very fact that it does not do that very thing. The qualifying clause in the first section of the bill is quite material and takes away most of the strength and efficacy of the bill itself by the use of this language:

Which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, directly or indirectly, or in any manner connected with the transaction, to be received, possessed, or kept, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or District of the United States.

That is to say, in order to convict under this statute, if enacted as such, you must prove that the person to whom it was shipped or by whom it was possessed had the intention at the time to sell it unlawfully.

I am not satisfied, Mr. President, to limit a law of this kind to that extent unless we are compelled to do so by the Constitution. A bill so worded will have very little effect, it seems to me, in checking or preventing the evil we are trying to reach.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator must admit that if Congress has power to absolutely prohibit, of course it has the power to allow with any conditions it sees fit to impose.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have no doubt of that at all.

What I question is whether Congress should stop short of absolute prohibition against the shipment of liquors into dry territory.

Mr. McCUMBER. That can be answered by the statement that probably not a single State in the Union prohibits the larges in the State. Whenever a State goes so far as to absolutely prohibit the use of liquors in the State, then Congress may properly, under its authority, prohibit their importation into that State, but I know of no State in the Union that has gone to that extent. They do not prohibit the personal use of intoxicating liquors; they only prohibit their being sold contrary to law.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. All the States make certain exceptions in the case of the sale of intoxicating liquors. To that extent the shipment of the liquors would not be in violation of the law of the State. No doubt Congress in enacting a law of this kind should make that same exception, but certainly it should go no further than that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think Congress should go further than the laws of the States themselves go. This bill, if it is passed and becomes a law, will be for the benefit of the States. and therefore we should not under our general power and authority over commerce assume to say that certain goods should not go into the State, when the State law welcomes them into the State under certain conditions. All we should do is to say that if we allow them to enter into interstate commerce it should be with the understanding that they should not violate the conditions imposed by the State.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Massachusetts? Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. In connection with the point made by the Senator from California, which seems to me to have a great deal of force, how is it to be determined what is the intention of the person to whom the liquor is shipped? That compels the shipper to know the intention of the person. It seems to me that is going to be a matter of great difficulty to determine.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is getting at the merits. We are now discussing the authority of Congress. I suppose we will determine the intention of either party to a transaction in the courts, the same as we always determine those things. It will simply be a matter of evidence.

Mr. BAILEY. But Congress could not make the Senator guilty of a crime for some intention which I had in my mind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. That is what I understood to be the question of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. That was my precise point. They make the shipper guilty of a crime because he fails to know the intention of the person to whom he ships.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me it would be very difficult to get at.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think the Senator has read the bill, or he would not make that assertion.

Mr. LODGE. I have read the bill through two or three

I would ask the Senator to quote any Mr. McCUMBER. portion of the bill which makes the shipper responsible for a crime on account of an intent in which he did not take part.

Mr. LODGE. The bill says that the shipment or transportation of the articles named—

Mr. McCUMBER. Is prohibited. That is not a crime— Mr. LODGE. Is prohibited. If the bill is without a penalty clause, then it is-

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not intended to create a penalty. It is intended, Mr. President, to divest the shipment of its interstate character whenever it can be ascertained in a court proceeding in any State that it is within that it is sought to be used in violation of the laws of that State.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator mean that the shipper who ships in violation of this act is not subject to any penalty?

Mr. McCUMBER. If he desires to sell on credit entirely, and depends on a lien on the property in the State in which it is to be paid, he might possibly lose the property in an action

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield. Mr. CRAWFORD. I have been reading the bill, and I simply want to ascertain if my impression of it is correct. I do not understand that it is a criminal statute at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. Not at all. Mr. CRAWFORD. It does not undertake to provide any penalties at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. None.

But fixes the status of such liquors as Mr. CRAWFORD. come within the inhibition of the act.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield this time, and then I desire to finish my remarks.

Mr. WORKS. The trouble is not, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, that the burden is on the shipper of the liquor to prove or disprove the intention of the person to whom it is shipped, but that the burden is imposed upon the prosecution in a case of that kind, and, in order to convict, the prosecution must prove the intention of the person to whom the liquor is shipped.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President-

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not necessarily need to be the intention of the shipper. Ordinarily, it is not very difficult to prove the intent of a blind pigger, when he receives great quantities of liquor and when it is known that he is running an establishment which we designate by that name.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to ask him a question now?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I know very little about the criminal statutes of the United States; but I have an impression that there is some general provision providing a penalty where there is a prohibition or where any given act is made unlawful and there is no specific penalty attached to that act in the law prohibiting it, because, as I understand, a criminal statute without any penalty is mere brutum fulmen. It is nothing. To say a thing is prohibited and to give no sanction to your prohibition signifies nothing. I may not know as much about criminal law as a Senator ought to know, but still I know quite as much about it as I want to know.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator will undoubtedly agree that there could be no penalty unless the law itself fixed the penalty. The object of this law is to fix the status of the property itself as to what time it shall lose its character as an article of interstate commerce, and the moment it loses its interstate commerce character, the moment it ceases to be a commer-cial commodity, it then of itself falls under the laws of any State in which it is at that time situated. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not the intent of the proposed act to make it criminal. If the act was made criminal and declared to be a misdemeanor, without penalty, the penalty fixed by the common law must control.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to delay the Senator from North Dakota

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say I must close my remarks before half past 1, and I therefore ask that I may proceed without further interruption.

Mr. ROOT. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield this time.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take the liberty of suggesting to the Senator from North Dakota that at 1 o'clock the unfinished business will be laid before the Senate. Mr. McCUMBER. I presume, Mr. President, it will be laid aside that hour.

Mr. ROOT. I should like very much to know what are the views of the Senator from North Dakota as to the effect of this prohibition upon contracts. Would a contract of sale or a contract of shipment or the obligations involved in a contract of shipment be valid and enforceable if the transaction were the transaction such as described in this section, or would the contract be made invalid by reason of the fact that they are contracts to violate a law of the United States?

Mr. McCUMBER. Even under the present law of any of the States which have passed prohibition laws, a contract for the sale of intoxicating liquors to be used in violation of the laws of the State would be invalid and could not be enforced. neither enlarges nor does it contract that rule. The contract of sale would hardly include anything concerning any disposition by the purchaser, and hence they would not be contracts to violate a United States law. If the contract was that they were to be shipped to sell in violation of a State law, of course, that would be a violation of this act.

Mr. President, I have just read section 242 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which prohibits interstate com-merce in any birds or animals killed in any State against the laws of that State, and I hardly think anyone would contend that this prohibition is a delegation of authority to the State. It is simply a condition under which the shipments may or may Sections 238, 239, and 240 of the penal code require that there shall be a bona fide consignee for intoxicating liquor shipments in interstate commerce; there shall be no collect on delivery shipments, but there shall be a plain branding, and so forth.

These are the conditions which we have already passed as conditions precedent to the shipment of intoxicating liquors, and we may go to any extent and require any condition that Congress in its wisdom may see fit.

Mr. President, Congress by the enactment of this bill will declare its legislative judgment that intoxicating liquors are articles which may seriously harm the public; the same as it did in the lottery cases. Where the subject on which the legislative power acts admits of a grave doubt as to whether it ought to be withheld from public use, the right to determine that question is a legislative right and not a judicial right.

Opium is useful; it is even necessary in many instances to preserve life. Its general use, however, its promiscuous sale, is productive of an evil that overbalances any good obtained from its use many hundred fold. Does anyone doubt the power of Congress to protect the people of all the States, to outlaw the article and declare it shall have no commercial right, to treat it as it would a pestilence; and could any court override that legislative judgment? Wherein does the power of Congress over one kind of an intoxicant differ from its power over another kind of intoxicant?

Suppose Congress should declare that intoxicating liquors shall no longer be considered fit subjects for interstate commerce, what authority is there to override the decision of Congress in that respect? Who is to determine when an article is to be deemed unfit for interstate commerce? Is it the court or the legislature? Under anything but the most extreme cases the answer must be that the determination of this question is a function solely for the legislature to perform. This does not mean that the legislature can act in an arbitrary manner. This does not mean that the legislature can declare that wheat or corn or clothing should not be subjects of interstate commerce-things which are absolute necessities and which are injurious to no one; but it does mean that the legislature alone has the right to determine when a given kind of business, like the sale of lottery tickets, so affects public morals, so affects public welfare, that it needs the interposition of the legislative power to protect the morals or the health of the people. There was a time when lotteries were recognized both by the law and by the public as perfectly legitimate methods of raising money. Churches were supported by them. States derived their revenues from them. The Federal Government itself incorporated them and authorized them to carry on their business. While the Federal Government was so authorizing them undoubtedly a State could not interfere with lottery tickets so long as they remained wholly subject to the jurisdiction in which they were created and had not yet been subjected to the laws of a State. But Congress, responding to an awakened public conscience, responding to the known evils of the lottery system, responding to the universal condemnation of the influence of the lottery, outlawed the system by prohibiting the interstate shipment of lottery tickets.

In the lottery case Mr. Justice Harlan said:

If a State, when considering legislation for the suppression of lotterles within its own limits, may properly take into view the evils that inhere in the raising of money in that mode, why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several States, provide that such commerce shall not be polluted by the carrying of lottery tickets from one State to another?

The decision in that case answered that question affirmatively. If that could be answered affirmatively, how can the court avoid answering this question in the affirmative? If a State, when considering legislation for the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors within its own limits, may properly take into view the evils that result from the promiscuous sale of intoxicating liquors, the commission of crimes, the debauching of manhood, the destruction of the health of its citizens, the ravages of disease affecting the weakened condition of the excessive users of intoxicating liquors, why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several States, provide that such commerce shall not be polluted by the carrying of intoxicating liquors from one State to Has not Congress the same right to recognize the injurious effects of alcoholic drinks as it had to recognize the injurious effects flowing from the sale of lottery tickets? there not practically as large a proportion of the public of the land opposed to the sale of intoxicating liquors as there were to the sale of lottery tickets? Have not the public, either through an awakened conscience or as the result of scientific exposition of the evils of the liquor habit, arrived at a conclusion that the evils must be stamped out in the only legitimate way, that of preventing its excessive use through the medium of public or private sale? I insist that the power to absolutely prohibit interstate commercial privilege to intoxicating liquors is clearly a congressional right, and if exercised by Congress the courts would not assume to declare that Congress had overstepped its legitimate authority. And if it has the right of prohibition, it must necessarily have the lesser right of imposing conditions.

In the case of Mugler v. Kansas the court says:

And so, if in the judgment of the legislature the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for the maker's own use, as a beverage, would tend to cripple, if it did not defeat, the effort to guard the community against evils attending the use of such liquors, it is not for the courts upon their views as to what is best and safest for the community to disregard the legislative determination of that question, so far as from such a regulation having no relation to the general end sought to be attained.

In the case of Champion as Ames, the lottery case Con-

In the case of Champion v. Ames, the lottery case, Congress specifically exercised its power to regulate interstate commerce to the point of prohibition. They held that lottery tickets could be declared by Congress to be outlawed, page 7.

Crowley v. Christian (137 U. S., 89) the court said:

It is not a right of a citizen of the United States to engage in traffic in intoxicating liquors. That is not a right of a citizen of a State or a citizen of the United States.

That could not be said as to bread or as to clothing, but it can be said as to this character of property.

Again Justice Field says, in the same case:

It is urged that as the liquors are used as a beverage, and the injury following them, if taken in excess, is voluntarily inflicted and is confined to the party offending, their sales should be without restrictions, the contention being that what a man shall drink, equally with what he shall eat, is not properly matter for legislation.

There is in this position an assumption of a fact which does not exist, that when the liquors are taken in excess the injuries are confined to the party offending.

Therein it differs from the case of the sale of other articles-

Therein it differs from the case of the sale of other articles—

The injury, it is true, first falls upon him in his health, which the habit undermines; in his morals, which it weakens; and in the self-abasement which it creates. But as it leads to neglect of business and waste of property and general demoralization it affects those who are immediately connected with and dependent upon him. By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community there are few sources of crime and misery to society equal to the dram shop, where intoxicating liquors in small quantities, to be drunk at the time, are sold indiscriminately to all parties applying. The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source. * * As it is a business attended with danger to the community it may, as already said, be entirely prohibited or be permitted under such conditions as will limit to the untost its evils. The manner and extent of regulation rest in the discretion of the governing authority.

And that I claim, Mr. President, is true with reference to the

And that I claim, Mr. President, is true with reference to the authority of Congress under the general provision relating to interstate commerce to either prohibit its shipment or to allow it under any conditions it sees fit to enact.

Again, this bill does not attempt to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors, provided they are not to be used for unlawful purposes. I do not think any one can doubt the right of Congress to say that any article may enter into interstate commerce for one purpose and may not enter into it if designed for another purpose. It might well say that a dead and putrid carcass of a steer or hog might be transported from one State to another for the purpose of converting it into a fertilizer or into axle grease, but it should not enter commerce for the purpose of being sold to the public for meat. If Congress can do this it has the equal power to say that an article entering into interstate commerce may be divested of its commercial protection upon certain contingencies. It may say that a barrel of pork entering into interstate commerce for the purpose of legitimate sale in another State shall lose its commercial character if it becomes putrid or unfit for use, unless there should be a guaranty that it should not be used for individual consumption. It has equally the power to say that intoxicating liquors may be recognized as legitimate subjects of interstate commerce, but that if at any time while in transit it becomes apparent that the use designed is an immoral one, an illegal one, it may provide that it shall be divested of that interstatecommerce protection. In that case it does not adopt the law of any State. It does not delegate its power to a State. recognizes its own authority over the article as an article of interstate commerce and says it is no longer a subject of commerce, and being no longer a subject of commerce it falls of, itself under the law of the State in which it is then located.

Mr. President, I can see nothing in the claim that Congress, by taxing intoxicating liquors gives them an interstate privilege that prohibits Congress itself from determining that they shall not enter particular States for illegal purposes. It may be admitted that by taxing the liquors or taxing the business of selling them is a recognition by Congress of their commercial character, so that a State could not hamper their shipment, but that does not prevent Congress from conditioning their shipment. By the enactment of this bill Congress will not be prohibiting interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors, but will simply enact that they shall not be imported into any State for the purpose of violating the laws of such State.

Mr. President, I believe that this bill, designed to assist the States in enforcing their own police powers by authorizing the importation of liquors into such States on the condition that they shall not be imported with intent to violate State laws, and that wherever such intent is established they shall be deprived of their commercial protection and be subjected to the laws of the State, will stand the test of any constitutional objection and that the bill should become a law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Before the Senator takes his seat I Suppose this bill is should like to ask him one question. passed and some citizen in a prohibition State concludes that a shipment of liquor has been made which it is the intent of the consignee to use or dispose of in violation of the law of the State, what steps or what proceedings would that citizen institute in order to enforce this law under the provisions of the

Mr. McCUMBER. I will give one concrete example that I find in hurriedly reading over the evidence taken before the committee. In Tennessee, I believe it was, there was shipped in the name of one person several barrels, and each barrel contained 50 pint bottles of whisky. Those we will say are found at the station. They have not yet been delivered to the consignee. The State authorities fully understand that the man who receives this special consignment of 50 pints in a barrel and several barrels can not necessarily need them all for his home consumption during his Christmas holiday, and, knowing his business to be a vender of liquors, these officials of the State may desire to seize that property before it enters into his hands-before he has had an opportunity to dispose of itand they may, by an appropriate action—an action in rem against the property itself—desire to test the question as to whether it has been shipped for legal purposes or for the purpose of sale by this blind pigger.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Under what law is that, the State law?

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course it would be the State law.
Mr. SUTHERIAND. Then, Mr. President—
Mr. McCUMBER. One would hardly expect that the State authorities would proceed under a national law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND., But I understand the regulation of interstate commerce consists in prescribing a rule which governs commerce. In the case the Senator supposes would not recourse be had to the law of the State, and would not then the law of the State be the rule which regulated commerce?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no. Mr. SUTHERLAND. And not a law of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would not be a rule which regulated commerce, because before or at the time that that shipment was made, if it be established that it is made for an unlawful purpose, it is not in interstate commerce, and is so declared by this very law, and therefore is not subject to the protection that it would receive ordinarily as an article of interstate commerce.

The point I tried to make clear in all this argument and as briefly as possible was that Congress has the authority to say when an article shall cease to be a subject of interstate commerce and when it would loosen its own control over that article. When the facts established that the commodity came within that prohibition whereby Congress had relieved it from its authority, it would then of itself fall under the laws of the State.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the effect of the law which the Senator proposes is to allow the State jurisdiction to attach an interstate shipment of liquor whenever it passes the State line, dependent upon the intention of the consignee. If the consignee intends to violate a State law, then immediately, according to the law which the Senator is favoring, the power is given to the State to seize the goods.

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And that seizure of his goods-

Mr. McCUMBER. No; Mr. President, therein the Senator is No power is given the State. Immediately it ceases to be an article of interstate commerce the State authorities can operate upon it. There is the distinction. Nothing is given to the State by Congress. The State authority exists independent of Congress and attaches the moment the Federal power over the shipment is terminated, and it is terminated upon a breach of the condition under which the shipment is authorized.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, Mr. President, I will not pursue that further at this moment, but I wish to ask the Senator another question.

This bill applies to foreign commerce as well as interstate ommerce. We have laws which permit the importation of liquors into the United States upon paying certain duties. Suppose there is imported from France a shipment of wine. The importer has paid the duty, but it is the intention of some-body connected with it, not necessarily the importer, because the bill does not so provide

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is the intention of somebody directly or indirectly connected with the transaction to violate a law of the State. Would the Senator say, in such a case as that, it would be within the power of Congress to permit that to be done?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; Mr. President, I say it would be within the power of Congress, undoubtedly. I can hardly conceive of such a case arising, but should a case of that kind arise I do not doubt for one moment the power of Congress to say that it has lost its protected condition as a commodity of interstate commerce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is not assuming the power of Congress likely to result in a great deal of confusion?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I think not, because I think most of the shipments that are made from a foreign country to this country are not shipped into a particular State for a particular sale. They are shipped to be sold in this country at any point where there may be a demand for them. They are seldom ever shipped directly into some prohibition State from a foreign country. If they were, it would, of course, fall under the same rule as an interstate shipment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator another question, because I want to get his view of the construction of the The bill provides that this shipment or transportation shall be prohibited where the liquor "is intended by any person interested therein, directly or indirectly, or in any manner connected with the transaction, to be received "——
Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, that is very interesting, no doubt, and we would like to hear it in this part of the Cham-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan complains that the Senator can not be heard.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill provides that the transportation of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited wherever it is "intended by any person interested therein, directly or indirectly, or in any manner connected with the transaction, to be received, possessed, or kept, or in any manner used," and so forth, contrary to the law of the State. What is the Senator's idea as to the scope of that provision? Does it extend beyond the consignee; and if so, to what person or persons, bearing what relation to the transaction?

Mr. McCUMBER. They must bear a relation to the shipment, because that is stated in the provision itself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I know.

Mr. McCUMBER. There must be an interest or relation in the shipment itself, and then if any person has any relation to that shipment or has an interest in it, of course he is affected by it. That, of course, does not mean the common carrier, but either the consistent of the consist either the consignor or the consignee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I read the language, of course, but wanted to know if the Senator would not give me an illustration where it would extend beyond the consignee.

During the delivery of Mr. McCumber's speech, The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota will kindly suspend. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 78) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. McCumber's speech,

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to answer the suggestion of the Senator from Utah. The words "or in any manner connected with the transaction," in my judgment, should be omitted from the bill, and I had proposed to move to strike them out at the proper time, leaving the intention to the person interested therein directly or indirectly, the consignor or consignee, having a direct interest in the matter. I do not think that a railroad brakeman or the man who moves the liquor from the depot to the place of destination would be such a person as intention on his part should have anything to do with destroying the interstate commerce feature of the commodity.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not think that that possibly may be the construction anyway.

Mr. KENYON. I think not, but I think those words should be out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose we strike out the words "or in any manner connected with the transaction," so that the bill will read "by any person interested therein, directly or indi-The consignor is evidently interested directly; the consignee is evidently interested directly. Who is interested indirectly?

Mr. KENYON. That is to cover a subterfuge, or some matter of that kind which might arise in a particular case. It would be governed by the particular circumstances that might arise in any particular case.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. A subterfuge would not prevent the consignor or consignee from being interested directly. That is a matter of proof.

Mr. KENYON. Of course the words are rather sweeping, but think the intent and purpose was that there may be no subterfuge in the matter, but it should apply to one who has a real

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It says an indirect interest.

Mr. KENYON. I understand it is to provide against any question of subterfuge.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We ought not, as it seems to me, in a statute of this character put in provisions that none of us understand the meaning and the application of. I should like to hear from some of the proponents of the bill as to just what is meant by an indirect interest in one of these shipments. If it means nothing, then it ought to go out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I think I can give him an illustration. Suppose a man by the name of John Jones is carrying on a blind-tiger business in a prohibition State, and knowing that the State authorities are pretty well cognizant of his affairs he gets John Smith to order liquor and act as consignee. In that case John Jones is in-directly the criminal, and if it would affect nobody but the direct consignee of course the real criminal in the case would escape all punishment and the stool pigeon would be the only one punished.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the case the Senator supposes it seems to me that a person would be directly interested in it and not indirectly; he would have a direct interest.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He would be indirectly interested in the shipment and directly interested in the unlawful business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill says any person interested therein directly or indirectly; that is, in the shipment or transportation of liquor, and so on.

Mr. KENYON obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KENYON. How long will the Senator take?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Five minutes or thereabouts. Mr. KENYON. I had intended to consider this bill at some length. Since the hour is now approaching for the impeachment proceedings, five minutes are about all I will have in any event to-day. I am willing to give the Senator two of those five

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. With the Senator's permission, I should like to say a few words.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I can not yield. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. KENYON. I would yield for a question but not for remarks

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have no questions, but I have only a few remarks that I desire to submit.

Mr. KENYON. I decline to yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator declines?
Mr. KENYON. I am sorry, but I decline to yield.
Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I realize I can not get far in the discussion of this measure this morning, on account of the approaching hour for the impeachment trial. I think this is a much misunderstood bill among the general public, judging from the letters and documents and printed matter that we are all probably receiving. It is charged in some that the bill is to prevent personal use of liquor and prevent use in families of intoxicating liquors, and the last carefully prepared document I received was that it was in disguise a bill to dissolve the Federal Union. Of course, if these things are true it is a very bad bill, and it ought not to receive any support. However, none of these things are true.

Now, I think no lawyer who is honest with himself and perfectly frank will deny that there are very close constitutional questions involved in this bill, and especially as to section 2. Every forward measure must run the gauntlet of constitutional objection.

The evil which this bill seeks to strike at is apparent, and the purpose, it seems to me, is commendable. In its ultimate analysis the bill is simply to permit the States to exercise their reserved police power without interference by the Federal Government; in other words, to subject interstate commerce in certain articles to the laws of the several States. This Government is one of delegated powers. It has been asserted by constitutional writers of great eminence that one of the incentive reasons for the adoption of the Constitution was to give free channels to commerce and not permit the States by various regulations to block commerce.

The power of the State in its reserved police power is one which Congress does not give and is one which Congress can not take away. It can not add one particle to or detract one iota from the police power of the States. These powers belong to the States; the right to make such laws concerning the health, life, and safety of its citizens as its legislative power in its wisdom may determine. This is just as much a right in the State as the constitutional right to regulate com-merce is in Congress. The "police power zone" of the State, if such an expression might be used, may at times lap over and intrude upon the "interstate commerce zone" of the Federal Government. If such conflict ever does arise, the Federal Government, of course, is supreme.

This bill if enacted would not be a law to bring about prohibition. It would not be a law to stop personal use of intoxicating liquors, nor to prohibit the shipment of intoxicating liquors for personal use, nor to stop the use of intoxicating liquors for sacramental purposes. Its purpose, and its only purpose, is to remove the impediment existing as to the States in the exercise of their police powers regarding the traffic or control of intoxicating liquors within their borders.

It is the spirit of our times and the genius of our institutions that each State should exercise its police power free from the impediments that might spring from a narrow construction of the interstate-commerce clause. Where a State has determined that intoxicating liquors shall not be manufactured or sold within its borders, is it not manifest that the citizens of other States should not be granted greater privileges in that State than its own citizenship enjoy?

Mr. President, I realize that the hour of half past 1 has approached, at which time the impeachment trial is to proceed, and I give notice that I shall conclude my remarks at a morning session hereafter.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bacon) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The Secretary read the Journal of Saturday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, some days ago an order was passed by the Senate requiring the managers on the part of the House and the counsel for the respondent to file with the Secretary their briefs or citations of authorities for the immediate use of Senators. I should like to inquire whether that order has been complied with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will make the inquiry of the managers and of counsel for the respondent.

Mr. WORKS. Well, Mr. President, if you will allow me first, I desire to say that on the part of the managers a printed copy of the citations of authorities up to a certain point has been furnished to me personally, but with the statement that the managers desired to add further authorities.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I must confess that if such an order was made it escaped my observation. I know that there was a colloquy here about it, but we have been so busily engaged in-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will interrupt counsel to the extent of saying that as the Chair was about to submit the question as to the correctness of the Journal the Senator from California [Mr. Works] addressed the Chair, and the Chair supposed he was going to direct his remarks to that question. If counsel will permit the Chair, he will now ask whether there are any inaccuracies in the Journal? If not, it is approved.

Counsel will proceed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was about to say that some of us, as the Presiding Officer and the Senate know, have been so much occupied with preparing the facts in the case that we have had very little time to devote to the preparation of the We have, of course, dealt with it before this trial began, and it will take us a very short time when we conclude the questions in relation to the facts to prepare a brief, to submit it, and to have it printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will do so at their earliest convenience.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. And as the Senate, as I understand, has determined to adjourn upon the 19th of this month to the 2d of next month we can certainly arrange so that our brief can be in the hands of all Senators very soon after the adjourn-

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, of course I do not desire to ask anything unreasonable of the managers or of counsel, but, so far as I am individually concerned, I should be glad to have an opportunity to examine with some deliberation the authorities that are to be relied upon, and I suppose other Senators have the same feeling about it. I assumed that both the managers and the counsel for the respondent had such authorities as they expected to rely upon and that they could conveniently furnish them at any time.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I have before me a brief prepared some time ago on behalf of the managers, and I have undertaken to furnish copies of it to the Senators who have indicated to me a desire to see that brief. I had withheld the printing of that brief in the RECORD for the purpose, as the Senator from California has well said, of making some additions to it, and the Chair is quite well aware of the conditions under which we have worked since the trial of this case has actually begun. If it is the desire of the Senate, I am quite willing that the brief, to which we desire to add something later along, may go into the RECORD at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not so desired.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Then I will withhold it; but I may say that, in my opinion and in the opinion of my associates, not later than two days after the Christmas recess begins we shall have this brief prepared and printed and get it into the hands of the Senators. I hope that the respondent's counsel will do the same thing, to wit, have their brief in the hands of

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I can say, Mr. President, we can certainly have that done this week. May I ask now, as the Senate will not then be in session, is it proposed that these briefs shall be printed separately or be handed to the Secretary to be incorporated in the record? I would suggest that it would be a very good thing if the Senate could make the order, if it is necessary to make an order, that these briefs shall be printed separately, so that they may be distributed to the Senators without reference to the vast bulk of the record as to the evidence.

Mr. WORKS. The order was passed some days ago, and as counsel is not familiar with it I suggest that the order may be read for his information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the order which was passed on that subject.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to say so, I think the counsel for the respondent understands the order, and I think he agrees with me that at the latter end of this week we shall both furnish these briefs, so that they will be printed under the previous order made by the Senate. Am I correct? Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. So far as what the manager states as to what we propose to do, he is correct. So far as the order about printing these briefs separately is concerned, I have no

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that, unless there is objection, the order will be that the briefs be printed separately.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. They will both be incorporated into the proceedings and the record of this proceeding.

Mr. WORKS. It will be necessary in that case, Mr. President, to vacate the order already made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair submitted it for the unanimous consent of the Senate only. The Chair had no right to order it otherwise, and, with the permission of the Senator from California, as the Secretary can not now im-mediately find the order, the proceedings will be continued, and the order will be presented a little later.

Mr. WORKS. I shall not insist upon that, and I am perfectly willing that the order shall be so changed as to require the briefs to be printed separately. I have not objected. I was only suggesting the fact that an order was in existence to the contrary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present order to print the briefs separately will not conflict with the prior order, as the Chair understands. The prior order wil be carried out, and the present order, passed unanimously by the Senate itself, without objection, will be for a separate printing for the convenience of managers, counsel, and Senators.

The Chair understands that the managers have concluded their evidence, and counsel for the respondent will now present evidence on behalf of the respondent.

Mr. SIMPSON. We desire to call a witness a little out of order because of important engagements which he has. I will ask that Mr. E. E. Loomis be called.

TESTIMONY OF E. E. LOOMIS-RECALLED.

Mr. E. E. Loomis, having been previously sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Loomis, on Friday last Mr. C. G. Boland testified that he had been informed by Mr. George M. Watson that yourself, Mr. Phillips, and Judge Archbald were to receive a portion of an excess claim which he, Watson, had presented to your company over and above the amount which his clients had told him to claim. Will you please-Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, we object—

Mr. SIMPSON. Excuse me, if you please, until I finish the question. The witness need not answer until directed to do so. [To the witness.] Will you please tell us whether or not there was any agreement or understanding, express or implied, of any kind or character that you were to get any portion of the money which was claimed from the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will ask counsel to talk a little louder. He can not be heard here.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is the first time that it was ever said that my voice was so low that it could not be heard, and I shall endeavor to make it the last.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, the reason counsel can not be heard is the noise in the rear part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will request Senators and others who desire to converse to retire to the lobby. It is impossible for the proceedings to be conveniently had with audible conversation progressing in the Chamber.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Will you kindly state, Mr. Loomis, whether or not there was any agreement or understanding of any kind or character, express or implied, by which you were to get any part or portion of any sum of money which was re-covered or paid to Mr. Watson on behalf of the Marian Coal Co.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object to the question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On what ground?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Upon the ground that it is irrelevant and incompetent. We are not trying Mr. Loomis for anything in this matter, and it is immaterial and irrelevant whether Mr. Loomis was to get anything or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair recalls the fact correctly, the evidence as to Mr. Loomis having any participation in this matter was brought out by counsel for the re-

Mr. SIMPSON. Only by asking the witness to state the whole of a conversation when he undertook to state a part of it on the suggestion of the managers. The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the evidence had been brought out by the managers, the Chair would hold that the counsel would have a right to reply to it; but as the evidence to which it relates was brought out by the respondent and it is irrelevant, the Chair does not think that it is now competent. Mr. SIMPSON. Will the Chair allow me a moment before finally ruling upon the question? I would concede, sir, without a doubt that if that which was brought out on behalf of the respondent was entirely separate and distinct from that which was brought out by the managers, that rule would be directly applicable; but when the managers asked for a fraction of the conversation and the other side simply asked for the whole of the conversation to be brought out, I submit, sir, that the managers being the ones who introduced the matter, the rule to which the Chair has adverted does not apply, and that we are entitled to have it known whether or not the statement which the witness undertook to make has a basis of truth or not as to managers themselves, in the first instance, had brought out. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel undoubtedly would have a right to bring out the full conversation so far as the actual conversation relates to the case; but the Chair does not think that that part of the conversation was relevant to the case; it was brought out voluntarily by the counsel for the respondent. The remedy of the respondent, if the counsel will permit the suggestion, is to move to rule out the former testimony which was received on that subject as to Mr. Loomis everyone who was referred to in the conversation which the which had nothing to do with the case whatever.

Mr. SIMPSON. It was a part of a full conversation, sir; but if the Chair has ruled on it, of course, I will not undertake to argue it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is only the mouth-piece of the Senate; and, if the Chair has wrongly decided, the Senate is the authority to so determine.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, as it does not clearly appear, perhaps, to the minds of all here as to what was brought out, it was this: Mr. Boland was asked, and under the ruling made by the Senate he was allowed to be asked, about the use by Watson of Judge Archbald's name, and he said that Watson had said that he thought Judge Archbald ought to be compensated for what he was doing in helping to bring about that settlement. Then, on cross-examination, he was asked for the full conversation, and he said what was said was that this witness and Mr. Phillips and Judge Archbald were all to be paid. That was one statement.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to be allowed to contradict that statement at all points where we can Otherwise it would leave us in the attitude of denytouch it. ing that it was true as to Judge Archbald, but might leave everybody to think that it was true as to Mr. Loomis and true as to Mr. Phillips, and thereby give very much color to the proposition that it was also true as to Judge Archbald.

The conversation which related to Judge Archbald was all brought out by the managers, and we brought out that which related to Mr. Loomis and to Mr. Phillips, but it was all one word, one sentence, one breath.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel at that time had the right to object

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Senate, as we understood, ruled by a vote that was taken when the question was submitted to the Senate by the Chair that that conversation was competent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; only as to Judge Arch-The Chair has the question before him. The Chair will read the question which the Senate ruled was admissible. Chair had previously ruled that it was inadmissible; and when again offered, while still of the same opinion, the Chair submitted the question to the Senate, and the Senate ruled that it was admissible. This is the question:

Q (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Now, Mr. Boland, I will ask you to state whether or not during the course of these negotiations you had any conversations with Mr. Watson relative to Judge Archbald's interest or participation in this settlement, and particularly as to whether he was to share in the fee or receive any money or other pecuniary consideration for his services in attempting to make that settlement?

That was all the Senate passed upon. The Chair did not feel authorized, as the counsel was bringing out the testimony on his own side, to interpose. The Chair thought at the time that it was altogether irrelevant and would have sustained the motion if it had been made at that time to exclude it from the testimony as to Mr. Loomis; and the Chair would entertain such a motion now, for that matter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am unable to see how we can make a motion without moving to strike out what the Senate formerly voted to admit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would not entertain that, of course; but the Chair would entertain a motion to strike out everything that has been-said about Mr. Loomis, because that is not within the limit of the question ruled in by the Senate.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, I will have to consider, Mr. President, about that. We may bring the matter up at a later

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But if this were admitted the managers would have a right to take issue upon it, infroduce evidence in regard thereto, and where would the end be?

Mr. SIMPSON. We have no further questions to ask this witness, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN M. ROBERTSON.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask that Mr. John M. Robertson be called.

John M. Robertson, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) State your full name, please, Mr. Robertson.—A. John M. Robertson, Scranton, Pa. Q. How long have you lived about Scranton ?- A. Since 1866.

Q. What is your business, and what has been your business?-A. Coal operator.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the production of the Katydid culm dump near Moosic?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What?-A. Under an arrangement of lease with the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. I started the Katydid in 1885

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am afraid you can not be heard. Will you please speak louder?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (to the witness). It is absolutely necessary that every Senator should hear what you say.

The Witness. Under an arrangement of lease with the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. I started the Katydid in 1885. The breaker was built in 1886, and the beginning of this dump was made Q. What is a breaker?-A. A structure for the purpose of breaking and preparing coal.

Q. Did you mine the coal?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took it out of the ground?-A. Took it out of the

Q. Very well, go ahead .- A. This operation was worked under my own name until 1891, when Mr. Law came into partnership with met and we worked under the firm name of Robertson & Law until the close of the colliery. He, however, retired in 1904, and I continued the operation alone.

Q. Until what time did you continue after 1904?-A. Until

Q. What happened then?-A. The breaker was burned by a fire from a dump belonging to the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. Had you attempted before the breaker burned down to utilize the culm dump?-A. In 1905 I built a washery and commenced to prepare the dump and wash the dump.

Q. What is the distinction between a breaker and a washery?-A. The one is generally dry-the coal is prepared dry; and in the other case water is used in the preparation of smaller

Q. Well, you began in 1905, then, to wash this dump?-A. Yes.

Q. To get coal out of the dump?-A. Yes, sir.

To segregate it from the waste?-A. Yes.

Well, how long did you continue?-A. Until 1908. Q. Did the fire burn down the washery, too?-A. Yes.

Q. Well, what did you do after that?-A. I did not do anything.

Q. Why?--A. Well, I could not see that there was use in running the dump alone. 'The coal was pretty near worked out, and it would scarcely pay to build another structure.

Q. What would it have cost to build a washery?neighborhood of $20,000, the cheapest way you could do it, I

Q. Now, I wish you would tell the Senate what you know about the value-the Katydid dump stands now as it did when you left it, does it not?—A. Yes, sir. At present, of course, there is only half of the dump; we washed one-half between the years 1905 and 1908.

Q. Tell the Senate what you know about the quantities of different kinds of coal in that dump now, or since you stopped washing it in 1908, and about its value, if it has any.—A. The first half that was washed was naturally the best. It was laid down first and was the better part; the better sizes were in it; the larger sizes; so that what is remaining now is really very small, principally No. 3 buck and smaller.

Q. How many sizes are there of buck?—A. Four.
Q. What are the sizes of coal supposed to be in the dump, beginning at the largest size?—A. There could not be anything gotten larger than buck No. 1. We tried to make chestnut coal and also pea from the dump-from the washings of the dumpbut we found it was so poor when it was incorporated with the fresh mined coal that we could not market it.

Q. Is it possible, then, in your judgment, to get any chestnut coal out of that dump as it stands now ?- A. It is not.

Q. What would you say about getting $17,000 worth out of -A. I do not think you could get any.

Q. Not any?-A. Not profitably.

Q. Why could you not get it profitably?—A. It would be possible, perhaps, to get a little and sell it at retail, but it would not be marketable. It would not be fit for the market.

Q. Why do you say you could not get any of the size you call pea?-A. For the same reason.

Q. Do you know anything about a rock pile that forms a part of the dump?-A. Yes. There are two rock piles forming a part of it.

Q. Do you see the map back there?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is an enlargement of the map made by Mr. Rittenhouse and introduced in evidence. I wish you would go back to the map and with a pointer tell us what you are talking about. [The witness did as requested.]—A. There is a large rock dump and ash dump in the bottom of this pile [indicating on map].

Q. You say there is a large ash dump in the bottom of it?-

Yes, sir.

Q. It is not culm at all, then?-A. No, sir.

Q. I mean the bottom.—A. Yes; the bottom.

Q. What is there besides ash at the bottom?-A. Rock and ashes. The ash was formed from the boilers, coming out from here [indicating], and we afterwards-

Q. Please talk so I can hear you .- A. The rock and ash pile were dumped in here, and we afterwards had to hoist or convey the slushings, and so we put in some refuse coal-small, fine coal—and made a large conical dump of this [indicating].

Q. Take that conical dump by itself. What is it worth to anybody who tries to get some coal out of it?-A. There is only a small quantity of No. 3 buck in it.

Q. Would it pay to get it out?-A. I do not think so.

Q. Very well. Go on with the rest of it .- A. Then we sunk a long slope coming in on it in this direction [indicating], and all the rock that was taken from that slope was dumped in here [indicating]. It would be absolutely impossible for any surveyor coming there and seeing that dump as it is to-day to make a correct estimate unless he knew the topography of that ground before the dump was laid down.

Q. Go ahead. What about the rest of it?-A. Then the rest out in this direction [indicating] contains nothing but No. 3 buck.

Q. Take that Katydid dump as a whole. I ask you agair whether, in your judgment as the man who made it and a man who has been in this business, there is enough coal there to pay for getting it out?-A. Well, I do not consider that there was.

- Q. What is the situation there as to water? You say it is a washery and you need water. How is it situated with reference to that necessity?-A. When the washery was commenced we had been able to secure a large quantity of water by means of a barrier pillar existing between the Delaware & Hudson and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., with which we were working. I think in 1907 the Delaware & Hudson broke through that barrier pillar and took all our water away, so that it became very difficult to run the washery.
- Q. I understand that you still hold that dump?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Claim the ownership of it, at least, subject to a royalty to the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. of 37½ cents a ton?—A. Decidedly.
- Q. Has there been anything in the last four years to keep you from working it and paying that royalty and getting the profit there was in it, if there was any?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Do you know anything about an effort that was made to sell this dump to the Du Pont Powder Co.?-A. Yes, sir,

Q. When was that?-A. In 1908, after the breaker and washery were burned.

Q. What was there about that?—A. The Du Pont Powder Co. were erecting a large new powder mill close to the property we were mining on. Indeed, some of it is on that property. and Mr. Belin, who is one of the managers of the Du Pont Powder Co.

Q. I am not able to hear, Mr. Robertson.—A. (Continuing.) Mr. Belin asked me if I was willing to sell the dump. They thought of using it for the-

Q. Well, I do not care about the details of that. What I want to get at is whether any offer was made by you and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. to sell it to the Du Pont Powder Co.?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the proposition?-A. The proposition was I offered it to them for $10,000, including the royalty, and they would then own the dump complete.

Q. That is, they would actually get your title and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.'s title?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you arrange that with the Hillside Coal & Iron What were they to get out of the $10,000?-A. I saw Mr. May, the general manager of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and I told him about the offer, and he sent his engineers down, and they measured the dump and found the quantity of coal they thought it contained. By means of screening they found out the quantity of the different sizes, and, based on these reports, they figured out that their value in the dump was about $2,000.

Q. Did the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. authorize you then to sell that dump for $10,000-to keep $8,000 yourself and give them

$2,000?—A. Mr. May said he would recommend that.
Q. Mr. May said he would recommend that? That is what he

Mr. Manager STERLING. I object to the statement of the counsel for two reasons.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will withdraw it, then.

Mr. Manager STERLING. First, it is improper, if true, and, in the second place, he never said anything of the kind.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not want to get into an argument with counsel, but there is a letter here of March 31, in which he says that he would recommend the sale of the interest of his company for $4,500.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I never saw the letter. He said on the witness stand that he did not recommend it. I have never seen any such letter. There is here, Mr. President, a letter in which he says he would recommend the sale for $4,500.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I say that is what he said here about the sale to Judge Archbald and Mr. Williams.

Mr. Manager STERLING. He is now talking about the Du

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Counsel misunderstood what I meant, probably. I was only saying that Mr. May in this case had recommended the sale of the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is not what counsel said at l. He said the witness said what Mr. May said.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, let us go on with the evidence, and I will withdraw my remark.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Why was not that sale made, then?—A. The Dupont Powder Co. was also trying to find out for how much they could buy their electricity direct from the Scranton Electric Co., and they found that was the cheaper way to get it, and they are getting it from them now.

Q. They determined to get their coal some other way. Did you at any time in 1911 give an option to anybody on this dump or your interest in it?—A. In nineteen hundred and—

Q. In 1911, to Mr. Williams?—A. Yes; I gave Mr. Williams an option.

Q. Tell us how that came about .-- A. In April or May, I think it was, certainly in the early part of 1911, Mr. Williams came to my office and he asked if the dump was still for sale. I told him it was. He wanted to know if I would give him an option on it, and I said no; and he said then that he had some parties in with him.

Q. Keep your voice up; I can not hear you.—A. He said there were some parties with him that he thought I would lease to. I said, "Well, you had better tell me who they are, because I certainly can not deal with them unless I know who they are." He told me Judge Archbald wanted to get it. He told me they had some parties they thought they could sell it to.

Q. Did you agree to give him any option or privilege about it?-A. I did.

Q. What was it?-A. I gave him an option, I think, in Sep-

Q. What did you tell him when he came there in the spring?-A. I told him that I had a good deal of difficulty at first in finding out who was with him. I asked him if Mr. Bone was connected with it, and he said no. Then he told me Judge Archbald was.

Q. Did you then make any proposition or say what you would do? I know you did not give him any w.itten option until later, but did you in the spring tell him what you would do?-A. I think I offered him the dump first for $5,000, and then he came to me a little later and said the deal would be consummated in about two weeks. I said, "Well, if you can pull it through in two weeks, I will give you a reduction; I will make it $3,500."

Q. Did you consider $3,500 was a fair sum for your interest in the dump at that time?-A. I considered it was reasonable; I was willing to take it.

Q. You later gave him a written option, which is in evidence here?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was in September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You gave him a paper which is in the handwriting of and witnessed by Judge Archbald?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. Did you ask him any compensation for giving him that option?-A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you give him authority of that kind without getting any compensation for it?—A. Well, by this time I understood whom they were trying to sell it to, and I was willing to help the think along in any way.

Q. To whom did you understand they were trying to sell it?—A. The Erie & Wyoming Valley Railroad. I think that is the name.

Q. The Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley, is it not?-A. Yes; the Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley.

Q. What is called the Laurel line for short?—A. Yes.

Q. A little line between Wilkes-Barre and Scranton?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you have been here throughout this trial?-A. Yes.

Q. Under subpæna by the managers?-A. Yes.

Q. Have you stated to them what you know?-A. Not on this occasion, I have not; no, sir.

Q. Oh, you did that before the Judiciary Committee?-A.

Q. You were examined there by the managers?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Manager STERLING. I do not think the last few questions are material at all. We did not use him because we did not think anything he knew was material to the case. We ask, for that reason, to have the last few questions stricken from the record.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will not take up any time on that with the managers. If the managers insist upon that motion will withdraw the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands counsel to withdraw the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understood Mr. Manager Sterling to say he did not consider it material. I supposed if it was material for Mr. Rittenhouse to give his opinion as to the value of the dump, it was material to get the opinion of the man who made it as to its value.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I was objecting to the last few questions. My objection did not go to the other matter at all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I make no objection to the motion to strike out the question to the witness about being subpænaed by the managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you at any time receive Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you at any time receive any notice from anybody about what is called the Everhart claim upon this dump?—A. Yes, sir; I did.
Q. Have you got this notice?—A. Yes, sir; I have.
Q. When did you receive it?—A. I think—
Q. (Interposing.) Well, you have them, have you? They will show for themselves.—A. Yes, sir; I have them.
Q. Where are they, in your pecket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are they—in your pocket?—A. Yes, sir.

(The witness produced certain papers.)
Mr. Manager STERLING (after examining the papers). We have no objection to them.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask that these be marked and that the Secretary read them. There are others that come later.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit O.]

(Walter S. Bevan, attorney and counselor, Scranton, Pa.) APRIL 11, 1912.

Messrs. Robertson & Law, Moosic, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: Having learned that you are about to sell and dispose of the interests you represent in lot No. 46, certified Pittston Township, you are hereby notified that Mr. Charles P. Holden, who owns certain interests in said lot, opposes said sale and hereby protests against the same, and he further notifies you that the sale will in no wise change or affect his interests in said lot and that the said sale will be made without his approval or consent.

You will therefore govern yourselves accordingly.

Very truly, yours,

WALTER S. BEVAN, Attorney for Charles P. Holden.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In connection with the letter, I should like to have in evidence the envelope, in order to show that it was mailed on the day it bears date.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit O-part 2.]

(Walter S. Bevan, attorney and counselor, Scranton, Pa.) Messrs. Robertson & Law, Moosic, Pa.

Stamped on the front: "Scranton, Pa., Apr. 11, 5 p. m., 1912." Stamped on the back: "Moosic, Pa., Apr. 12, 8 a. m., 1912, rec'd."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the next exhibit.

The Secretary read as follows:

Stamped on the back: "Moosic, Pa., Apr. 12, 8 a. m., 1912. Rec'd." The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next exhibit will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit Q.]

(Gaston, Snow & Saltonstall, Shawmut Bank Building, Boston.) APRIL 13, 1912.

Messrs. Robertson & Law, Connell Building, Scranton, Pa. Gentlemen: Please take notice that Nina D. E. Jones and R. M. Saltonstall, the undersigned, as guardians of the minor children of John F. Everhart, deceased, claim an interest in the culm pile on lot 46, Pittston Township, Luzerne County, Pa.

This notice is given to you at this time as we understand that you are contemplating attempting to make a sale of the culm pile and in order to protect our rights in the premises. We should be glad to hear from you in reply to this letter at your early convenience.

Very truly, yours,

R. M. Saltonstall.

R. M. SALTONSTALL, Per O.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I offer the envelope which inclosed the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next exhibit will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit R.] (Night letter.)

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 11, 1912.

ROBERTSON & LAW, Connell Building, Scranton, Pa.:

Please take notice that I claim an interest in the culm dumps situated on lot 46, certified Pittston, Luzerne County, Pa., by virtue of an option given me by E. & G. Burke Land Co.; also on behalf on wife, Mary E. Holden.

CHAS. P. HOLDEN, 625 Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, Mass.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) After your washery burned down, in 1908, what, if anything, did you do in the way of exercising ownership over that bank?—A. Well, I still have a scale there.

Q. Did you take anything away from it from time to time?-A. Yes; I sold some small bunches of coal from wagons.

Q. In reference to Judge Archbald's connection with this matter, I want to know if at any time anybody suggested to you that the fact that he was interested was to be kept quiet or covered up in any way?-A. No, sir.

Q. And did you, as a mater of fact, undertake to keep it from anybody?—A. No; I made no secret of it.

Q. It appears that the option which you gave to Mr. Williams, and which is in Judge Archbald's handwriting and witnessed by him, was recorded. Did you have anything to do with the recording of it?-A. No.

Q. You did not?-A. I did not know it was recorded until I saw it here at the previous inquiry.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is with the man-

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to move that all the testimony of this witness be stricken from the record. The reason for the motion is this: There is no charge in this count that the dump was sold to Judge Archbald and to Mr. Williams at less than it was worth or for more than it was worth, and under the charge in this count it is wholly immaterial as to what the value of the dump was.

It is not sufficient for counsel to say that we offered testi-mony of an engineer to show the amount of coal there. If it was not material to the issue, they could have objected to it then, and it would have gone out of the record. The fact that we offered immaterial testimony does not justify them in offering immaterial testimony in answer to immaterial testimony. The charge in the count is that Judge Archbald used his official influence to induce the railroad companies to sell this property to them-to Mr. Williams and Judge Archbaldand it is wholly immaterial whether he induced them to sell it for less or for more than it was worth. The offense exists in either event, and we say this testimony is wholly immaterial. We ask a ruling of the Chair on the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not desire to hear from counsel on this motion.

As the Chair recollects, there has been a great deal of evidence on the subject of the culm bank. The Chair denies the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Notwithstanding the rule that one should never argue with a court that has decided in his

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is dangerous.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I wish not to make an argument, but to state what happened here.

I objected to Mr. Rittenhouse's testimony on the very ground that counsel argues in favor of the motion to strike this out, and counsel resisted my objection to keep out the evidence. President sustained their contention, to the effect that it was claimed by the managers that the railroad company had agreed to sell this dump to Judge Archbald for less than it was worth, and that as that was evidence in this direction it should be admitted. Now, when they come to see where they are going to land on the proposition, they think there ought not to be any evidence on the subject in the record.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We are not concerned about where we will land. Counsel admits it is immaterial.

Whether counsel made the objection at the time, I do not remember. But it certainly ought to go out if both sides admit it is immaterial.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is a late day, Mr. President, after the Senators have heard the testimony about the great value of the dump, now to move to strike it out, when it can not be gotten out of their minds. I submitted it too late for the managers to change front-

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. It is no change of front bn the part of the managers.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When it appears that, instead of offering to sell it to Judge Archbald for less than it was worth, they were giving him a gold brick.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has overruled the motion to strike out. The Chair thinks it is admissible on both sides—that offered by the managers and that offered by the respondent.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Robertson, you did have negotiations with the Du Pont Powder Co. for the sale of this culm bank?-A. Yes.

Q. That was in 1908?—A. Yes. Q. And you priced it at $10,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If that sale had gone through, you were to get $8,000 and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. $2,000?—A. That is correct.

Q. Have coal dumps increased in value in the last two or three years?—A. I think they have a little.

Q. And the coal dump was probably worth more in 1911, when you had your negotiations with Williams, than it was in 1908?-A. Probably a little; they are in greater demand to-day than they were then.

Q. And notwithstanding that you were to get $8,000 for your share of the coal dump in 1908, three years later, after the value had advanced, you agreed to take $3,500 for your share, did you not?—A. That is true.

Q. You testified before the Judiciary Committee, did you not, that the coal dump was worth more than $10,000 in 1908, when you were about to sell it to the Du Pont people?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit that if the witness is asked what he said there it ought to be shown to him.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I do not have to show it to him.

I can ask him and then show it to him.

The WITNESS. That would depend upon who was buying it.
Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) On the market. I am not asking what it was worth. Did you not say before the Judiciary Committee that it was worth more than $10,000 in 1908? Did you say that or not ?-A. I think I did, Mr. STERLING.

Q. That was true, too, was it not?-A. Yes. It is also true

Q. What is that?—A. There have been larger sums than that paid for dumps.

Q. I am not asking you that. But what you said before the Judiciary Committee was true?—A. I think so.

Q. And it was worth more than $10,000 then, and it had increased in value in 1911, had it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you submitted to Mr. May, superintendent of the Hillside Co., a proposition that he sell his interest for $2,000?— A. He made that offer to me.

Q. Just answer my question. Did you not say on your direct examination that you suggested to Mr. May he could sell it for that price, if he would take $2,000 for his share? Did you say -A. That I could sell it?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you said that Mr. May said he would recommend the proposition?-A. He did.

Q. Do you know whether he ever did recommend it or not?-

A. No; it fell through.

Q. That does not answer my question. Do you know that he recommended it?—A. I do not know that he did.
Q. Did you ever inquire if he did?—No; I never did.
Q. How long after that was it until it fell through?—A. I think about a month, or two months, perhaps, certainly not more than three.

Q. When Mr. May said he would recommend it he did not say whether he would approve it, did he?-A. No; he only said he would recommend it.

Q. Did he say he would recommend it or submit it?-A. Recommend it, I think.

Q. If Mr. May testified that he did not recommend it and did not approve it, do you not think that you could be mis-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to trying to get one witness to testify upon what some other witness said about it.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will withdraw the question. Perhaps it is not within the rule. [To the witness:] When Williams came to you, in 1911, to buy this dump, you would not price it to him until you found out who was interested in it?-A. No, sir.

Q. You did ask him who was interested in it?-A. I did. Q. Whom did he tell you was interested?—A. At first he refused to tell me, and afterwards told me Judge Archbald.

Q. What did he say when you first asked him?—A. He said if I knew the party he thought I would be willing to sell to them.

Q. I do not understand your answer.—A. He said if I knew the party with whom he was connected he thought I would be willing to sell to him.

Q. Is that all he said then?—A. A great deal was said. I do not remember it all.

Q. Did he refuse to give the names of his partners?—A. He did at first.

Q. What reason did he give for not giving the names?—A. I think he wanted the option for himself first.

Q. Just for himself?—A. Yes.

Would you have sold it to him?-A. No, sir.

Q. Why?—A. I did not think he was responsible.

Now, what difference did it make, Mr. Robertson, whether Williams was responsible or not if you understood that you were not to get any money out of it until he had sold it to somebody else?—A. I did not care to deal with Mr. Williams. Q. Did he tell you that Boland was interested?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he tell you that Archbald was interested?—A. He did. Q. Later?—A. Finally.

Q. How long after the first conversation was it until he told you that Archbald was interested?-A. This was all in the first conversation.

Q. It was all in the first conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He finally told you that Judge Archbald was interested?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were willing to sell it?—A. Yes.
Q. What reason did you have for refusing to sell it to some persons and being willing to sell it to others?—A. Well, I wanted to be sure that I got a party that would not make any trouble for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. How was that?-A. I wanted to be sure I got parties interested who would not make any trouble for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. What difference did it make to you whether they made trouble for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. or not?-A. The Hillside Coal & Iron Co. had leased me this property and I did not want them to get into trouble.

Q. When he suggested that Judge Archbald was one of the purchasers, you knew he would not make any trouble for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. or the Erie Railroad Co., did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

- Q. You were therefore willing to sell to him?-A. Yes, sir. Q. You say that there was no secrecy about the fact that Judge Archbald was interested?—A. Not any.
 - Q. You drew up the option, did you not, personally?-A. No.

Q. Who did?—A. Judge Archbald.

- Q. And you noticed that in the written option Judge Archbald's name was not there?—A. I did; yes.
 Q. So that, so far as the option itself shows, nobody was buying this option but Williams?—A. It was what the option showed: yes.
- Q. During these negotiations did you go to Judge Archbald's office?-A. I did.

Q. He sent for you, did he?-A. Yes, sir.

- Q. When was that?-A. That was very shortly after I first saw Williams.
- Q. And you talked with him fully about the transaction?—A. I did; yes.
- Q. And was it then you priced it at $3,500?-A. No; I had priced it to Mr. Williams before that, Q. You priced it to Mr. Williams?—A. Yes,

- Q. When you had the negotiations with the du Pont people you were claiming that you and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.
- owned all the title to this dump?—A. Yes, sir.
 Q. Except the Everharts?—A. The Everharts then did not enter into it.
- Q. Were they getting any royalty?—A. I never had any transaction with the Everharts, although I knew they were getting a royalty for the coal that was mined, some part of the coal.

Q. You knew, then, their claim, did you not?-A. Not as the fact stands to-day.

Q. You knew they had a claim of some kind then?-A. Not in the dump; no, sir.

Q. Did you put anything in the option which you gave to these parties about the Everhart interest?-A. I did not.

Q. But the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. did, did they not?-A. I believe they did. Q. You knew they had been paying royalty to the Everhart estate on the coal that was mined, did you not?-A. On sizes above pea.

- Q. And that they had paid that to the Everharts for years, did you not?-A. Yes.
- Q. You say that on or about April 11, 1912, you got some notices from Holden & Holden's attorney and other persons about the sale of this property?-A. I did.

Q. Did that deter you from selling the property in any way?-A. Well, I did not make any further attempt to sell it.

- Q. That did not deter you, did it? It was not the notices that deterred you, was it?—A. Well, I would have taken some advice before I sold it.
- Q. Did you notify Mr. Williams to return the option you had given him for your interest in the dump?—A. No, sir.
- Q. As Bradley did?-A. The option had expired by that time. Q. You did not make any effort to withdraw the option, but just allowed it to stand?—A. I did not consider there was any existing option at all then. It had expired some time previ-
 - Q. Did you know Holden?-A. No, sir.

Q. When you got this letter from him, it was the first you knew of him?-A. Yes.

Q. Did you learn he had been to May's office on the 11th and May had notified him that they were about to sell?-A. I think Mr. May told me he had had letters from them.

- Q. That is not the question. Did you know he had been to May's office and May notified him he was about to sell it?-A. No; I did not know he had been at his office at that time.
- Q. Do you know whether or not May suggested to Holden that he had better get in his notice about the claim and have other persons get in their notices?-A. No; I did not learn that,
- Q. When did you first learn that the investigation was going on of these transactions?—A. When it first came out in the papers. I do not remember the exact date.

Q. This notice from Bevans & Co. reached you on the 12th or 11th?-A. About that time.

Q. Do you know which date?-A. No, I do not, Mr. Sterling. I kept all the envelopes. The date would be right on the envelopes.

Q. As to this letter from Heckel, administrator, you knew that was the interest on which the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. had been paying royalty for years, did you not?—A. Yes. I did not know anything about the heirs. I did not know who the heirs were until then. I presume these are only a small portion of them. Q. You knew about the Everhart interest, did you not?—A. Oh, yes.

- Q. Had you ever heard of R. M. Saltonstall before?-A. Never Q. When you got that letter did you know he had any interest - in it?—A. I could not tell whether he had or not.

 Q. Do you know what interest he has?—A. No; I do not.
- Q. Have you inquired since that time as to what he based his claim on?—A. No, sir.

 Q. The reason of it is because you care nothing about it to know that he has no interest?-A. I do not say that; no.

Q. Did you not testify before the Judiciary Committee that yourself and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. owned all the title to this property?-A. I did. I believed that then.

Q. You believe it now?-A. I do.

Q. Except the Everhart interest?-A. I do.

- Q. Therefore, these notices had not any effect at all on you with reference to your attitude toward the sale to Williams and Archbald?-A. The sale to Williams and Archbald?
- Q. Just answer my question. Did that have any effect on your mind?-A. I scarcely catch that.
- Q. Did the fact that you got these notices on the 11th or 12th have any effect on you with reference to your attitude in regard to going ahead and making this sale to Williams and Archbald?-A. Before?

Q. When you got the notices.—A. Before I received these notices I considered that Williams's option had expired.

- Q. I am not asking you about that. You were still willing to carry it out, were you not?-A. I do not think they asked me to carry it out.
- Q. You were willing to do it if they had asked you? knew that Bradley was proceeding to sell the Hillside interest, did you not?-A. I do not think I would have carried it out without consulting my lawyer.

Q. You have never conceded any interest in any of this matter to the Everharts, have you?-A. No.

Q. And you are not conceding anything now?-A. No.

- Q. In the option which you made to Williams and Archbald you did not pretend to make any warranty, did you?-A. No, sir. Q. You were just selling that interest, were you not?-A.
- That was all. Q. And if you had gone on and made the sale, and if these persons tried to lay claim then to some title, that would not have affected you in any way, would it?—A. I had nothing to - do, only with the mining part of the dump, the mining interest. Q. You did not pretend to be selling any of their interest anyhow, did you?—A. No.

Q. You talked with Mr. May about the negotiations from time to time, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You talked with him about whom you were selling it to, did you not?-A. Yes.

Q. It was understood by you and May right along that you were selling it to Judge Archbald and Williams?-A. Perfectly;

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Have you made any effort to sell your interest in the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. to Capt. May?-A. I have.

Q. Had you before you gave Williams the option?-A. Yes.

Q. For how long?—A. Ever since the Du Pont people had given up.

Q. He would not buy it?-A. He said that they were not ready to take it; that they had no washery at that time.

Q. You said you first learned of this investigation when it came out in the papers. In what papers did you see it first?-A. I think in the Scranton papers.

Q. So if we find when it first came out in the Scranton papers we will find when you first knew of it?-A. The first I knew - of it.

 Q. You said you would not have gone on with this negotiation without consulting counsel. Why would you not?-A. I would scarcely care to sell an interest in it until I knew just where the Everharts stood.
- Q. I need hardly ask you, but you are not a lawyer?-A. No, sir.
- Q. After getting this notice you never undertook to go on with the sale?—A. No, sir.
 Q. And you would not have done so until you consulted counsel?-A. I do not think I would.

Q. You said May never did recommend $2,000, so far as you know. Did he not authorize you to go on and complete arrangements with the Du Pont Powder Co. to sell for $10,000 his whole interest?—A. Yes. He understood-Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to t

We object to the witness stating what Capt. May understood.

The Witness. I had told Mr. May I would sell it to them if - they were willing to take it, of course.

 Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Had you told him you were willing to sell to the Du Pont Powder Co. for $10,000?—A. Yes.
- Q. You arranged with May what, if you effected that sale, he would recommend?-A. Yes.

O. That is, to sell the interest of his company for $2.000?-A. That was understood.

Q. As the counsel asked you, without reading, what you said before the Judiciary Committee, I will read your testimony from page 833:

The Chairman. Do you know what the Katydid culm bank is worth? Mr. Robertson. I have no figures to base it on, but I should say it worth just that $10,000 that I originally offered it for, including

The Chairman. You do not know whether it is worth more or not?

Mr. Robertson. It might possibly be worth a little more. The things are gradually increasing in value.

That is what you said?—A. Yes, sir; I said that.
Mr. Manager STERLING. That is what I said, too.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire. Is there any further need for this witness?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Not on our part.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. There is something further we may need him for, but not now. It may raise some question, want to wait and bring it up at another time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will wait until he is further called.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM LAW.

William Law appeared, and having been duly sworn was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Law, where do you live?—A. Chevy. Chase, Md.

Q. Have you at any time lived at Scranton?-A. Yes, sir. was born in Scranton and lived in that section until 1904.

Q. Were you at any time connected with Mr. Robertson, who has just left the stand, of the firm of Robertson & Law? A. Yes, sir; from 1891 until 1904; the Katydid colliery.

Q. You have been down here quite a while, Mr. Law?-A. I have lived in Chevy Chase for three years,

Q. You see the map which is right opposite you on the wall? Do you recognize it as a map of the Katydid culm dump?-A. Yes; it looks like it. It has been changed some since I was there.

Q. Your connection with it ceased in 1904?-A. In 1904; that is, before they commenced to wash any of it.

Q. So you do not know much about the contents or value of the bank?-A. No.

Q. You see marked on that map, down in the southwest corner, I might call it, a "conical dump"?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know what that is made of?—A. I do not know what the cone is made of above ground, but I know what is underneath.

Q. What is it?-A. Ashes and rock.

Q. Can you give us any idea about how high up that ashes and rock come from the surface of the ground?-A. Well, there was a hollow there, you know, and the ashes from the fireroom were hauled out and dumped there for all the years that I was

Q. How about the rock?—A. The rock was brought there from the Grover slope, what we called the Klondike slope, and the corner slope between 450 and 500 feet deep, 7 feet by 12 in That rock is all in that dump. It is not all under that conical pile, but it is all in the dump,

Q. It is somewhere in the Katydid dump?-A. Yes: in the Katydid dump.

Q. Where it can not be seen?—A. Where it can not be seen. It was covered over with culm.

Q. You had ashes below and piled rock on that, and afterwards coal or culm was put on top of the rock? Is that it?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President, that we have to ask of this witness.

Cross-examination.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Law, you severed your connection with Robertson in 1904?—A. Yes, sir; I think in June, 1904.

Q. Have you given any attention to this colliery since then?-

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen it?-A. I have seen it once or twice, but I guess it has been four years ago since I was there.

Q. The colliery was operated for four years after you left it, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. They continued to add culm there to that dump for four years after you severed your connection with it?-A. Yes; but I might say in explanation-

Mr. Manager STERLING. You have answered the question.

That is all I want.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What was it you might say? I should like to hear it.—A. I say, when I sold out my interest in the mining proposition—that is, the coal in the ground—the reason I sold my interest was that we had that nearly mined.

reason I sold my interest was that we had that nearly mined.
Q. What you did subsequently was in the way of washing the dump?—A. The tonnage had declined so Mr. Robertson built the washery in order to keep up the output of material.
Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) They did operate the colliery for four years after you left?—A. Yes, sir.
Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all, Mr. President.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all for this time.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire. TESTIMONY OF JOHN MONIE.

John Monie appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Monie, where do you live, please?-A. Moosic, Pa.

Q. How far is that from Scranton?-A. About 6 miles.

Q. How long have you lived there?—A. For the last 40 years. Q. How old are you, by the way?-A. Between 50 and 51 years of age.

Q. Were you at any time in the employ of the firm of Robertson & Law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Foreman. Q. Foreman of what?—A. Outside foreman at their colliery.

Where was that?-A. At Moosic.

Q. We want to find out something about the Katydid dump .--A. All right; I will answer the questions if I can.

Q. How ?-A. I will tell the truth.

Q. You have not yet mentioned the Katydid dump. Did you have anything to do with it?-A. Yes, sir; I was foreman for 16 years.

Q. You were foreman while that dump was being constructed?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You see the map on the wall back there?—A. I do.

Q. I wish you would go back to it—you will find a wooden pointer there—and tell us about the material in the different parts of that dump, as far as you know.—A. (Standing at the map and indicating.) Under this conical dump there is an ash They dumped their ashes for about, it may be, 15 to 16 years before that dump was put there. This dump is composed of the slate from the breaker; and the barley is still there, but all sizes above barley were taken out.

Q. Above what?-A. Barley or buckwheat No. 3.

Q. All the chestnut has been taken out?-A. Yes, sir. Q. The pea?-A. Yes, sir; all sizes such as could be taken

Mr. Manager STERLING. I object to the form of examination by counsel, and I think he ought to observe the rule of testimony to some degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the objection of managers?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will ask that the questions be answered. Go ahead, Mr. Monie, and tell us.-A. There is also a part of a rock dump here. There has been a slope sunk here [indicating] called the Klondike slope. When that slope was first started we hauled the coal from down about here, up along on this side [indicating] and landed it away up about here [indicating]. We had rock cut, it may be an average of 4 feet deep and about 100 feet long, through here [indicating]. We dumped the refuse from that rock cut in here [indicating]. We had to make a fill there [indicating] to make a grade for the mine track. We took the mined rock from other mines that they had and filled in here, I will say, in the neighborhood of 100 feet. Then at the same time we were making this fill from this side we hauled the culm from the breaker. The breaker stood in around here [indicating].

O. You hauled what ?- A. The culm and slate, and dumped it in here to make this fill. Then we saw we did not have enough of track room out here to make the back branch for the mine cars. We took the rock from this slope and dumped it along. dumped culm and rock at the same time to form this back That runs out to about here, right in around here some place [indicating]. Then, after that we got a point of dumping ground for the culm, and we decided then to make a fill out through here [indicating]. We also saw that by making a fill through here, instead of hauling the coal up to the breaker in this direction, we could haul it around this way. In order to do that we had to make quite a high fill here. We took the mine rock from all the operations that they had and filled down in around here [indicating]; it may be 100 to 150 feet. would not say just the exact distance. We came from this point [indicating] and met. That made the track then come around the opposite direction. The reason we had for doing that was it saved a lot of switching. We could hitch on the locomotive and pull up to the breaker, and we would have had to do a lot of switching to go the old way. There is the Klondike slope as they call it [indicating]. That is nearly solid with rock. There is very little of the slush washed down on top if it. It might be 3 or 4 feet deep, but it is practically solid with mined rock; and along in here, from the mouth of the mine, we had to make some filling on the grade [indicating]. All through here, I am not quite sure, but more in this direction, we dumped the rock and the culm side by side to make this back branch. You can see some of the mine rock right about here, I think [indicating].

That is about all I know about it.

Q. Did you remain there until the washery burned?—A. Not until the washery burned. They stopped operations at the end of June, 1908.

Q. The washery burned when?-A. I could not say exactly when, but it was a considerable time after that,

Q. They stopped work before the washery burned?—A. Yes, ir. I was away before that. I stayed with them until July 30, 1908, a month after they stopped.

Q. Did I understand you to say that they had stopped operation before the washery burned?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. Why?-A. Because they were short of water. They only had water enough to run about two hours a day, and it did not pay to run it like that.

Q. How long were you there while they were engaged in washing coal from that bank, trying to win some coal from it?-A. All the time they run; that is, all the time they washed it. I made the changes.

Q. You were in charge of that operation?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us what you know about getting the size which is called chestnut out of that bank.—A. At the beginning we tried to make chestnut, and we failed utterly.

Q. Why?-A. Because we could not take the slate out to bring it down to the standard that the inspector called for.

Q. What did you do with it then?-A. We just stopped trying to make it and run the stuff back out in the bank.

Q. What is the best part of a culm bank? The old part or the new part, or what?-A. The old part.

Q. The old part is better? Why?-A. Because at one time they did not try to make buckwheat at all. They did make down as low as pea when I went there.

Q. Were there larger sizes on the old dump rather than on the new one?-A. Not any more than what we got out mixed in with the slate.

Q. Tell now what part of the bank was it that Mr. Robertson worked while you were there; was it the old part, the new part, or part of each?-A. That is, which they washed?

Q. Yes .- A. They washed the old part.

Q. They washed the better part?-A. Yes; they washed along in here [indicating]. They stopped their operation when their conveyor line was out here [indicating]. This was considered the best part of the bank right here [indicating].

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Monie, point to the southwest corner of the map. You say that is a fill?—A. This was covered with ashes to the depth—

Q. No; that is not answering my question. I undestood it was a fill. Did you say that?—A. Yes, sir; there is a fill from this point here [indicating] running through there [indicating] where it runs out. It took a swing around right out to about there [indicating].

Q. Just show what part of that figure in the southwest corner is a fill; run your pointer around that part of it which is a fill .- A. In about that direction [indicating] probably to about there [indicating].

Q. How wide was that?-A. About 8 feet on the top.

Q. About 8 feet on the top?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you filled that up with rock and ashes?-A. With mine rock; yes, sir, Q. The rock which you got from the colliery?-A. Yes, sir; from the mine.

Q. How high is that conical dump there in the southwest corner?-A. On this side here [indicating] I would say in the neighborhood of 30 feet, or something like that. I do not know the exact height, you understand. I just state that from

Q. How high is it on the other side?-A. Well, it is fully 20 feet more than that-20 or 25 feet.

Q. Fifty feet, then, you would say?-A. Oh, yes; it is fully

Q. Fifty or sixty feet?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how far across is that part called the conical dump the narrow way?-A. Across this way [indicating]?

Q. Yes .- A. At the top or at the bottom?

Q. Well, both-how wide is it?-A. Well, at the top I should say it is around 20 feet.

Q. And how wide is it at the bottom?-A. Well, I think the natural spread would be about 11 to 1.

O. That would be about 30 feet?-A. Oh, it is more than that; a long distance. It is over a hundred feet, I think.

Q. A hundred feet wide and 20 feet high?-A. I think it must be. Q. You speak about a fill along the northeast line of the map?-A. Right here [indicating].

Q. How deep was that fill?-A. Well, a bluff runs along through here [indicating].

Q. Just run your pointer along the line of the fill.—A. The fill originally, I should say, was in around here and along there [indicating].

Q. How deep is it?-A. Well, from memory I would say it must be 50 feet there [indicating], may be more. It is all of 50 feet, I think, at the higher part.

Q. And how wide?-A. About 8 feet.

Q. And you filled that in with stone?-A. We filled this in with mine rock; yes, sir; for about 100 feet-more or less.

Q. Beginning at the northwest corner of the map where you see the word "culm."—A. Right here [indicating]?

Q. Yes, sir. That indicates that that which is included within that space is culm?-A. It is culm and slate that has been picked out at the breaker.

Q. It is what you call culm, is it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the space at the right, the figure in the northeast corner there?-A. Along here [indicating]?

Q. Yes .- A. That is culm with the exception of the part here [indicating].

Q. With the exception of the fill, I understand; and through the center, running from the northeast to the southwest?-A. Through here [indicating]?

Q. No; not the slush bank. I am not talking about that .- A. Northeast; here [indicating]?

Q. No; you see the word "culm" about the center of the map?—A. Well, yes; there [indicating].

That is the culm in there, is it not?—A. Well, partly. On that side [indicating] is culm, and on this side [indicating] is rock taken from the mine to help make the fill.

Q. Now, listen to my question. That which is inclosed within the line marked "culm" is culm, and the rock is the rest of the figure there just below the word "culm," is it not? That is the rock, is it not?-A. In around here [indicating]; yes, sir.

Q. Now, the slush bank; what does that mean?-A. That should have been rock bank instead of slush bank.

Q. Well, people do not sell rock banks nor slush banks, either, do they?-A. No, sir.

Q. That is no part of this culm, is it?-A. No, sir. That is almost solid rock.

Q. This culm bank was made in the operation of the Katydid colliery, was it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was made just as all culm banks are made at anthracite mines?-A. With the exception of those fills.

Q. By throwing together the coal, the rock, and the slate and whatever comes from the mine?—A. Throwing out the impurities. Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all,

Redirect examination:

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Monie, do you mean to say that the proportion of rock, slate, and so forth, to coal is the same in all culm banks?—A. Well, no.

Q. Some are much worse than others?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. From your knowledge of these things, is this a good one or a bad one?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. The witness has not stated that he knows anything about any other culm bank than this one

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One moment. [To the witness:] Do you know anything about any culm banks except this one?-Well, I have worked around anthracite collieries nearly all my life.

Q. How does this bank stand for proportion of rock, ashes, and that sort of thing in it, as compared with others?-A. Along here [indicating] it was considered a good dump; that is, rich in fine sizes; but that was all washed in before the colliery stopped. We washed in right through to this point [indicating]. Along in around here [indicating] there is a piece there that is right in the fine sizes. All through here [indicating] and all through here [indicating] there is nothing but barley. There is some rice in here [indicating], but not much. Everything was taken out with the exception of the rice and the barley in this part [indicating], and everything with the exception of the barley, or buck No. 3, as some people call it, in this part [indicating]. So that this [indicating] is of very little value. This [indicating] is a little better, but not much. Right here [indicating] there is a spot that is quite good.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire,

TESTIMONY OF FRANK A. JOHNSON.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Call Mr. Johnson, please.

Mr. Frank A. Johnson, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Johnson, give us your full name, please.—A. Frank A. Johnson.

Q. Where do you live?-A. Moosic, Pa.

Q. Near Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How are you employed now?-A. I am the general coal inspector for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. How long have you been general inspector of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?—A. About nine years.

Q. Did you at any time make any examination of the Katydid dump near Moosic?—A. Yes, sir. Q. When and why?—A. I made an examination and tested the Katydid dump on April 4, 1911.

Q. At whose request; did you say?—A. Mr. May's chief clerk instructed me to do so.

Q. On April 4, 1911?-A. I believe that was the date; yes, sir. Q. What knowledge had you before that time about this dump and where it was built or made?-A. Well, I had been on that ground daily or weekly for 17 or 18 years.

Q. Did you see the dump as it went along building from day to day?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. For that length of time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I wish you would state when you went there, on or about the 4th of April, 1911, what did you do and what conclusion you reached?—A. Mr. May's chief clerk instructed me to meet Engineer Merriman there, and that I should sample the bank, which Mr. Merriman was going to measure.

Q. Mr. Merriman, I believe, is dead, I may ask you here?—A. Yes, sir. I met Mr. Merriman on the morning of April 4, and he, knowing that I was familiar with the surface and the contour there and conditions generally, asked me to tell him all I could about such conditions to enable him to make a good, accurate measurement of the bank, and I did. I think I spent about an hour with Mr. Merriman; walked over the bank with him and pointed out any conditions that I knew about.

Q. Do you know about what kind of material is in the different parts of the dump as it stands now? I will ask, in the first place, if you know?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I wish you would go back to the map which you see on the wall opposite you, Mr. Johnson. There is a pointer there which I wish you would use and let us know what your knowledge on that subject.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the managers and counsel for the respondent, if it is proper to do so, to the fact that in the examination of the last witness, outside of where the witness accompanied the physical act of using the pointer with some word upon that map, there can be I that he was going to leave it out.

nothing in the record to show what part of the map he pointed to. There are Senators who are engaged in committee work who can not be here; and it occurred to me to suggest that the description that "there is some coal here and not much there' would be absolutely useless to those who read the record. It would seem to me that wherever a witness points to some one place on the map it should be accompanied by some statement or designation by which those who read the record may know just where the witness pointed. I feel that there is no impropriety in making the suggestion.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am obliged for the suggestion, and I will say that counsel for the respondent appreciate the fact to which the Senator has alluded. I will suggest that the witness be given a red lead pencil and that he mark the places on the map, which the Reporter may take down.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, if you will go ahead, Mr. Johnson, I will tell you when you are to make a mark, or you can of your own motion make a mark. I suggest that you make letters.-A. Well, I walked all over this bank with Mr. Merriman and while, of course, I do not know what the words I used at that time were-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not hear you.
The WITNESS. While I do not know what words I used or just exactly how I stated the case to Mr. Merriman at that time, I probably told him all I knew, which was that over in here [indicating] was mine rock.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Put the letter "A" on the map right there

The WITNESS. On that over in here [indicating on the chart] the mine rock extended under the culm, and somewhere over in here [indicating on the chart], or I should say about in there somewhere [indicating]

Mr. SIMPSON. Put the letter "B" there.
The Witness. Very well. On that over in here [indicating] there was also a quantity of mine rock under the culm, and also under this high bank here [indicating]—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is what was called the "conical dump," is it not?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. And that under this bank here [indicating], was a quantity of mine rock and ashes; also a portion of this bank here [indicating] had been through the operation a second time, and was what you might call waste. I do not remember of any other particular condition that I told Mr. Merriam

Q. Did you have any personal knowledge of the laying down of two banks there together, one of rock and one of culm?-A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. That was where?-A. Where was that done?

Q. Yes, sir; in what part of the bank?-A. Under the culm, in . here [indicating] and under the culm in here [indicating], as I remember, and also under this bank here [indicating].

Q. Is the rock of which you speak that was used in building that bank or laid there visible from the surface? You spoke of rock and culm being laid down together .- A. No. sir: it is not visible now, or was not when we estimated the bank.

Q. Is there any way of telling where the ashes and rock are without digging down for them or unless a person had seen it before the culm was put on the dump?-A. No, sir; it is completely covered.

Q. I wish you would explain what the effect would be as to a person making a survey of the quantity of culm in the bank of having the rock laid where you say it was in connection with the culm, side by side.—A. Well, if the man making the measurements would include this rock, which is in three places in the bank, of course, he would very materially increase the amount of culm which he would suppose was there.

Q. Why?-A. Well, because it is not culm or material that can be redeemed.

Q. Well, would not the appearance of the culm in one be very different from what it was in the other?-A. Oh, yes; it would drop off here [indicating], instead of sloping off.

Q. I am referring particularly to the point where you put the letter "B."—A. Right in here [indicating]. Well, that would be about the same thing, as I remember it. Those two piles were about the same thing, as I remember it.

made together, parallel rock and culm. Q. So much for the history of the bank. Now, what did you do in the way of taking samples in trying to find out what was in this bank when you went there with Mr. Merriman?-A. I took six samples from the bank—that is, this part of the bank [indicating]. I did not take any samples from that part [indicating), because Mr. Merriman told me he was not going to include it in his measurements.

Q. That he was not going to include what?—A. This part ere [indicating]; this bank here.

here

He left that bank out altogether, did he?-A. He told me

Q. You say "this part." You mean the part marked the "conical dump" on the map?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. He left that out altogether?—A. Yes, sir; I understand he did; he told me at that time that he was going to do so.

Q. While on this subject, had you had any instructions from Capt. May or from anybody else in regard to finding out just what coal was there, so that Mr. May would know what property his company had?—A. Mr. May's chief clerk told me to go and sample the bank.

Q. Did you know what the object was or for whom it was intended?—A. No, sir; as I remember now, I did not know whether the bank was being sold or bought.

Q. Had you any object in view when you went there to make a report to Capt. May except to estimate truthfully and definitely, as nearly as you could, the amount of coal that could probably be won from that bank?—A. No, sir; I was after, as nearly as I knew how to get it, the exact condition of the material.

Q. You made the tests. Have you got a result of your test?—
A. Yes, sir; I have.
Q. I should like to have it, please.—A. I have in my pocket the figures I set down.

Q. Have you that computation?-A. I have the figures as I put them down that day on the culm pile.

- Q. Have you had them copied?-A. I made a report to Mr. May on the next day. I do not know where that report is; but I have a copy of the report that was sent to Mr. May in my pocket.
- Q. Very well. That shows your figures, does it?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Does it agree with those you made that are in your memorandum book?—A. It does; yes, sir. Q. Well, let us have that; it is the same thing.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I ask the managers if they did not get from Capt. May the original report which this witness made to him?

Mr. Manager STERLING. I do not think that we ever had it, Mr. Worthington.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I offer this in evidence and request the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit S.]

DUNMORE, PA., April 5, 1912.

Mr. W. A. May, General Manager.

Mr. W. A. May, General Manager.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with instructions from your office I yesterday examined and made tests on the culm bank of the abandoned Katydid operation. The Katydid Co. worked a scraper line through the center of the largest part of this bank, and I was enabled to get samples yesterday which I believe give a very good average of the condition of the whole pile. There is no indication of present or past fire, and what coal the bank contains is of good appearance and quality.

Yours, very truly,

F. A. Johnson, General Inspector.

During the reading of the table,

Mr. Manager STERLING. Let us have the interpretation of those initials as the reading proceeds, Mr. Worthington.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Let the witness state what the initials are.

The WITNESS. "R D" means round instead of square mesh,

"C., B., S." means coal, bone, and slate.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Johnson, what did Mr. Merriman do in connection with this investigation? What was his branch of the inquiry you made there?-A. His work was to measure and estimate the amount of culm.

Q. Did he make measurements?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were his report and yours turned over to anybody?-A. My report was turned over to Mr. May.

Q. What conversation did you have with Mr. May about it?-A. I do not remember of ever having any conversation at that time.

Q. Why did you omit the conical dump?-A. Because, as I have said, a good part of the conical dump had been worked over the second time. It had been through the operation twice, and therefore was very poor. Again, the good part of it, the best of it I might say, was composed of material entirely We talked that over at some length. I remember worthless. distinctly that we did.

Q. Did you both agree in your conclusion that it would not pay to try to get anything out of it?-A. We did; yes, sir.

Q. Did you so report to Capt. May?-A. Not at that time; no, sir.

Q. It was later?—A. Some time later; yes, sir; we did.

Q. Can you give us your opinion as to whether or not it is possible to work any of the prepared sizes of coal out of this dump; what you call chestnut or over?-A. No; I do not believe it is practicable to win the large sizes, because I have personal knowledge of the fact that the Robertson & Law Co. tried to do that and failed.

Q. Did you later have a conversation with Mr. May about this investigation or the result of it?-A. I did.

Q. When was that?-A. Some time later; I should say about a month or six weeks; it might have been two months; I do not know. Mr. May came to my office in Dunmore, which is next to his, and he had the reports, Mr. Merriman's report and some other papers in his hand, and he referred to a note which was either on Mr. Merriman's report or map; I do not remember which; and he asked me what that note meant. I remember the note. I believe I had-

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it is very difficult to hear the witness

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will speak louder.

He will speak as loud as he can.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What was the note you saw on these papers that Capt. May asked you about?—A. As I remember it, the note read, "55,000 tons, not including slush and rock heap, as per recommendations of F. A. J."

Q. "F. A. J." being yourself?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. May pointed to that notation and asked me what it meant. I told him that it meant the high pile of refuse at what I think was the south-west end of the big pile. I told him that it meant that pile of slush and rock which had been put out of late years and was very poor, and we left it out, because we did not believe it ought to be included in the regular bank. He said he wanted to be sure of that. He said that he wanted to be sure that Mr. Merriman did not mean 55,000 tons of material outside of the refuse reported in my percentages.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all of this witness, Mr.

President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) I wish you would look at this report, Exhibit S. There you have the average per cent of the different grades of coal, have you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Begin and read the average percentage of the different grades, beginning with the larger-sized coals—just the coal and nothing else.—A. Stove and above, 2.6 per cent; chestnut, fivetenths of 1 per cent; pea coal, seven-tenths of 1 per cent; buckwheat, 12.1 per cent; rice, 12.7 per cent; barley, 31 per cent; culm, 34 per cent.

Q. What is culm? Is that coal?—A. No, sir. That is what we call what we get when we wash—singh we call what we get when we wash—slush.

Q. I am asking you about the coal only. You would not count that culm as a part of the merchantable coal?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the total percentage of merchantable coal that you have read from that report, including all kinds?—A. I could not state without putting the percentages together here now.

Q. Never mind it, then, for the present. What official position do you hold with the Hillside Co.?—A. I am the general coal inspector in charge of the coal inspection for the Hillside Co.

Q. Who was the engineer of that company at that time?-A. Mr. Merriman.

Q. And you went with Mr. Merriman at one time to view this Katydid dump?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. April 4, 1911. Q. You talked with him for some hours there on the dump?— A. About an hour, I should think.

Q. You told him where the culm was?-A. I did not tell him where the culm was so much as where the other material was.

Q. You told him where the fill was in the southwest corner of the map that runs up into the part called the conical dump?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You told him that was filled with rock and ashes?-A. Yes, sir; I believe I did.

You showed him the fill on the east side of the map and told him it was filled with rock?-A. Yes, sir; I believe I did.

Q. You pointed out to him all those parts of the pile that were made up of slate and stone and ashes?-A. Yes, sir; I believe I did.

Q. Then it was your duty to take samples of this and wash it?-A. Not to wash it.

Q. What did you do with it? How did you separate the coal?—A. I took each sample and kept it by itself; dried it on pieces of canvas, and then put it through hand screens.

Q. You cleaned out the coal?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did that in six different places?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got the result which you have just read?-A.

Yes, sir.
Q. Then what was the engineer's duty?—A. His duty was the neasuring of the contents of the pile.

Q. To measure the number of cubic feet in the culm bank?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. He did not measure those parts of the culm bank that you pointed out to him were stone and ashes and slate?-A. I do not know.

Q. He would not naturally do that, would he?-A. No. sir; I do not think he would.

Q. He was not expected to find out the cubic feet of any of those materials?-A. No, sir; I presume not. I do not know

Q. How many cubic feet did he find there were in the culm bank ?-A. I can not say.

Q. Did you not see his report?—A. Yes, sir; possibly I did.

Q. Did not Mr. May show his report to you and call your attention to a note on the report?—A. No, sir. As I remember, he showed me a map which said "55,000 tons." I do not know whether the map said the number of cubic feet.

Q. Fifty-five thousand tons of what?—A. Of material.

Q. Coal or culm?—A. Altogether, coal and culm.

Q. Do you know whether that meant that there were 55,000 tous in all of it, outside of the conical dump, or in certain parts of it? [A pause.] All you know about it is what you saw on the map?-A. Yes, sir; that is all.

Q. Did you make an estimate or did you get any data from this engineer's report from which you made an estimate of the amount of coal?-A. No, sir. My report was turned over to the engineer and he made an estimate.

Q. Just take time to figure up the percentage of coal there, will you, Mr. Johnson?—A. (After a pause.) I make it 59.6 per cent.

Q. Fifty-nine and six-tenths per cent of coal?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Rittenhouse's report?—A. Yes, sir; I have read it.

Q. Do you know or have you any knowledge of the number of tons in the bank—I mean gross tons now?—A. Only as I remember that figure on the map—55,000 tons.

Q. As a matter of fact, did not your engineer's report say there were 80,000 tons of culm?—A. I do not know that it did.

Q. Did you not know that he submitted it to Robertson and that Mr. Robertson said it was 80,000 tons?-A. No, sir; I do not know anything about that.

Q. You do not know whether the 55,000 tons meant coal or gross, do you?—A. Yes, sir; I believe I do.
Q. Do you know it from anything the map said?—A. Yes.

Q. State it from memory.—A. I believe it said "55,000 tons, not including slush and rock heap, per F. A. J."

Q. What does "F. A. J." mean?—A. That means me. Q. Now, would it not necessarily mean that that was the amount of coal, because you had tested the amount of coal that was in this material?—A. No, sir; I do not think it would.

Q. Had you anything to do with determining the amount of gross tons or the amount of cubic feet in the dump?-A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Not a thing?—A. Not a thing. Q. Then, inasmuch as it said "per F. Λ. J.," meaning yourself, who had tested the percentage of coal, it must necessarily have meant that there were 55,000 tons of coal. Do you not think that would be the reasonable interpretation of it?-A. No. sir: I do not.

Q. Did you ever compare your report of 59 per cent with Mr. Rittenhouse's return of 51 per cent?—A. No, sir; I have not. I have never put them together until this morning.

Q. Did you ever know that you made 8 per cent more coal in that dump than Mr. Rittenhouse said?—A. No; I did not.
Q. You say that your engineer did not measure the cubical contents of the conical dump in the southwest corner of the map at all?—A. He told me that he was not going to meas-

Q. And you told him-A. That I was not going to sample it.

Q. And you did not sample it?-A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination:

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you know Mr. Rittenhouse had figured on a very much larger proportion of valuable coal than you had?—A. I did. Q. You knew that?—Λ. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What did you understand was meant by the term "F. A. J." in that memorandum?—A. I understood it to mean my recommendation on that conical pile.

Q. That was the reason it was omitted?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Do you know why it is we have not got Mr. Merriman's report?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Do you know whether or not it was brought down here by Capt. May—all those papers—before the Judiciary Committee last spring?—A. I do not know anything about it, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Do I understand counsel to claim that that was submitted to the committee?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is my information, that those

Mr. Manager STERLING. I should like to know what it is.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. The next witness, I understand, has some light on that subject, and we will ask him.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Can you give us an idea about the gross tons in that conical dump we have been talking about—about what the A. Just as it stands now? about-about what the whole amount of material in it was? -

The Witness. I should say 15,000 tons.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it desired that this witness shall be retained?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No. Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The with

The witness is finally discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Call Mr. Jennings.

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH P. JENNINGS.

Joseph P. Jennings, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Where do you live, please?-A. Moosic, Pa.

Q. May I ask your age?—A. 32 years of age. Q. How long have you lived in that neighborhood?—A. I have lived in Moosic for the past seven years.
Q. What is your business now?—A. I am general inspector of mines for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. How long have you held that position?-A. Since February 1 last.

Q. Before that what was your position?-A. Before that time I was superintendent of the Avoca district for the Pennsylvania Coal Co.

Q. In those positions have you become familiar with the coal business in the region, and especially that part which pertains to coal dumps?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the Katydid dump, near Moosic, when it was building or making?-A. When it was making?

Q. Yes .- A. Nothing more than at that time I was working on the engineer corps and I passed there from time to time.

Q. Have you recently made any efforts for us to find out what is in that dump and what it is worth?—A. I have.
Q. What have you done?—A. In the early part of November

Mr. May handed me Mr. Merriman's notebook and a little map that Mr. Merriman had made of a survey of the Katydid dump, and he asked me to go over Mr. Merriman's work and verify it. Q. Was that last November?-A. That was in November past; yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Merriman is dead?—A. Mr. Merriman is dead; yes. He died last September.

Q. Where did you get his figures?—A. From the original notebook.

Q. Have you them here?—A. No, sir; I have not. Q. Where are they?—A. They are at the office in Dunmore. Q. Did you make a report to Mr. May after you made the investigation?—A. I did.

Q. When did you do that?—A. A few days after that. Q. Where is that report, Mr. Jennings?—A. I have a copy of it in my pocket.

Q. I know; but where is the original now?-A. Here is the report [producing paper].

Q. Very well. Let us have it. Do you know whether Mr. Merriman made a report from the material he had?—A. I understood he did, and I understood from Mr. May that it was left here with the rest of his papers.

Q. When !- A. When he was here before the House committee.

Mr. Manager STERLING (after examining paper). We object to it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I ask on what ground? Mr. Manager STERLING. It is not Mr. Merriman's report. It is just what this gentleman said he drew from Mr. Merriman's report. It is nothing but hearsay evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have proved that Mr. Merriman is dead, and that his investigation was made for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and this gentleman has taken his figures.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That does not excuse you from producing his report here. If the witness had the report there from which to make his estimate, you have the report.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witness says that Capt. May brought it down here and left it with the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Manager STERLING. He never did.
Mr. Manager WEBB. This estimate was made in November. Mr. Manager STERLING. This was made in November, since the committee held its meetings, which were last summer.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Merriman made his report Mr. Manager STERIANG. No; the witness said he made this estimate in November.

The WITNESS. I made that report [indicating].

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You made this up from Mr. Merriman's notebook, and not from his report?-A. Not his I took the notes he made on the field and worked up the information from it.

Q. That notebook was left with the company and was found, after Mr. Merriman was dead, as a part of the papers of the company?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is one of the papers upon which Capt. May acted in what he did in this matter ?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit, inasmuch as the charge here is that Capt. May undertook to favor Judge Archbald by giving him this dump for less than it was worth, that the Senate ought to have the information Capt. May had when he made his recommendation or agreed to make it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that this evidence is sought to be introduced because of the death of the man who made the original paper.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The man who made the original report is dead. His official report to Capt. May was on file, and this gentleman took that report and from it prepared this

Mr. Manager STERLING. Our objection to it is that it is purely in the nature of hearsay evidence. We do not know whether he has correctly computed it from the notes made by Mr. Merriman. We are not bound by what he says as to what those notes indicate. We are entitled to the notes, if they are competent evidence at all, which we are not admitting at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to see how the death of Mr. Merriman would affect it in any way. It would still be competent for some other person to make the same

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What we wish to bring out is what information Capt. May had when he made that recommendation. The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can be proved by Mr.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. And if it was that the dump was worth only $5,000-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If Capt. May was on the stand and the question was put to him upon what he made his esti-mate, it would be legitimate testimony, but not as an independent piece of testimony.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He has already testified that when he received the letter of March 31 from Judge Archbald, which is in evidence, asking if the dump was for sale, he directed this investigation to be made; and it was on this investigation and the result communicated to him that he took the action he did.

Mr. Manager STERLING. But it was not on this report that Mr. Jennings presents now, because this was not made until November last.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Jennings is simply calculations based on Mr. Merriman's notebook. Jennings is simply presenting his

Mr. Manager STERLING. Then I presume the Senate will have to interpret it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then we will have to let this witness stand aside and send for the notebook on that point.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You can get that notebook and have it sent here?—A. Yes, sir; I can get it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not wish to be understood as holding that the notebook would be competent evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair simply went to the extent of saying that Capt. May would, in the opinion of the Chair, be a competent witness as to the information upon which he based his action.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think he has already done that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That, I think, is as far as can be done. It is still competent for counsel for the respondent to prove the value by some other witness. That fact is equally ascertainable by some other witness. It is not in the sole knowledge of the person who is de.d.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Jennings, have you had anything to do with what is called the Consolidated Washery operation which is in the vicinity of the Katydid culm bank?—

A. I have, sir.

Q. What did you have to do with it?—A. The washery was built under my supervision. I had charge of the consolidated colliery from March 1, 1909, until February 12, 1912.

Q. Will you tell me whether that washery is equipped to handle coals of the size of chestnut and above?—A. We can handle some chestnut, but none above.

Q. As a matter of fact, have you been handling any chestnut?-A. We have handled some.

Q. Why do you not handle more of it?-A. Because we can not clean it; we can not do anything with it. Q. Why?-A. Well, the amount of coal in the material is so small that we can not clean it. If you have a mixture of coal and rock, say 10 or 15 per cent of coal and the balance rock, it takes an enormous amount of machinery to get that ceal out of the rock, or the rock out of the coal.

Q. Which is the richer bank, the one the Consolidated is working or the Katydid?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to that as immaterial. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I remember hearing something very early in the course of this trial about objections not being made here of the kind that are made in the ordinary courts of justice; but it seems that we have got away from that now. Mr. Rittenhouse's estimate, which Capt. May got when he took the action about this matter, has been introduced in evidence, and it shows by a computation, and it was given in testimony, that there were over $17,000 worth of chestnut coal in the Katydid dump. We have given some evidence in regard to it, and now we want to show that another bank in this immediate vicinity. operated by the Consolidated Washery, that was referred to by Mr. Rittenhouse—a much richer bank—can not be worked so as to get the chestnut out of it to any advantage, and that it is much more impossible to do it than the Katydid dump.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to it as plainly immaterial, as to what another bank of any quality, any kind of

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent will recognize that if that were admitted in evidence the managers would be entitled to take issue on it, and then the whole investigation would necessarily be had as to what was the value of the coal in another bank.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I remember when I objected to Mr. Rittenhouse's testimony. I said we would get into a long wrangle on expert evidence as to the value of the Katydid bank, and as to matters about which Judge Archbald did not know anything; that it would take a great deal of time; and I remember that the Chair reminded me that the fact that it would take a great deal of time would not justify the exclusion of any relevant testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true, if it was relevant, but it certainly is not competent to go into the contents of every other bank with which counsel might desire to compare this bank.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Let me put it this way: Tell me to what extent, if at all, it is possible to reclaim from the Katydid dump coal of chestnut size and over to be marketed. A. It is not practicable to reclaim it.

Q. Why?-A. It would cost many times-it would cost four times more to get it out than what you would get for it.

Q. Why?-A. Because there is so little coal compared with the amount of rock that the immense size of the buildings and the costly appliances you would have to buy in order to separate them to start with would cost four times as much as the coal is worth.

Q. Did you go on this dump at any time with Capt. May?-A.

I did; yes, sir. Q. When was that?—A. It was along the latter part of May, 1911.

Q. Will you tell us whether or not you communicated to him at that time the views you have expressed here about this dump?—A. I did. He told me there was a chance to sell that dump, and he took me down and went over the ground and asked me what I thought of it, and I told him that I thought he had better sell it.

Q. Did you tell him why—give him any reasons? Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to that as immaterial. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Here, Mr. President, we are getting a communication right to Capt. May by his trusted subordinate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What was the question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The whole theory about this matter on the part of the managers is that Capt. May undertook to favor Judge Archbald by selling him what he would not other-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What was the question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am asking whether he was on the dump on the 23d of May, 1911, or about there, months before Mr. May had written this letter of August 30, in which he said he would recommend this sale; that his trusted subordinate, who had examined it and knew all about it, advised him to sell it, and he did not know, I take it, any more about Judge Archbald's connection with it than I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is competent, but will hear from the managers.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I can not conceive how a conversation between this witness and Capt. May is competent in any view of the case. Neither of them was a party to this proceeding. The very fact that he was the confidential adviser of Capt. May is the main reason why it is not competent in this case at all. We can not be bound by anything that he said; that one witness said to another; that one person said to another, who is not a party to this proceeding. It was purely a conversation between this man and May. It does not go to the issue at all in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the general proposition stated by the managers is correct, but that it is competent for counsel to show what was the information upon which Mr. May acted.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I do not remember how far you had gone. What did you say to Capt. May at that time on the subject of the sale of the dump?

The Witness. I told him that when Robertson & Law started again to wash that dump, all we would get would be the royalty we would pay, and it was just a question with us of waiting to get our money by actual shipment or taking the money; that is, we had a very unstable agreement upon which we operated this mining, at least a part of it, on lot 46; and if we sold it it would be off our hands and we would have the money.

Q. At that time did you know anything about Judge Archbald having any communication with Capt. May about this matter?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or having any interest at all in it?—A. No, sir.
Q. I will ask you this question, without reference to that particular dump: Do you know what the custom is in culm dumps as to trying to save chestnut and above?

Mr. STERLING. I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will repeat the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am asking what is the practice in the dumps in that anthracite region as to attempting at all to save or win, as the word they use, chestnut or sizes above from these culm dumps, to show that it is the universal practice and custom there to refuse to do it because it is impossible to do it to advantage. I understand the Chair has already ruled we can not show specially this or that particular dump; but certainly I ought to be allowed to show the custom in that matter, because, as a particular item of value of this dump, the expert Rittenhouse makes it over $17,000 for chestnut coal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that counsel is entitled to show whether or not it was worth anything.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I will put it this way. Tell us what was the market value of chestnut coal in culm dumps in the neighborhood of Scranton in 1911.—A. I know one fellow that washed a car of chestnut coal-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is whether the witness knows the value of it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I put it that way because the Chair ruled I could not put it the way I did. What was the market value of coal of the size of chestnut or above in the culm banks in that region in 1911?—A. Anything you could get for it.

Q. What could you get for it?—A. I do not know. We never

Q. You never sold it?—A. Only to the local trade.

Q. We have had some testimony here about the possibility of taking the coal from the Katydid dump to the consolidated washery and doing it to advantage. You are quite familiar with the washery and with that whole region, I believe?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I would like to have your judgment as an expert and one having a full knowledge of the situation as to whether or not that would be a practicable thing .- A. It would not be practicable.

Q. Why?-A. It would cost too much to get it up there.

Q. How much would it cost, and why would it cost so much?—A. The first installation would cost well up to $10,000 to get started.

Q. Do you say under $10,000?-A. Well on to $10,000, in round figures, to build what we call scraper lines from the consolidated washery down to the Katydid dump. The scraper lines are made in sections of about 500 feet, depending upon the kind of ground you have to operate on. The ground to the Katydid dump runs quite a grade, from big ledges of rock. I do not think you could get over 400 feet to a section. The shape of the Katydid dump is very irregular and the scraper lines would have to be moved in straight lines, so that it would take five or six lines to get hold of the dump. With each of these lines you would have to put in engines to drive it. You would have to put in pipe lines and pumps, in order to wash the culm. A steam line from our consolidated scraper down right through would cost about $10,000 to get started.
Q. What would that material which cost $10,000 be worth when you got through and the culm was washed out?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object, because this witness could not possibly state what it would be worth. He could not know what condition it would be in.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Do you know anything about the value of scraper machinery?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does your experience in that business qualify you as an expert?-A. In our experience in the business, after a scraper is used in mining, what we have to use

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, we object to any such testimony as this, asking what the machinery would be worth after it had been used. How can the witness tell what it would be worth? How can any human being tell?
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Is it possible to tell about what a scraper line is worth after the dump to which it has been built is exhausted?—A. It is.

Q. I will take your word for it, as far as I am concerned, and ask you what that scraper line would be worth after the dump is exhausted?

Mr. Manager STERLING. I object.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Our friends on the other side insisted upon putting Mr. Rittenhouse on the stand and giving expert testimony that, among other things, it was a great favor to Judge Archbald to offer to sell the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in this dump to him for $4,500, because it could have built a scraper line down to the consolidated washery and operated it themselves and made money. Is it not competent to show, as we have shown, that they would have had to put in an extra plant and bring the washery around at a cost of $10,000, when we find here somebody who knows, and ask him what that scraper line would be worth when the dump to which it was built was gone?

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, how is it possible for this witness to know what condition it would be in after it had been used for this purpose? I say it is absolutely impossible for him to know, unless he knows what condition it would be in, what the market price of those things would be at that time. It might be 10 years from now. We do not know how long it would take to operate it. We should not have witnesses come on the stand and guess about such things. It is what Senators can guess about.

In regard to this testimony, while I have the floor, Mr. President, I desire to say this. Counsel say the purpose of the testimony is to show the knowledge which Mr. May acted on when he made this proposition. Mr. May has testified in this case, and he testified himself that, in his judgment, there were 45,200 tons of coal, and it is in the record, and I read it from his testimony. He testified to it before the Judiciary Committee and said it was true that there were 45,200 tons of coal. Are counsel trying to rebut the testimony of May himself, who says that is the knowledge he had and on which he acted when he made the proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question would be too indefinite unless counsel can indicate the degree of use, the length of use, and also fix the standard of prices by which the matter was to be determined.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witness says he knows and he can tell.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was speaking of the frame of the question. The evidence sought to be elicited must necessarily be relieved from the charge of being too indefinite. It must specify the degree of use, after which would follow the condition of the machinery, with reference to a standard price at a future time.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Would the value of that scraper line depend on the way it was used and the extent it had been used at all?-A. Yes, sir; it would. We use mine water, water that is high in sulphuric acid, and it cats the iron away in a short time. An ordinary scraper line would last about a year.

Q. How long would it take to work this Katydid dump in that way, building a scraper line and taking the culm down to the consolidated and putting it through your washery there?—A. It would take about a year; it might be a little longer. It is an awkward dump to get hold of.
Q. The scraper line would last about a year?—A. About a

Q. I have asked you about the cost of the equipment and so on. What would be the cost of operation per ton?—A. To pick up the Katydid dump in my judgment would cost 50 cents a ton.

Q. What do you mean, coal or culm?—A. Of prepared coal. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) What is your first name, Mr. Jennings?—A. Joseph.

Q. Are you connected with the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. now?—A. I am.

- Q. In what capacity?—A. I am general inspector of mining. Q. How long have you had that position?—A. Since February 1, 1912,
 - Q. You are not an engineer, are you?—A. I am.

Q. A mining engineer?—A. I am. Q. How long have you followed that business?—A. I worked on the engineering corps back in 1899, and in 1900 I went to Lafayette College, at Easton, and took an engineering course and graduated in 1904.

Q. You have not held any position as a mining engineer, have you?—A. Not what you would mean by mining engineer.

Q. I mean just what I say. You have not had the position of mining engineer of any coal company or railroad company?—

A. No, sir; not the exact position.

Q. You know what report Mr. Johnson made of the amount of chestnut coal in this dump, did you not?—A. I saw it. I did not pay much attention.

Q. It is one-half of 1 per cent, is it not?—A. Something like that.

Q. So the question as to whether or not the chestnut coal should be won would not affect the value of the dump very much one way or the other, would it?—A. The chestnut coal?

Q. Yes, sir; if it is only one-half of 1 per cent?—A. It would affect it just that much.

Q. You say you had a talk with Mr. May about the advisability of selling this-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him that one reason for selling it was the instability of the agreement which you had?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you mean by that?-A. We were operating on lot 46; we owned a one-half undivided interest, and there was There was just the letter that was given a long time no lease. ago, and we did not know when that agreement would be

Q. And the effect of it was that it affected the title to the dump. Is that your idea?-A. I do not know. I am not lawyer enough to know just how to put that, but I always understood-

Q. When you were-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit that the witness be allowed to finish.

Mr. Manager STERLING. He has answered.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He said he understood and was cut

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness before he finishes will be allowed to make any explanation he wishes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He started to make an explanation, but was cut off, and I submit that he ought to be permitted to finish his answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will finish his answer and state what he understood.

The WITNESS. I always understood that our right to work lot 46 was liable to be terminated at any time.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Dependent upon this agreement with the Everhart heirs? That is your idea?—A.

Q. So it did affect the title in that way?-A. I do not know what the title was.

Q. So the principal reason you gave May for selling it was the very reason May gave here for not selling it, is it not?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit this witness is not to criticize Capt. May upon a question of argument.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I am not undertaking to criticize Capt. May. It will be remembered that Capt. May testified that when the notice came in he thought the title might be a question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In due time we can read Capt. May's statement and contrast his testimony with that of this witness.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) I will put the question in this form. I am sure I can satisfy my friend here. The reason why you advised him to sell it was because you thought there were questions about the title. Is that it?—A. No; not exactly that. We knew that the arrangement we were working under could be changed and easily changed. That was the reason, it could be easily changed.

Q. You thought you wanted to get rid of it for that reason?—
A. Not only that, but it would affect a number—

Mr. Manager STERLING. I am talking about this one. Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witness was interrupted again in the midst of his sentence. I submit he has a right to finish it. Mr. Manager STERLING. If we do not confine the witness to the questions he will be on the stand the whole afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager has a right to confine the witness as nearly as he can to answer the question, and then it is fully competent for the counsel for the respondent to bring out all that the counsel thinks important to have his testimony thoroughly understood. The managers have the right to confine their examination within certain lines so far as answers to their questions are concerned. Mr. WORTHINGTON. We make no question about that, but I contend that the witness was properly answering the question and was interrupted while in the middle of it just as

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will answer the question as directly as possible. There will be every opportunity to explain everything.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Let the Reporter read the question and answer.

The question and answer were read by the Reporter.
O. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Was that one of the reasons you recommended to Mr. May to sell this dump?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Take the witness.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. Jennings. We will have to detain you and have you send for that notebook of Mr. Merriman's.

The notebook and the little map? The WITNESS.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes.
Mr. Manager STERLING. One question I forgot to ask Mr. Robertson. I ask that he may be recalled.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN M. ROBERTSON-RECALLED.

John M. Robertson recalled.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. Robertson, you saw the report of the engineer of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. as to the number of tons of material in this dump, did you not?-

A. I do not remember that I ever saw the report; I knew of it. Q. Well, you testified before the Judiciary Committee, did you not, that Mr. WORTHINGTON. From what page does the manager read?

Mr. Manager STERLING. From page 830. [To the witness:] You testified as follows:

Mr. Robertson. The Hillside Coal & Iron Co. put their engineers on the dump, measured it, and found that it contained 80,000 gross tons of material—that is, culm—composed of fine dust and the various sizes running up—probably there might be a little up to pea. There might be some little chestnut.

You swore to that before the Judiciary Committee, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

O. And that is true, is it not?-A. That'is true to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Mr. Robertson, if there were 80,000 gross tons of material in the dump and 59 per cent of it was coal, as testified by Mr. Johnson, then it is a simple question of mathematics to determine how much coal there was in the dump, is it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. It would be a little over 47,000 tons of coal, would it not?—A. That is right; yes, sir.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. Robertson.

TESTIMONY OF J. BUTLER WOODWARD.

J. Butler Woodward, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Woodward, what is your business?-A. I am a lawyer.

Q. You are a member of what firm?-A. Of Wheaton, Darling & Woodward.

Q. How long have you been a lawyer?-A. I have been practicing for 25 years.

Q. What is your politics?-A. I am a Democrat.

Q. Were you a jury commissioner in the middle district of Pennsylvania?-A. I was.

Q. Appointed by whom?—A. By Judge Archbald. Q. When?—A. When the middle district was first formed. I think it was in 1901.

Q. You continued as such jury commissioner until when?-Until Judge Archbald went on the Commerce Court, until he went off the district court bench, when I handed in my resignation to his successor, Judge Witmer.

Q. Did you continue any time after that?—A. Yes, sir. He asked me to continue, and I continued some time after that.

Q. Will you tell the Senate, please, what are the duties of a jury commissioner?-A. The jury commissioner and the clerk fill the wheel, and the marshal draws the names of jurors from the wheel. When we first started in we put in 300 names, equally divided between us, as required by law. To get my share of the names, I wrote to either the judge or some lawyer, whose name I got from a lawyer's list in each of the 32 counties composing the district. From those lists the names were copied in a book. We each had a book. He was in Scranton; I was in Wilkes-Barre. In that book was the name, occupation, and address of each juror. A slip was torn off, with the number on the slip, containing the name of the juror and the number that was put in the box. Then, whenever a jury was drawn, it required 63 names, 23 for the grand jury and 40 for the petit jury. Before the marshal drew, the clerk and I would each put in half of the 63 names, or divide the 63 names between us. Sometimes I would take 31 names, and sometimes 32, and put those in the wheel before we drew out. Then an equal number were drawn out by the marshal. If the name and number appeared in my book, it was checked off of my book, and if it appeared in his book it was checked off of his book. Those appeared in his book it was checked off of his book. names I got from the judges and from the lawyers. The judges and the lawyers were unknown to me, and the names were of people whom I knew nothing about. I would give the list to the stenographer; he would enter it in the book, and when we went into Scranton to draw the jury they would be drawn in that way.

Q. Then, if I get it straight—I want in as few words as possible to fix it—there were originally 300 names put in, and then each time of the drawing 63 additional names were put in and 63 taken out, leaving always 300 names in the wheel?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What kind of a wheel was it? Just very briefly describe it.—A. It was a sort of tin octagonal arrangement, about that long [indicating] Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I think we had better not ask this witness that question. He is only stating what the law is in regard to the selection of a jury.

Mr. SIMPSON. No; he was going further. The allegation here, Mr. President, is that Judge Archbald is guilty of a high crime or misdemeanor in that he appointed this gentleman as a jury commission, who was counsel for a railroad company ostensibly—for we could not get any other thought out of it— because this gentleman would, in some way or other, use his influence by reason of having been counsel for a railroad company to pack that wheel for the benefit of the railroad company or companies for which he was counsel, and I propose to show

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. SIMPSON. Excuse me a moment, Mr. Norris. I propose to show just exactly what he did; to show that it was impossible-and following it up by later questions-for the thing, by innuendo charged here, to have occurred.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to propose a question to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does it relate to the question of the admissibility of this evidence?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not to the admissibility of the evidence. but it relates to this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until this is disposed of-Mr. SIMPSON. The question here is simply how to describe a wheel. That is the question that is now before the Senate. Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, if the questions would have a tendency to elicit from the witness anything that is material on this particular account there would be no objection. The argument that counsel makes in reality has nothing whatever to do any more than his question has with the point at issue in this particular article. The witness has been asked to describe a wheel. There has been no charge that that wheel or that method of selecting a jury is contrary to law or that it selected any jurors contrary to law. This testimony is only taking up the time of the Senate, as I look at it; it can hurt nobody; it can do no one any good. So far as having anything to do with the selection of the names, the witness has already told how he selected them. If there is anything wrong in the that way and not in the wheel. We have not charged that when the men's names were put in the wheel there was any manipulation of that wheel or that there was a possibilty of manipulating it.

Mr. SIMPSON. Under the disclaimer of Judge Norms I will withdraw that question, sir. Does the President desire to submit the question which the Senator from South Dakota desires propounded to the witness before I proceed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota desires to propound a question, which will be read to the witness.

The Secretary read as follows:

It would be possible, would it not, for a jury commissioner to gather names of jurymen who were biased in favor of railway companies?

The WITNESS. Not to any great extent in 32 countles. The

The WITNESS. Not to any great extent in 32 counties. The jury commissioner would have to have a rather large acquaintance to get jurymen blased in favor of railroad companies.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Was there any gathering of names of jurors at any time you were acting as jury commissioner who were blased in favor of railroad companies?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. There was none by you?—A. There was none by me.

Q. Did you know any of the names of the jurors that you put in the wheel?—A. I did some that I put in from my own county.

Q. Were any of them connected with or biased in favor of railroad companies?—A. Well, I do not recall any now.
Q. Would you have put any such names in the wheel if you had known them to be so?-A. I do not think I should. The charge is that I was appointed jury commissioner while general attorney for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.

Q. Yes; I was coming to that in a moment. You can go on and explain it in your own way.—A. I was not general attorney for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. I was local counsel for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. I never had a case for them in the United States court, and I would not have tried the case if they had had any there. They would have had their local counsel in Scranton or Wilkes-Barre, wherever the court sat. The court did not sit at Wilkes-Barre. I never had but two cases in the United States court—one was a jury trial, and in the other case we agreed to withdraw it from the jury and to try it before a board of engineers, because it involved technical questions.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I desire to submit another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Da-kota submits a question, which will be read by the Secretary. The Secretary read the question, as follows:

Q. If he set about it with the intention to select that class of men as jurors who would be biased in favor of railway companies, it would be possible for him to do so, would it not?

The WITNESS. As I said before, it would be possible to get some names of people who were biased in favor of railroad companies, but if you get the representation from 32 counties that they were entitled to, and which they got, it would be difficult to get a large representation biased in favor of railroad companies.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I submit that that is not a full answer to the question. I think, if the witness will listen to the question carefully, he will see that it is capable of a more direct answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be submitted to the witness. He will read the question and endeavor to answer directly.

The Witness (after reading the question). Yes; I should think it would.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You spoke of having had two cases in the United States court. That covered what period of years?—A. Well, I have been practicing 25 years, and those are the only two I ever had.

Q. Covering the whole period of 25 years?-A. Yes, sir. Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I would like to submit a question. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa submits a question, which will be read to the witness by the Secre-

The Secretary read as follows:

Did you get any names for jurors from any local attorneys of rail-roads in the various counties?

The WITNESS, I had no knowledge of any. They may have been attorneys for railroads. I took them from a list published in New York, called the Lawyers List. Those that I did not get from the judges of the county I got from some lawyer whose name appeared on that list. The lawyers were unknown to me and the judges were unknown to me. Whether they represented any corporation or not, I do not know. I asked them to send me names of good men for the United States jury, and whether they represented corporations or not I do not know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to present another question. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from S

Dakota submits a question, which will be read by the Secretary. The Secretary read as follows:

The railway companies had local attorneys in each of the counties in the district, did they not?

The Witness. I do not know. Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) There was one case you said you What became of that case?-A. There was one case tried for the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., in which I was associated in the trial, but it was withdrawn from the jury and submitted to a board of arbitrators composed of three engineers. involved mining questions.

Q. That was the end of the case, so far as the court was concerned?—A. Yes; that was the end of the case, so far as the court was concerned. The first time we tried it the counsel for the plaintiff labored for several days to make out a case and failed, and we thought we were entitled to a nonsuit. Judge Archbald allowed the jury to be withdrawn and the case continued, so that they might prepare their case in a way that it might be presentable.

Q. Do you remember the purse which was made up at the time Judge Archbald was going to Europe?-A. Yes, sir; I might say

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question to the witness

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri submits a question, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Did you think it proper to permit lawyers who might have cases to y before a jury to recommend and thus practically select the jurors?

The WITNESS. I did. The question is whether I thought it proper, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (to the witness). You may read the question. The Witness (after reading the question). Yes, sir: I thought it was proper. Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama submits a question, which will be read by the Secretary. The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Did you apply to Democratic or Republican lawyers to furnish you names of jurors in the various counties?

The WITNESS. I knew nothing about their politics, whether they were Democratic or Republican lawyers. I had no knowledge of them, except that this was supposed to the best list of lawyers that was published, and I took the names from a book. I might say that the office of jury commissioner in all the United States courts of Pennsylvania was at that time, until I resigned, held by lawyers

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) And do you happen to know whether or not the names of jurors were selected to be put in the wheel in other districts in the same way that you did?-A. I have no knowledge of how it was done in other districts.

Q. Coming, then, to the question that I started to ask you tributed to that purse. I had nothing to do with getting it up, as charged in the twelfth—I think it is the twelfth—article. I did no soliciting for it and I had nothing to do with its presentation. I was asked over the telephone by Mr. Searle to contribute, and I said I would. He told me that Judge Wheaton and John T. Lenahan were also willing to contribute, or had said they would contribute. I spoke to Mr. Wheaton, who occupies the next office, who said that he had been spoken to by Mr. Searle. There was an interval then before I heard anything more about it. Then I got another telephone message from Mr. searle, asking me to send my check and Judge Wheaton's check and Mr. Lenahan's check. I got Judge Wheaton's check and telephoned to Mr. Lenahan to send me his check. He did so, and I forwarded it to Mr. Searle.

Q. Is that all the connection you had with the matter?—A. That is all the connection I had with it from the first.

Q. How long had you known Judge Archbald?—A. I should think for 25 years or more, or before that. I think we graduated at the same college; but he was before my time.

Q. Has the acquaintance been merely the acquaintance of lawyer and judge, or more than that?—A. I never had but those two cases before him. It has been made a social acquaintance. I have met him at college dinners and at various times.

Q. And that acquaintance of that character has been continued during the whole of this time you have mentioned-25 years or so?-A. Yes, sir. I can not tell exactly when I met him. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri submits a question, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. If you did not represent the railway company in court, what did your employment embrace?

The Witness. My employment by the railway company? I did represent them in the court of Luzerne County; tried their cases there, and did other business. I had no retainer from them and I had no salary. I transacted whatever business came to the office and sent them a bill, the same as I did to other clients.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Woodward, what was the amount you contributed to this fund?-A. $50.

Q. When Mr. Searle telephoned to you, did he name any amount?-A. I think not; I have no recollection that he did.

Q. Do you remember the amount of the other contributions that you forwarded to Mr. Searle?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What were they?—A. Judge Wheaton $50 and J. T. Lenahan $25.

Q. So you remitted $125 to Mr. Searle?—A. Yes, sir, Q. Did you get any acknowledgment?—A. Yes, sir; I heard from Judge Archbald. I do not know where the letter was dated, but afterwards I got a letter from Judge Archbald. That was the first I knew that the names of the contributors had been disclosed to Judge Archbald. I take it there was no impropriety

Q. Have you that letter?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let him finish his previous answer.

A. I do not know, sir; I may have it in my office at home.

I made no search for it. I do not know whether I can find it or not.

Q. Mr. Worthington has suggested that I interrupted you in your answer. If you were not through, please finish it now.-A. I was about to say that there would have been no impropriety about the gift of the purse, or it would not have placed Judge Archbald in an embarrassing position, if the names of the contributors had not been disclosed.

Q. That, as a matter of course, those who have to pass on it will have to judge, I presume. The fact is, your name was disclosed to him?—A. I believe so; yes, sir. I did not know it until-

Q. Otherwise, you would not have been able to get an answer from him?—A. Yes, sir; I knew when I got an answer from him that the names

Q. I was asking you about that letter. Can you produce the letter that you got from Judge Archbald?—A. I said I may be able to produce it. I do not know. I will have to search through my files.

Q. Have you made any effort to get it?-A. I have not.

Q. When did Judge Archbald appoint you as jury commissioner?-A. Just after the middle district was formed.

Q. That is, when he first went on the bench?—A. Yes. He asked me if I would take the position as jury commissioner of his court. He made a rather personal matter of it, and I said that I would. He said it would not take much time, and I about, you were a contributor to the purse that was given to Judge Archbald when he went to Europe?—A. Yes, sir; I conoffice of jury commissioner an important office in the administration of justice and an office that in our counties there in Pennsylvania has been very much neglected.

Q. As a matter of fact, what was the salary connected with the office ?- A. Five dollars a day for every day employed.

Q. And about how many days in the year would you be employed to attend to the official duties?—A. I would make about fifty or sixty dollars a year.

Q. So that you did not accept it principally on account of the financial consideration?-A. No, sir.

Q. What salary did you get as railroad attorney?-A. I got no salary at all as railroad attorney.

Q. Were you attorney for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. at the time you were appointed jury commissioner?—A. I was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] submits a question that will be propounded to the witness, if the manager will suspend a moment.

The Secretary read as follows:

State fully in what courts you represented the railway company.

The WITNESS. The courts of Luzerne County, Pa., and in the appellate courts of Pennsylvania, where appeals were taken from the Luzerne County courts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri

submits another question, as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Did you so represent the company during all the time you were jury commissioner?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] submits a question which will be propounded to the witness.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Did you have railroad passes while you were jury commissioner?

The Witness. Yes, sir; on the Lehigh Valley. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager will proceed with his examination.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) You had partners all the time, Mr. Woodward, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the other members of your firm?-A. At present?

Q. No; at the time of this appointment.-A. I think Judge Wheaton went on the bench in 1901 and came back to practice in 1907. While he was out of the firm I had Mr. James L. Morris and my father, Judge Woodward.

Q. Was you father connected as an attorney with any railroad company?-A. When he was in the firm of Woodward, Darling & Woodward, he was.

Q. For what company was he attorney?-A. The Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.

Q. This same company?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he their general attorney?—A. No, sir. Q. He was, like you, paid for the business that was turned over to him in accordance with the terms of employment?-When I spoke of representing the company I meant our firm represented it.

Q. Your other partner was Judge Wheaton, I believe?-A.

Q. Was he attorney for some railroad company when he was in that firm?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What railroad company was he attorney for?—A. The same—the Lehigh Valley Co. He was when he was a member of the firm, and he has since become the attorney for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., since Hon. Henry W. Palmer—
Q. What other men were members of your firm?—A. Thomas Darling.

Q. He is a member now?-A. Yes.

Q. Was he a member during the time or a portion of the time you were serving as jury commissioner?—A. Yes, sir. Q. He was a member of your firm then?—A. He was.

Q. Did he represent any railroad company?-A. Only as a member of the firm.

Q. I suppose, yes; as attorney.—A. As I said, the firm represented the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.

Q. Did he represent any other railroad company?-A. I think

Q. In the actual trial of the cases, when you say you only had two cases, do you mean the firm only had two?—A. Yes; I think that was all the firm had.

Q. But you were not the general attorney, you say?-A. No, sir.

Q. It was your business to try any lawsuits that occurred in Luzerne County?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when they went up to any other court you followed them, did you?-A. In our appeal courts in the State of Pennsylvania; yes, sir.

Q. Clear through to the supreme court, if they went that far?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. If they went into the Federal court, did you follow them there?-A. I suppose I would have done so. I never knew one to go into a Federal court; that is, if they had started in Luzerne County, I suppose I would have followed them into the Federal court.

Q. This judicial district consisted of 32 counties, did it not?-

A. I believe so.

Q. This Lehigh Valley Railroad had branches and lines in practically all of those counties?—A. No, sir. Q. Well, in a large portion of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, how many of them?—A. Luzerne, Bradford, Susquehanna, Carbon. Those are all I can think of.

Q. How many was that?—A. Carbon, Luzerne, Susquehanna, Bradford, and possibly some others. Those are all I can think of now.

Q. As a matter of fact, in every one of those counties the Lehigh Valley Railroad had a local attorney?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. The same as they had in Luzerne County, where you represented them, did they not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us again what was that book from which you selected the names?-A. It was a book in which was entered from these lists the name, address, and occupation of the juror. Then there was a perforated slip on the other side containing the name and the number; the number also in this stub.

Q. Did you use that list exclusively in selecting lawyers' names to make inquiry about the jurymen?—A. That lawyers list I spoke of, that book?

Q. Yes.—A. Yes; I think so. There may have been one or two counties where I had personal acquaintance with some

Q. I was speaking of the lawyers list .-- A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you used in selecting a lawyer to whom to write to give you a list of jurors?—A. I understand.

Q. Is it not true, Mr. Woodward, that in most of these counties you were personally acquainted with the members of the bar?-A. No. sir.

Q. Were you personally acquainted with the members of the bar in Susquehanna County, for instance?-A. No, sir. I knew a few, one or two, two or three, perhaps.

Q. And in Bradford County?-A. I know possibly three or four in Bradford County.

Q. And in Carbon County?-A. In Carbon I know two or three.

Q. As a matter of fact, you knew the name of the railroad attorney of this company in every one of the counties where it had a railroad attorney, did you not?—A. Yes; I think I did.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Chawford] submits a question which will be propounded the witness.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. During the time that you were jury commissioner did the law firm of which you were a member act as counsel for mining or railway or other corporations which had or were likely to have cases pending in the Federal court of that district?

The WITNESS. No, sir. The corporations that I represented were Pennsylvania corporations. They very seldom got into the United States court, because the suits we had to do with largely were by citizens of Pennsylvania, and there was no diversity of citizenship.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] wishes to propound a question which the Secretary will read. The Secretary read as follows:

How many cases involving the Lehigh Valley Co. were pending or to be tried by jury during the time you selected the jurors?

The WITNESS. As I say, there was none for the Lehigh Valley Co. that our office had anything to do with. One that concerned the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. I understand there were two or three other cases during that time in the United States court which the counsel in Scranton had charge of that I knew nothing about. I never heard of them at all.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) As a matter of fact, though, in those cases with which you had nothing to do as attorney, you had selected the list or one-half the list from which the jury had been picked?—A. Yes; all the jurors—
Q. You selected one-half the names?—A. I did not select the names for the jury. I put the names in the wheel.

Q. That is what I mean, you selected one-half the names that were put in the wheel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For all juries that were drawn anywhere in Judge Archbald's court?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it would have been impossible to have had a name on the regular panel unless either you or the clerk had selected that name. Is not that true?—A. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] wishes to propound a question.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. In calling on attorneys for lists of names did you select railroad attorneys in preference to others?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I had no knowledge whether they were railroad attorneys or not. I had no acquaintance with them and did not know what kind of attorneys they were except they appeared in this list.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) You did know the railroad attorneys in these four counties?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. So, in selecting attorneys there you did know whether they were railroad attorneys or not?-A. I do not know that I selected attorneys that were railroad attorneys. I do not remember.

Q. You do not remember as to that?-A. No, sir. I think I got their names also from this list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] propounds the following question.

The Secretary read as follows:

A. Was the claim agent of the Eric Railroad or of the Lehigh Valley Railroad, or any of their assistants, intimate friends of yours during the time you were jury commissioner?

The Witness. No, sir. I do not know who they were.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Woodward, can you furnish us with the names of attorneys to whom you wrote in these different counties for, let us say, the last five years?-A. I think I can. I am not sure.

Q. Have you the list with you?-A. No, sir. I can furnish you a list of the names that were put in the jury wheel. turned them over to my successor. I can get them for you.

Q. That is the list of the names of the men that were put in the wheel?-A. Yes. Q. I do not care for that. I am inquiring about the names of the men-A. I understand.

Q. To whom you wrote to get these lists.-A. I am not sure. I think, though, that I probably have copies or that they will appear on the address book, perhaps. I am not sure about that. I would have to look it up.

Q. Can you give us the name of any lawyer in Susquehanna County to whom you wrote to get a list of names?-A. No, sir;

I can not.

Q. Can you give us the name of a lawyer in Bradford County?-A. No, sir. I think I wrote to the judge in Bradford County. I am not sure.

Q. You wrote a good many different times to that county, did you not?-A. Yes.

Q. How many years were you performing this duty?—A. From 1901 until Judge Archbald went off the bench. I think that was in 1910.

Q. You did not get any pay even for writing these letters and getting these names?—A. That was included in the $5 a day.

Q. Writing these letters was a part of the time and you were working for $5 a day?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think that is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri
[Mr. Reed] presents the following question, which will be propounded to the witness.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Do you want it to be understood that you discharged your duties as jury commissioner by permitting lawyers about whom you knew nothing except that you found their names printed in a lawyers' list to make the selections for you?

The WITNESS. Yes; that is a fact.

Mr. REED. Here is one more question, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri presents a further question to be propounded to the witness.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. What guarantee, then, did you have that those who made the selection were men of character or that they had selected good men for jurors?

The WITNESS. Only the guarantee of this lawyers' list, which war formerly gotten out by the firm of Potter, Hughes & Dwight, of New York, who got it out purely as a list of responsible lawyers. As I understood, they got nothing for making the list or distributing it. Afterwards Potter, Hughes & Dwight severed their connection with it, or gave it up, and it was continued as this lawyers' list, and then I think we paid $25 a year for it. We have several lawyers' lists in the office, but that was the most reliable and the best lawyers' list, the list on which the most reputable lawyers' names appeared.

Redirect examination:
Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Woodward, you were asked whether or not the salary of this office was the principal reason for your accepting it and you told us no. Tell us, please, what was the principal reason for your accepting it .- A. Well, it was Judge Archbald asking me in a way, he put it on personal grounds. That was one of the reasons. Another reason was he said it would not take much time, and I was willing to give that much time to the service.

Q. What service do you mean?—A. The service of getting good jurors for the United States.

Q. So far as you can now recall, did you ever send to get any names of jurors from any of the local counsel for the Lehigh Valley Railroad in the other counties?—A. I may have; I do not recall now; but I think I got their names from this lawyers' list, as well as the other names, except possibly where I would get the names from the judges.

Q. Tell us, please, whether during all the time you were jury commissioner there were ever any complaints made of the jurors thus selected .- A. I never heard of any.

Q. Did you know at the time you made the contribution to the purse that was given to Judge Archbald when he went to Europe that the names of the contributors were to be disclosed?-A. I did not.

Recross-examination.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Do you know they were not going to be disclosed?—A. No, sir; I did not know.

Q. You did not have any idea on that subject?-A. No, sir. Q. You had received no information along that line?—A. No, sir.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. The witness may be discharged so far as we are concerned.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We do not desire him further. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may be discharged

TESTIMONY OF J. B. DIMMICK.

J. B. Dimmick appeared and having been duly sworn was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) What is your business, Mr. Dimmick?-A. I am in banking and manufacturing.

Q. Were you a member of the bar?-A. I was, and I am.

Q. How long has it been since you practiced at the bar at all?-A. It must be fully 25 years.

Q. You were in what official capacity in the city of Scranton?—A. I was mayor for three years.

Q. Elected on the reform ticket, I think?—A. Assuming that is synonymous with the Republican ticket, yes.
Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?—A. I have known him ever since I resided in Scranton.

Q. Did you and he go to the same college?—A. We did. Q. What college was it?—A. Yale University.

Q. What was your relation to him outside of that ?- A. I have been a personal friend of Judge Archbald and have known him intimately for fully 30 or 32 years.

Q. Did you contribute to the purse which was given to him at the time he went to Europe?—A. I did, believing that the motives behind it were purely personal rather than professional, and that belief was confirmed by the fact that I was included in the list, although I was not and had not been for many years practicing at the bar.

Q. At whose request did you make the contribution?-A. I think it was Mr. Searle.

Q. What was the amount that you contributed?—A. I am a little uncertain about that, but I think it was $50.

Q. Did you know whether or not the names of the contributors were to be disclosed to him at the time you made your contribution?-A. I did not.

Q. Did you get an acknowledgment from him afterwards? \rightarrow A. I did.

Q. Written from where?-A. Written from the steamer.

Q. That was therefore some time after he had sailed?-A. I did not receive it for some weeks, because I was abroad my-We were not in touch, but it came to me and was forwarded to me.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, sir, on our part.

Cross-examination:

Curtain Co.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) You live in Scranton, Mr. Dimmick ?- A. I do, sir.

Q. How long did you practice law there?-A. Not over two or three years.

Q. What business are you engaged in now?-A. I am president of a trust company.

Q. It is a banking institution?-A. A banking institution. Q. And doing business in Scranton?-A. Doing business in

I am president of a manufacturing company. Q. What manufacturing company?-A. The Scranton Lace &

Q. Doing business now in Scranton?—A. Yes, sir. Q. You have been in that business and in the trust company ever since you retired from active practice?-A. Not at all. I retired from active practice owing to poor health. I lived abroad for about five years. Recovering it, when I came back I felt that I had lost too much time to compete with my competitors, so I drifted into affairs by degrees. I have been in the manufacturing business about 15 years.

Q. You have known Judge Archbald for many years?—A. Yes;

since before I came to Scranton, which was 29 years ago.
Q. How much was your contribution to this fund?—A. To the best of my recollection it was $50.

Q. How did you happen to subscribe to it?-A. I was asked to join in the purse on the part of Judge Archbald's intimate friends, to be given to him in lieu of other steamer gifts. If I had not, I presume I probably would have sent him some fruit; I could not have sent him cigars, but something in that nature.

Q. Who made that request of you?-A. I think it was Mr.

Q. Did anybody else make a request of that kind of you?-A.

I do not recall.

Q. Did you attend a meeting of men for the purpose of deciding what should be done?-A. I was communicated with either by letter or over the telephone personally.

Q. By Mr. Searle?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. Now, tell us what Mr. Searle said to you.—A. To the best of my recollection, he said that some of Judge Archbald's intimate friends were proposing to get up a purse to give to him upon this theory and upon this fact, that he had been asked to make a visit by a relative of his wife, Mr. Cannon, in Florence. It was known among Judge Archbald's intimate friends that he had never been abroad. I myself had frequently urged their going, even to taking the trouble of showing them how it could be done economically.

Q. I asked you about the communication from Mr. Searle, and you are telling what you said .-- A. His communication, to go back, was to the effect that his intimate friends intended to raise a purse that would help him-permit of his traveling in addition to his visit at Florence.

Q. Now, you knew at that time that Mr. Cannon was furnishing the money for him to make this tripedid you?-A. Oh, no; I did not know.

Q. You did not know anything about it?—A. No, sir. Q. Then were you mistaken just a moment ago in your description of what Mr. Searle had told you?—A. I said he was asked to make this visit to Mr. Cannon. I did not know at the time that Mr. Cannon urged it. I do not know that he paid his way over.

Q. Did Mr. Searle tell you how much he wanted you to pay?—A. I do not recollect whether he did.

Q. Then you understood when you contributed this amount that it was to be a cash contribution and to be turned over to the judge in cash?-A. I did.

Q. There was nothing said to you about raising this money for the purpose of getting a dinner for the judge, was there?—
A. What do you mean about getting a dinner? I do not quite understand.

Q. Paying the expense of a dinner in his honor?-A. There is nothing I recall of that nature.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.
Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. The witness may be discharged so far as the respondent is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is discharged.

TESTIMONY OF J. BUTLER WOODWARD-BECALLED,

J. Butler Woodward, having been recalled, testified further, as follows

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Woodward, I wanted to ask you to tell us, if you know, what Mr. Searle said when he asked you to make this contribution to the judge?—A. I can not-

Q. Just wait a moment, please. I wish to know if he said anything as to the purpose of the contribution?-A. Yes, sir; he said that Judge Archbald was going abroad and they were making up a purse for him.

Q. Did he say anything about giving a dinner or banquet in the judge's honor?—A. No; I think not. It was short. Q. You understood that this money was to be contributed in cash to the judge, did you?—A. Yes, sir; in the form of a purse.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.
Mr. SIMPSON. That is all.
The WITNESS. I would like to qualify the answer that I made to the question whether it was possible to fill the wheel with jurors who were affiliated with railroads or favorable to them. I said yes; it was possible. It would be quite difficult and take a lot of time and be complicated, but I suppose it could be done. I think it was possible.

TESTIMONY OF THOMAS DARLING.

Thomas Darling appeared, and having been duly sworn was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) What is your business or profession,

Mr. Darling?-A. Lawyer.

Q. Where do you reside?-A. Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Q. Do you remember receiving a letter from Judge Archbald August 3, 1911, introducing Mr. Edward J. Williams to you?—
A. I believe it was at that date; yes, sir. I gave the letter to the Judiciary Committee and presume they have it.

Q. I show you, Mr. Darling, Exhibit No. 9 [presenting paper] in this proceeding. Is that the letter you received?—A. (Examining.) That is the letter; yes, sir.

Q. This letter, I notice, introduces Mr. Williams to you, who wishes to talk with you about a culm dump which you control. What culm dump was that?-A. That was the culm dump known as the Diamond dump, situated on the lands of the Hollenback Coal Co.

Q. Had any railroad company any connection whatsoever with that dump?-A. Not that I know of.

Q. What relation had you to the Hollenback Coal Co.?-A. I was attorney for the company, and also the secretary of the company.

Q. And had been for how long?—A. About 20 years. Q. When Mr. Williams presented that letter to you, what occurred?-A. He wanted to lease that bank. It was quite a valuable bank, containing between two hundred and fifty and five hundred thousand tons of good coal. I told him that I could not do anything with him, because we had already leased the bank.

Q. How long preceding this time had you leased it?-A. I think it was about two years.

Q. Did you have any communication with Judge Archbald in relation to any other culm banks at any time?-A. None what-

Q. Did you have any communication from Judge Archbald in relation to this matter after the one that is referred to?-A. Not that I recall.

Q. How long have you known the judge?-A. About 25 years;

perhaps more.

Q. In what way had you known him?-A. I knew him slightly at college, met him at our reunions since, and I have been entertained at his house in Scranton on one or two occasions. I think that is the extent.

Q. You mean that you were students in the same college?—A. Yes.

Q. In what college?—A. Yale.

Q. Is he older or younger than you?—A. He is a little bit older; not very much, I guess.

Q. Did you ever have any cases to try before him as judge?— A. I never had a case before him.

Q. Tell me, please, whether or not there was any lawsuit over this Hollenback culm dump in order to determine its title?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. With what person or company was it?—A. The Lehigh

Wilkes-Barre Coal Co.

Q. And that is connected with what railroad?-A. The Reading and the Jersey Central.

Q. The result of that litigation was what?—A. To establish the title of the culm dump. There was some question as to whether it belonged to the lessor, Hollenback, or the lessee, the Wilkes-Barre Coal Co.

Q. The decision was what?-A. In our favor.

Q. In favor of the Hollenback Coal Co.?-A. In favor of the Hollenback Coal Co.

Q. How long a time before you got this letter of August 3. 1911, was it that you had that litigation over the bank?-A. It must have been at least three or four years, because the date of that letter.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all, sir. lease of the bank was made at least two years prior to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is with the

Cross-examination:

(By Mr. Manager WEBB.) What railroad are you counsel for?-A. The Lehigh Valley is the only road I am counsel for.

Q. The firm is Wheaton, Darling & Woodward?-A. Yes, sir; Wheaton, Darling & Woodward.
Q. How long have you represented the railroad?—A. Twenty-four or twenty-five years. I do not recall exactly.

Q. You were the counsel for the Hollenback estate?-A. I was counsel for the Hollenback Coal Co., not the Hollenback

Q. Was that the Diamond dump that Mr. Williams brought you a letter from the judge about?-A. I presume so; although

I can not swear to that, because I do not remember the dump he had in mind. But I presume that was the one he had in mind, as several people had been after it.

Q. Had you leased it to John W. Peale theretofore?-A. Yes.

Q. I presume that is the one. Did you ever have any correspondence with the judge later or before that time about the Hollenback estate or coal dump we speak of?-A. No correspondence or conversation.

Q. Nor conversation?-A. No, sir.

Q. Is this Exhibit 9 the only letter you ever received from him?-A. How is that?

Q. Exhibit 9, which has just been referred to, is the only letter you ever received from the judge about a culm dump?-A. I think it is the only letter I have ever received from the judge.

Q. This is dated Scranton, August 3. Was that 1911?-A. I do not recall. I presume so.

Mr. SIMPSON. Other evidence in the case shows it, Mr.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I will ask you if you did not receive this letter from the judge also [producing paper]?—

A. (Examining.) Yes.
Q. It is in the judge's handwriting?—A. Yes; I received that letter also. I was mistaken. There were two letters I received.

Q. You received two, then, about the culm dump?—A. I do not know whether that is about the culm dump or not. Let me see it again, please. This letter is asking a reference to the case which I had argued in the Supreme Court, but it has nothing to do with the culm pile whatever, any more than that.

Q. "Washington, February 27." What year was that?—A.

I do not recall.

Q. You do not know how long ago it has been since you received that letter?—A. It was after the first letter, according to my recollection.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Will you read that letter, Mr. Secretary?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 95.]

UNITED STATES COMMERCE COURT, Washington, February 27.

My Dear Darling: I failed to get the other day the reference to the Hollenback culm dump case which I intended. Please send me at Scranton a memorandum of where it is to be found in the reports, at your leisure. I am here for a day's court and a couple of days of consultation, and shall be back at home by the end of the week.

Very truly, yours,

R. W. ARCHBALD.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) He speaks of a conference or a conversation with you a few days prior to the writing of that letter. Was that about a culm dump?—A. No; it was about this lawsuit I had had.

Q. Why did the judge want to know anything about this law-suit with reference to the Hollenback culm dump?—A. I really do not know what he did want.

Q. You do not know?—A. I have not the slightest idea. My idea was that he had it in mind as bearing on some other lawsuit he probably had in his hands. That would be natural and

Q. A lawsuit before his court?—A. I do not remember whether he had been appointed to the Commerce Court at that time or not.

Q. Exhibit 9 is dated August 3, 1911?—A. Yes.
Q. Exhibit 85 in the Senate here you say was written after August, 1911. So he is bound to have been on the Commerce Court bench at the time?-A. He probably wanted it in that connection.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit that the witness ought not to be asked to guess.

The Witness. It is the only thing I can do, to guess.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I did not want to stop him from guessing. [To the witness.] You do not know why he wanted to know about the Hollenback culm dump and the reference in the case?-A. I do not.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think that is all we want to ask this witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE RUSSELL.

George Russell, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Russell, you were connected with the Honduras Mining Co.?—A. I had some connection with a Honduras mining company.

Q. And there was a subconcession which was held by Mr. Rissinger and those connected with him?-A. A sublease which was under a concession.

Q. It was testified that there was a visit made to Scranton, Pa., by you in relation to that matter. Do you remember that visit?—A. I do.

Q. Will you tell us, please, what the date of that visit was?—A. Probably about the middle of September, 1908, or possibly before that-

That is, during the month of September, but about the middle and possibly before?—A. Or a little before; in the month of September, 1908.

Q. That is all we wished to ask—just simply to fix the date. How do you fix the date?-A. By receipt of a check from Mr. Rissinger on account of his investment in this mining concession which I received on September 28, 1908.

Q. Was there anything said about that time in relation to Judge Archbald taking an interest in this Honduras scheme?-A. I did not gather from the conversation that he had determined to go into the matter.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, sir. Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) How long had you known

Mr. Rissinger?—A. Several years.

Q. And he was connected with you in this gold-mining scheme down in Honduras?—A. He was not. A friend of mine pro-cured a concession in Honduras and brought it to my office in New York. I introduced him to Mr. Rissinger, who happened about that time to call on me on some business.

Q. Well, were you connected with the enterprise?-A. I was about to become connected with it.

Q. You went to Scranton, Pa., at the request of Rissinger, did you not?—A. I do not recall whether I went at the request of Mr. Rissinger or of Mr. Hamilton, the friend of mine who brought the business to me, and who had been negotiating with Mr. Rissinger.

Q. But you saw Rissinger there?—A. I saw him there. Q. You had never met Judge Archbald before that, had you?— A. Never.

Q. And you were in Scranton on this matter of the Honduras gold mine, were you not?—A. I think at that time that was the matter I was there on.

Q. You had no other business there at that time?-A. Not that I recall.

Q. And Mr. Rissinger took you to Judge Archbald?—A. Yes. Q. And introduced you?—A. He did. Q. You think that was in September?—A. I know it was in September.

Q. How do you fix the date?-A. By the receipt of the check from Mr. Rissinger.

Q. Did Rissinger give you a check at that time?-A. He sent me a check which I received on September 28.

Q. On September 28 of what year?—A. 1908. Q. For how much?—A. For $2,000.

Q. Do you know where he got that money?-A. No, sir.

Q. Do you not know that he never got that money until the 12th day of December, when he cashed Archbald's note?-A. No. sir; I know nothing about it.

Q. Where is the check?-A. The check went back to him in

Q. Have you got any entries in your books in regard to the transaction?-A. I have got the check book here. Q. Have you any entries there?-A. I have, but you will have to excuse me while I go and get the book.

Q. Did you enter the receipt of this $2,000 in any book?-A. In my check book as a deposit.

Q. Well, does that show the date of the deposit of the check from Rissinger?—A. Yes.

Q. Let us see it.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the witness). Where is the check book?—A. It is in one of the rooms out here.

Mr. SIMPSON. I presume, Mr. President, we can excuse the witness for a moment to go and get the check book.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Now, you have there the stubs of what you were using at that time as a check book?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How did you come to enter this receipt of the $2,000 on the stub of your check book?-A. I deposited it as cash through my bank account.

Q. How?-A. It was deposited by me as cash through my bank account.

Q. You mean that your book simply shows that you deposited it in your bank?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you not simply deposit the check you got from Rissinger in the bank?—A. That is what I spoke of.

Q. How did that appear on the stubs of your check book?-A. Because the money passed through my hands.

Q. Did you draw a check on it?-A. I drew checks on my bank account when disbursing that money later on.

Q. So what you have got there, then, is where you paid the money out?—A. Where I received the money and subsequently paid it out.

Q. (After examining the check book.) Mr. Russell, have you got memoranda on the back of your check stubs of any other entries where you had received money, except the Rissinger entry?-A. Nothing except that of Rissinger and that of Mr. Day, of Paterson, in this same matter.

Q. Do you say that Rissinger gave you a check for $2,000 when you were at Scranton?-A. No; he mailed it to me to my office at New York.

Q. How does that fix the time when you were up there, then?-A. Because it was before that about 10 days to two weeks.

Q. You are, then, fixing it by comparison?—A. Yes.

Q. You received a number of checks from Rissinger sending you money, did you not?-A. Yes.

Q. And this one that you have on that particular stub is dated September what?—A. September 28, 1908.

Q. You received another check from him in October, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. October 24, did you not?—A. On October 24; yes. Q. That was for a thousand dollars?—A. For a thousand dollars; yes.

Q. And you received another check from him in December ?-A. On October 26.

Q. That was for a thousand dollars?-A. That was for $500. Q. When did you receive the next check from Rissinger?—A. That was the last.

Q. What is the date?—A. It was October 26, 1908.

Q. Might you not have received checks from him later than that and not have a memorandum of them?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not receive a check from him after the 12th of December for $2,000?—A. No, sir.

Q. There is no pretense, then, that this check for $2,000 in September was the Archbald money or the money realized on the Archbald note, is there?—A. I had no idea where it came from, except it came from Mr. Rissinger.
Q. You did not know whether it came from that note or whether it came from other stockholders?-A. I knew of no note.

- Q. You did not know whether it came from any transaction with Judge Archbald or whether it came from money paid in by other stockholders?-A. No, sir. I only knew Mr. Rissinger in the case.
- Q. Do you say now, as a matter of memory, that you never did receive a check from Rissinger in December?-A. I have no record of it. I am not depending on my memory; I am going on my record, and I have no record of it.

Q. Now, the record you have there is simply memoranda written on the back of your check stubs, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

- Q. Have you entered in the back of those check stubs all the receipts of money you got during the time you were using that book?-A. Yes; I have.
- Q. Can you point to a single memorandum there that indicates where the money came from except in the case of Rissinger's money?-A. Yes, sir; November, 1908, proceeds of Hutchins Panama draft, $125.

Q. Well, that is one. Turn to some more .- A. T. M. H. loan, $75.

Q. That is two.-A. Frederick Neuberger and H. S. Day, $500 each.

Q. That is four; there are two in that memorandum.-A. Fidelity Casualty Co., $650; same, $100; Western Union Telegraph Co. refund, 40 cents; draft on Panama, $200-

Q. Does your memorandum show who that came from?-Which?

Q. The item you just read.—A. Yes, sir. It is Mr. Hutchins's draft on Panama. Hutchins is the man on whom I drew it.
Q. Go ahead.—A. B. B. Co. tolls—I do not recall what B. B.

Co. stands for-$33.50

- Q. You do not know what that means?—A. No, sir. J. D. Elwell, $100, January 5, 1909; T. M. Hamilton, Honduras settlement, $825; deposit, $750.
- Q. What is the date of that?-A. January 15, 1909. vanced on Honduras agreement by J. D. Elwell Co., January 19, 1909, $500.
- Q. Run it down to the end of January.—A. February 26, 1909, W. W. Rissinger, $42.90. That was for professional services.
 Q. That was from Rissinger?—A. For professional services.
- Q. What kind of professional services?-A. I am a public accountant.
- Q. That was paid to you for work you had done?-A. Yes, sir.
- That is far enough. Now, let us see what these other get the thing clear.

memoranda indicate. Here is $1,200 .- A. That is the balance carried forward.

Q. Some of these figures are on the back of thir memoranda. What do they indicate-receipts of money?-A. Nc; that is the balance, and here is the total [indicating].

Q. Do any of the items on the back of these stubs where there is no name mentioned indicate the receipt of money?-

A. No, sir.
Q. Do the items that you have read show all the money that you received from September down to the last of February?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. All the money that you took in?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say you did not get any from Rissinger after the 12th of December?-A. I did not.

Q. Well, do you know whether any of the money that you got was money from Archbald?-A. No, sir.

Q. Or whether it was to pay for stock which Judge Archbald took?—A. I knew nobody but W. W. Rissinger in the matter at all.

Q. You know who the subscribers were?-A. No, sir.

- Q. None of them at all?—A. I knew nothing about them
- forming a company of their own. About that I knew nothing.

 Q. You talked with Judge Archbald about this matter when you were up there?—A. I talked with Judge Archbald once or twice in Scranton.

Q. Was Rissinger there then?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And you explained to him the purpose of this organiza--A. Of which organization?

Q. That they were getting up there to mine gold down in Honduras?—A. That Mr. Rissinger was getting up? I did not know anything about it.

Q. Where did you suppose this money was coming from?—A. I did not have an idea, but I supposed it was coming from Mr.

Rissinger. Rissinger, to my knowledge, had means.
Q. Did you know that he was organizing a corporation there?—A. I did not.

Q. He never told you about that?-A. I knew later on. I never knew when this first payment was made.

Q. But when you were with Rissinger in Judge Archbald's office you talked about the organization of a local corporation, did you not?-A. No, sir; not when I was there. We talked about the character of the concession and passed on the validity of it. It was an old concession, and this friend of mine had made a lease under that concession, and I questioned whether it was of any value or not.

Q. Did you tell Judge Archbald you questioned whether it was of any value?-A. We discussed it over very freely.

Q. And still you took money for the stock that was being sold?-A. We had a lease from the owners of the concession, and we considered it perfectly good after investigating it.

Q. You and Rissinger explained to the judge that this was a placer gold-mining claim, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you told him and Rissinger told him that they mined gold down there just as they gleaned coal out of the coal dumps in Pennsylvania, did you not?-A. I did not; I did not know anything about it myself.

Q. Did not Mr. Rissinger tell him that they mined that gold down there just as they got the coal out of coal dumps in Pennsylvania?—A. Not in my hearing.

Q. He did not tell you that in your hearing?—A. No. Mr. Manager STERLING. I believe that is all.

Redirect examination:

- Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Russell, in order to get it clear upon the record, on the check-stub side of your checkbook you put the checks that you have drawn, for what purpose they were drawn, the name of the payee, and the amount?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. On the other side you put in the deposits, the date of the deposit, the person from whom received, and the amount?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, before you turn over to the next page, you add up the checks and deduct them from the amount of money that is supposed to be in the bank?-A. Exactly.

Q. Then you carry over that balance to the next page and repeat that, page after page, throughout the book?-A. Yes, sir; on each page.

Q. That is what that book shows that we have seen here?-

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand your statement, you fix the interview that was had with Judge Archbald at a time before the first payment which was made by Mr. Rissinger?—A. Before I received any money.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. He proved all of that in the first instance.

Mr. SIMPSON. I am not going to repeat it, but I want to

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Sterling has asked you whether or not the money which was paid was paid for stock. Was there any stock which Mr. Rissinger or his friends were buying from the principal company or was it the concession which they bought?—A. No, sir; it was for a lease of a part of the property which this party who brought it to me owned.

Q. That lease was from whom to whom?—A. From the lessee of the original concessionaire to Mr. Rissinger.

Q. And the moneys which were paid were in payment of that lease?-A. On account of that lease.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Call Mr. Belin, please.

TESTIMONY OF FRANK L. BELIN.

Frank L. Belin, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Where do you live?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am in the explosives business. Q. With what corporation or concern?—A. The Du Pont Powder Co. of Pennsylvania.

What is your position with that company, Mr. Belin?-

Vice president.

Q. Were you connected with that company in 1908?-A. I

Q. In the same position?—A. I was the assistant to the president at that time.

Q. Can you give us any information about the attempted or projected purchase by that company of the Katydid culm dump near Moosic, Pa.?-A. Late in the fall of 1908 or early in 1909, I am not sure which, we entered into negotiations with Mr. Robertson for the purchase of thus dump, and it was offered to us for $10,000. We were expecting to build a plant, in fact had started to build a plant, near this dump, and we thought We were expecting to build a plant, in fact we would build a power plant there and use the culm from the Katydid culm bank for fuel, and we had it examined by experts and they did not think—

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness can state what action he took upon information given.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He said an examination had been made by an expert, and the expert will be the next witness. We do not ask this witness to tell what the expert did.

The WITNESS. Partly on the recommendations of the expert we declined to purchase this Katydid dump.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Who was the expert?—A. Mr. Saums, of Wilkes-Barre.

O. Wore you advised at that time that the Hillside Coal &

Q. Were you advised at that time that the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. had some interest in this bank?-A. I had a vague idea that they were somewhat interested, but to what extent I did not know.

Q. Did you understand that they were to be compensated?-

A. I believe they were to be paid for royalties.
Q. Out of the $10,000?—A. Out of the $10,000.

Q. Why did you not buy?-A. As I say, partly on the recommendation of Mr. Saums.

Q. On what other ground?-A. And partly because we found we could make a better proposition by buying our power from the Scranton Electric Co.

Q. Did you have any dealings direct with the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-A. None whatever.

Q. Only through Mr. Robertson?—A. That is all. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Your company decided afterwards that you would not buy your own fuel, but you would just buy the power you needed?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was your factory?—A. Near Moosic.
Q. Near this dump?—A. Within about half a mile of it.
Q. So instead of buying the coal that was in this dump you bought your power from some power plant that was at Moosic?-A. No. At Scranton.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Was that done after you got the report of your expert?—A. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF HEZEKIAH W. SAUMS.

Hezekiah W. Saums, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What is your full name?-A. Hezekiah W. Saums.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Q. What is your business?-A. Coal business-the coal washery business.

Q. Do you mean by that that you operate washeries, or

Q. How long have you been engaged in the coal-washery business?—A. Between 11 and 12 years.

Q. That involves washing coal dumps, I suppose?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you at any time make an examination of what we call here the Katydid culm dump near Moosic, Pa.?-A. Yes, I did; about four years ago.

Q. At whose instance?-A. For Mr. Belin, for F. L. Belin, of Scranton.

Q. Did you make a written report?-A. I did.

Q. Have you that report or a copy of it with you?-A. I have I have the estimate of the tonnage; but my letter to him, the last letter I wrote to him, I did not find.

Q. Have you a copy of it?-A. No. I have not a copy of the letter.

Q. Did you make more than one report?—A. Yes, sir; I did. Q. Why were there two?—A. He first called me up by telephone and asked me to look over the Katydid culm dump and give an approximate idea as to the value of the coal there. I reported. Later on he called me up again and asked me if I would not have a survey made of it and test the bank out and report more accurately, which I did.

Q. How far apart were the two investigations you made?—
A. It was some time in February when I made the first examination, and the second was made on the 1st of March, 1909.
Q. They were both in 1909, were they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us what conclusion you reached from your first visit.—A. Why, I——
Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I think we should have here the copy of the report which he submitted to these people.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If you have anything in the way of reports, I want it.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I have a copy of my first report.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We are entitled to see it. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Is the paper you are holding your final or second report, or a copy of it?-A. It is my first report.

Q. This is your first report?—A. Yes, sir [witness producing paper].

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The paper is dated February 12, 1909. would like to have that read in evidence, gentlemen.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Let us see the other report now. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I offer this first and ask to have it

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the objection?
Mr. Manager STERLING. My objection is this: In the first place, the witness has not qualified. He has not said that he is a mining engineer. In the second place, he makes that estimate not from any test, but simply from looking over the dump; and he says that he has a report which he made on a thorough examination, which I think we are entitled to see before any of this is admitted in evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It does not appear, Mr. President, that Judge Archbald ever had a measurement of this dump made and a calculation of the number of tons of the different The managers went kinds of coal and what they were worth. into this line of testimony, giving the opinion of persons who had examined that dump for the purpose of giving evidence in this case. So far as the objection of this witness not being qualified is concerned, I will examine him further as to that. I expect the second report to follow and to put them both in

Mr. Manager STERLING. If you expect to do that, why should not we see it and let them all go in together?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The only objection I have to that is that I do not like the manager to instruct me about the manner in which I shall produce my evidence.

Mr. Manager STERLING. The managers will have to insist on trying the case according to the rules of evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the witness is properly qualified as an expert, he can certainly give his testimony as to the value of this bank; but the Chair does not understand that that necessarily admits as documentary evidence a paper which he wrote on the subject. The witness can use that to refresh his memory, and the counsel can cross-examine him as to each item on it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was proceeding in exactly that way. I asked him if he had examined the bank and made a report, and he said he had. I then asked him to state what he found on examining that bank. Then the manager objected and called for the report, and now, when it is produced and I ask to have it read in evidence, they object. Now, I must go back to where I was when the objection was made. I would like very much to please them, but they will have to be a little more consistent before I can do it.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Let us see who is consistent. We offered the written report made by Mr. Rittenhouse; counsel for the respondent objected, and the Chair sustained the objec-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have a vague recollection that the report of Mr. Rittenhouse is in the record.

Mr. Manager STERLING. No. It was offered—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Then I will go back where I was when the objection was made.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I will ask you to state when you examined that bank in the first instance, what you found there, and what information you acquired as to the quantities of the different kinds of coal there and the value?—A. My first examination, which was purely estimated?

Q. Yes. I want that first, and then I will follow it up with the second. I understand that you may look at your reports or any memoranda you made at the time, for the purpose of refreshing your memory.—A. I can not remember the exact figures. I want to say, sir, that I accepted the figures as given to me by Mr. Robertson's representative—I do not recall his name—as to the tonnage, which I placed at that time at 85,000

Q. That was on the first visit?-A. That was on the first visit; yes.

Q. Do you mean $5,000 gross tons, or coal?-A. Eighty-five thousand gross tons.

Q. That many tons of culm?-A. Made up of 13,850 tons of slate; 20,740 tons of dirt; 1.338 tons of nut coal; 1,825 tons of pea; 6,825 tons of buck; 17,000 tons of rice; and 23,353 tons of barley, making a total—dropping several fractions—of 85,000

Q. Did you figure what that was worth?-A. I figured that at that time that the total value of the coal would be $32,299.99.

- Q. Go on and tell about your second investigation. was the difference between the manner in which you made your examination the second time and the way you made it the first time?-A. My first examination was purely guesswork. looked the bank over and examined the culm and made this estimate which I have just read. On the second estimate, I was directed by Mr. Belin to have a survey made, and I employed Mr. Smith, of the firm of Smith & Wells, of Wilkes-Barre, to make the survey. I used his figures for the tonnage. I made the test, however, myself. In my second test, which I think is fairly accurate, I subdivided the bank into two parts. I found that one portion of the bank was much richer than the other. Therefore I drew an imaginary line across and called that bank-or rather, we surveyed it, and we called it 15 per cent of the total.
- Q. Can you see this map opposite you on the wall, the map of that bank?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are looking at the wrong one I think .- A. That is the one I am looking at, over there.

Q. Could you show where that line was drawn?-A. Very close to it; yes.

Q. I wish you would go and do it, then. Take a pencil and draw, in imagination, the line as near as you can.—A. (Witness indicating on map.) There was a channel cut out here, where indicating on map.) There was a channel cut out here, where they had a conveyer line down here. This was partly washed out on both sides, and, as I recall it now, this portion in here [indicating] up to a point, I would say along there somewhere [indicating], was what I called the old bank, and from there on up; this portion over here I call the new bank.

Q. Which do you say was the richer?-A. This was [indicating].

Q. The old bank?—A. The old bank. Q. That is enough. Now please go back to the witness stand. [The witness did so.]

Q. Do you notice on the map what is called the conical dump? Can you see it from where you are? It is in the southwest corner.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you include that in what you call the richer part?-A.

No, sir.

Q. Now go on, please. You say you divided it into two parts and you gave different figures on the two different parts?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire whether it is desired to finish the examination of this witness at this sitting? If so, it will be necessary to extend the time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No. It will take some little time further to conclude.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I would like to ask counsel if they will not submit those reports to us in the meantime? It will save time to-morrow.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Certainly. Mr. Manager STERLING. We will be glad to have them.

I move that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary to make the motion. The Chair will declare that the hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment stands adjourned until 1.30 o'clock to-morrow.

Thereupon the managers on the part of the House, the respondent, and his counsel withdrew.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 17, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, December 16, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We invoke Thy blessing, Almighty Father, upon the people of our great Nation. Be with all who are in sorrow and distress to comfort them. Let Thy benediction be upon the President and all others in authority and upon this legislative branch of our Government. Let Thy spirit come mightily upon each individual Member, that all may be guided to the highest conceptions of right and duty, that the interests of those whom they represent may be faithfully and efficiently served; in the name and spirit of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 14, 1912, was read and approved.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. This being the day for the consideration of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, the Clerk will report the first bill on that calendar.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DENVER, COLO.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3974) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr] who reported this bill is not in the Chamber at this moment, although he will be here soon. I therefore yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Ruckes].
Mr. MANN. Nobody has the floor yet.

The SPEAKER. That is absolutely correct.
Mr. ASHBROOK. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be temporarily passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to pass the bill temporarily without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I should like to know what is meant by the parliamentary phrase "passed without prejudice." The SPEAKER. It means that as soon as anybody wants to call it up after the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert] comes in the matter will be taken up. Is there objection to passing the bill without prejudice?

Mr. MANN. I think we had better dispose of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to passing it without prejudice. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to that.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3974) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo., with Mr. CLARK of Florida in the chair.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost fixed by the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 545), for the new public building at Denver, Colo., for the accommodation of the post office, United States courts, and other governmental offices, be, and the same is hereby, increased $400,000.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Rucker], who will explain the propositions involved in this bill.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I have considerable confidence that I can get the ear of the Committee of the Whole at this time upon the theory that the third time is the successful one. This is the third time we have undertaken to get this bill considered. I have confidence also for the further reason that just before Christmas the heart expands and the fullness of all our goodness comes to the surface. And again I have hope, for the reason that you would act as promptly to the request for this appropriation as my constituents for my

About 30 years ago an appropriation was passed for a public building in Denver, costing a little over $600,000. It was about 11 years in building. Before it was completed Denver had risen from a population of 30,000 to something over 110,000. Long before its completion the local postal service was very much impaired because of the circumscribed condition of accommodations there.

Not counting the present value of the building, the ground upon which it is situated is now, according to the estimates made by a committee appointed by the chamber of commerce and the real estate exchange, worth $400,000—exactly the sum that we are asking in this bill as an increased appropriation. That is saying nothing about the material in the old buildingamounting to considerable-on one of the choicest corners next to the Tabor Grand Opera House and in the most thickly settled portion of the business center of Denver.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will.
Mr. MANN. I did not quite catch the gentleman's statement. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the site of the old building was sold for $2,000,000?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No; that it can be sold for $400,000, the amount asked for in this bill. Then, further, Mr. Chairman, we are paying about $50,000 a year for rentals at the present time for additional space and rooms for the different departments that usually are housed in a public building. have some 24 apartments that the Government now occupies in the different buildings throughout the city of Denver, at a cost to the Government of $50,000, which, as it will be observed, is about 111 per cent that the Government is paying by reason of not letting go of this money in the Treasury-this $400,000. Eleven and a half per cent is a very considerable interest for the Government to be paying.

We have also, Mr. Chairman, since the original appropriation of $1,600,000, the authorization being $2,000,000, encountered some difficulties concerning the building and necessity for different changes, which I will briefly state. The architect having charge of the building had sounded the ground as much as possible in order to determine the kind of soil and whether a suitable foundation could be obtained for the structure, and he was well satisfied that no difficulties would be encountered.

But after one wall had been erected it was discovered, when placing the other wall, that they had run across a running sand or gravel which not only necessitated more work but actually necessitated the increase of the area of the building, at an extra cost of from $100,000 to $150,000.

Then, again, the circuit court of appeals having been established there, the judges demanded of and procured, by what means I am not going to stop to inquire and I trust it will not be criticized because the matter is ended. They required five times as much space as had been originally assigned—one large library, four chambers, and one lawyer's room. That necessitated a further increase in the size of the building which necessarily increased the cost.

There is some confusion here, if you will take up the hearings, with reference to whether the architect had changed the construction of this building from one kind of stone to that of marble. The fact is that that is not strictly true. The Chief Architect of the Treasury Department only advertised for the lowest bid in marble, and the bids came in, and it was given to a certain firm who were to give us in this building Colorado marble from the Yule Co., one of the greatest quarries of marble in the United States.

I should not say one of the greatest, but it is the greatest. It occupies the same relation to this country as does the range of mountains producing Carara marble in Italy.

It is a singular fact that we have a marble in Colorado superior to that of Italy for all purposes. The superimposed weight, apparently of former ages, has so ingrained this marble as to make it superior to anything they have in Italy. A few years ago I was in Florence and was astonished, when I went to one of the marble factories to see the works of art, to discover the fact, when I was commenting upon the fine marble found there, in being told that there was one State in the United | is entirely finished.

States that had a superior marble to their marble. Upon inquiry I found that that was my own State.

It is so superior a marble that the courthouses at Cleveland and Youngstown, Ohio, and the municipal building of 35 stories in New York, are being built of Yule marble or substantially used in their construction. It has been shipped to nearly all parts of the United States as well as to foreign countries, even as far off as Australia, its superiority having been discovered. Therefore, it was no wonder that the architect chose this Colorado parble. It is not surprising that he would not engage in the carrying of coals to Newcastle." That is about the only critimarble. cism that has been made, namely, that we confine ourselves to Colorado marble.

Now, I have here in my possession a number of photographs taken on the 12th day of November, showing how this building is incomplete, and documentary testimony showing that the Government is now losing, as the postmaster there says, $50,000 per year by this delay, and other evidence that if this building is completed within the present appropriation, we having only $380,000 on hand at the present time, the interior must necessarily be completed of inflammable material, such as wood, making it therefore combustible and nonfireproof. This is the uncontradicted testimony of all architects. More than that it not only will be nonfireproof, but in a few years' time, at best, business will require the Government to tear out this inferior material, and the $380,000 will be an entire loss to the Government. Now, I hope the committee will consider this as your building. It is a Government building-it is not our own building-in which all sections should share in the pride. Here is a photograph of it, as much of it as you can see, and it gleams in the sunshine as white as snow on Diana's Temple, and architecturally is one of the if not the most beautiful Government buildings in the United States. I want to say further, in conclusion, that we are turning in to the Government as muchdetermined from last year's receipts from this office-as $800,000 a year. Those are the net receipts from this post office, after paying all expenses incident to it. We are turning in to the Government twice as much per year as we are now asking in this bill for its completion. I would be glad to be questioned by anyone. I have a mass of information here, obtained since the hearings before the committee, the last of which was but a few days ago, when Gov. Shafroth went before the committee and made a statement.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman permit? Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Surely.

Mr. FOSTER. This increased cost is due, I understand from the gentleman's statement, to the change of material to be put in this building?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No, sir. Mr. FOSTER. That is, part of it? Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. None of it?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No, sir; none of it. I want to assure the gentleman from Illinois that the original estimates and the bids asked upon it were made on this same material of white marble, and that it was not the change of material.

Mr. FOSTER. It is on account-

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. On account of the increased size, owing to the fact that the circuit court of appeals requires so much more room, and this extra excavation I told you about on account of running across a running sand or gravel soil.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, has this court of appeals been located there since the building was authorized?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No; the bill was passed before, but when it came to choosing quarters there they seemed to have not anticipated that the circuit court of appeals would require so much more room than was allowed. The exterior of the building thus far has been completed with a view of putting in the library for the circuit court of appeals and four additional rooms, as the architect says five times the space they had assumed the court of appeals would require.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, is this building under construction now? Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It is under construction now, but upon the 31st day of this month the contract will have expired. The gentleman from Illinois doubtless is familiar with these things. They let these contracts by the piece. For instance, the exterior of the building is let and then they let the interior, or such portion of it, the electrical appliances, lighting wells, and so forth.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, this does not affect the exterior of the building at all, this increase of appropriation?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No; the exterior of the building

Mr. FOSTER. I observe they speak of increased cost of materials. Does that have reference to increased cost of materials for finishing the exterior of the building?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That has reference to this, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that within the present appropriation the building can be completed, and the architect says it can be completed, but it can not be completed in conformity with the original plans to make the interior fireproof. He says it will have to be made of wood now on account of so much more money having been spent upon the exterior by reason of the size, and so on.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought the statement of the gentleman was the increased appropriation asked for was not on account of the exterior but on account of the interior, so I judge that they spent more than they originally thought was necessary for the

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It was on account of the increased size of the building.

Mr. FOSTER. Not on account of the change of material?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No.
Mr. FOSTER. How about the increased cost of material; does that enter into it?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I do not understand that the increased cost of material has had anything to do with that; in other words, that price of the marble has not gone up. Now, I want to say in this connection that the original contract for construction was between 48 and 50 cents a cubic foot, and this increase in size required 800,000 cubic feet more than was originally contemplated, which at 50 cents per cubic foot would amount to this $400,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I observe that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in 1908, which is some time ago, said:

In view of the increased cost which has taken place in the cost of materials, the department is of the opinion that a building of the dimensions indicated will now cost $2,000,000.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now, I want to say that in 1908 when we got the appropriation, you understand, for $1,600,000, and there was, of course, an increase in the cost of material. But that was not figured upon when they came to let the contract. The contract was all fair. There is no squabble between the contractors and the Government. It is simply, in the last analysis, as the architect says, that the reason for the increased appropriation is because of the necessity for increasing the size of the building.

Mr. FOSTER. That is his later statement?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. This is the only one that is published with the report, and so I was unable to state-

Mr. BURNETT. And not the Supervising Architect, I understand, but the architect, in the actual construction of the build-ing, made that statement before the committee. The principal increase in the cost was on account of this new court being established and having to erect a building that was larger than was contemplated when the authorization was made.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this architect a Government architect or is he one employed on the outside?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] can answer that. I think he was the one employed on the outside.

Mr. BURNETT. What was the question of the gentleman? Mr. FOSTER. Is this architect who has been in charge of the building a Government architect or one employed on the

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. A private architect; but we have the statement of the Architect of the Treasury Department as well as the architect of the building, and both of them coincide in that that was the reason for the increased cost. Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform us how much has been paid for the plans and specifications on this building? I suppose these plans and specifications may have been made under the Tarsney Act.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. If the gentleman will subtract $380,000 from $1,600,000, he will have all that has been ex-

We have $380,000 on hand now.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not answer my question, unless I am unable to understand. I was asking this: That it has been said many times upon the floor of the House that under the Tarsney Act these public buildings cost us a great deal of money for plans and specifications, and that much money could be saved to the Government if that act was repealed. Now, what I am asking is: Were the plans and specifications of this particular building turned over to an outside party or were they made by the architect of the Government, with the authority or consent of the Government.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The architect of the Government approved of the plans.

Mr. FOSTER. I know. Certainly I would understand that, possibly, but were they made by the architects of the Government or were they made by outside architects?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado Well, now, I am sure I do not know about that, but if they were made by the outside architects it must be assumed—and the gentleman from Illinois will readily accede to it-that the Government would finally have to approve all those plans of the outside architect.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. So that it might as well have come directly from the Government architect as the other.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not answer my question as to whether the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Rucker] can inform us what the cost of the architect was on this particular build-

Mr. BURNETT. I do not remember the fees of the architect employed to construct the building, or supervise it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I do not think we had any testimony on that subject whatever.

Mr. BURNETT. I think not.
Mr. FOSTER. So you are unable to tell that?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Under the Tarsney Act, as it existed then, and before it was repealed, they had a perfect right to employ an outside architect.

Mr. FOSTER. What I am getting at is the cost, and whether or not there was a great deal of money paid for architects' fees in this case that might create a deficiency in this public build-

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now, I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I am wholly unable to answer his question, as I said before, but there has not been from the beginning, or anywhere along the line, any scandal, either in connection with this or any other work—any scandal whatever.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not mean a scandal. They were entitled under the law to certain fees. Now, whether or not—

Mr. COX of Indiana. Six per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Six per cent; that would mean?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Six per cent of the total contract price. It was 5 per cent until a few years ago. Then they formed a kind of trust and increased it to 6 per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; it was 5 per cent until a few years ago; so that the amount of 6 per cent on $1,600,000 has been paid to the architect?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I am unable to answer even that question. I assume that the architect would be one of the first fellows that would be paid, and doubtless he has received at least a certain part of what was due him. At any rate, I say we have $380,000 on hand. If the Government is determined to have us complete this building out of all sort of proportion to its exterior finish, and have us put in wooden partitions and the cheapest kind of doors, as the architect says, we have to-day, in order to complete it in that fashion, $380,000. But then it will become a fire trap, and anybody knows that when this marble is subjected to great heat it will disintegrate. The gentleman has only to go down here and see the Washington Monument and examine the marble put into that structure. Even on account of the rays of the sun the Government in a few years will have to reenforce the lower portion of the Washington Monument. As I say, we could build this building with this $380,000. The architect says so. But in completing it he would put in the cheapest kind of material, and it would be a disgrace to this Government and we would face a menace always incident-fire.

Mr. FOSTER. How tall is this building? How many stories has it?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Four stories.

Mr. FOSTER. So that with the present appropriation they would be unable to complete this building without putting in inflammable material, such as wood, on the inside?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That is the uncontradicted testimony from all sources.

Mr. FOSTER. Are not these partitions that are put in when the building is constructed put in with brick or stone, or whatever the material may be?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Part of them, undoubtedly; but these extra rooms, of course, have not been finished.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this to put in metal window sash and copper work, and all that?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Well, a list has been furnished of the materials used and of what additional material is needed. I will furnish the list to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest that the gentleman just read it, so that we will understand it.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Masonry, plastering, and carpentry work, $223,000; ornamental and miscellaneous work, ironwork, $60,000; marblework, $40,000; mechanical equipment, $200,000. That goes to the very question that the gentleman asked. Then an estimate is made for elevators, $70,000; sash and glass, $60,000; terrace and approaches, $120,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That provides, then, for the proper equipment of such a building of such a building, or the finish of such a building, as is in keeping with the dignity and the importance of the city of Denver, Colo.?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes.
Mr. FOSTER. I realize, as the gentleman from Colorado does, that that is an enterprising city—one of the most enterprising in the United States—and I will agree with the gentleman from Colorado. man that I would not like to see a building put up there that would not be in keeping with the surroundings of that great State and that great city.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Well, I am quite sure that the gentleman from Illinois does not stand alone in that opinion. After a further discussion, if any other information is wanted that is within my power to furnish or the power of the committee, it will be forthcoming.

As I said in the beginning, I believed you would pass this bill, but in order that you may be fortified against any attack that may hereafter be made upon you in your long official lives, and I hope they will be commensurate with your desires, and I know they can not approach your deserts, I ask to append to my remarks certain notes to which I have been referring.

REASONS FOR THE NECESSITY OF AN INCREASED APPROPRIATION FOR UNITED STATES POST OFFICE AND COURTHOUSE AT DENVER, COLO.

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE AND COURTHOUSE AT DENVER, COLO.

The original competition drawings, as approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, called for a building of approximately 3,100,000 cubic feet, the rear of which was finished in the simplest manner without columns, and the light courts were without architectural elaboration.
Subsequent to the award of the competition, which was based on the appropriation of $1,600,000 during and after trips to Denver by one of our firm, certain additional accommodations were demanded which increased the cubage of the building from 3,100,000 to 3,900,000, and a greater elaboration of the Champa Street façade and of the interior courts was demanded.

(a) Five times as much accommodation for the judges and officials of the court of appeals was demanded by the judiciary department over and above the amount allowed for in the competitive drawings.

(b) A law library of large size was added.

(c) Rooms for the use of lawyers engaged in the court were demanded.

(d) The necessity of a mailing platform below the terrace level instead of at the grade level on the Champa Street façade and the terrace itself added materially to the cubic contents.

(e) The increased size of the foundations made necessary by the poor quality of the soil was a great increase both in the cubic contents and in the cost.

(c) The increased size of the foundations made necessary by the poor quality of the soil was a great increase both in the cubic contents and in the cost.

(f) At the time of our visit to Denver there was a great deal of agitation in favor of making the Champa Street façade as important as that on Stout Street. Various meetings of the board of trade and other organizations were held, and the Treasury Department was urged very strongly to see to it that all sides of the building should be of equal importance and beauty, and, furthermore, the citizens of Denver were opposed to the mailing platform being placed on the grade level is view of those passing on Champa Street, claiming their property on Champa Street would be greatly depreciated thereby, which appeared would be the case, due to the teaming and the noise of the mail-delivery wagons. In order to meet these objections the mailing platform was placed under a terrace, entirely out of sight of anyone passing on Champa Street. This necessitated not only extra cubage, but a considerable elaboration in the way of terraces, approaches, and grading, and also made necessary various electric lifts and appliances for the handling of mail not before contemplated. Also in order that the Champa Street front should be effective architecturally as the Stout Street façade, a continuous portico of 16 columns, with the necessary elaboration in the entablature, was placed on the Champa Street façade, a continuous portico of 16 columns, with the necessary elaboration in the entablature, was placed on the Champa Street façade in place of the large openings and plain wall surface shown on the competitive drawings and as originally contemplated. It was also thought advisable to have the interior light courts echo to a certain extent the architecture of the exterior, although these light courts have been finished in limestone instead of marble.

(g) When it became time to let the contract for the exterior, strong pressure was brought by the entire State of Colorado builtable for t $400,000, the amount asked for.

From the above it is very clearly shown that the present available money to finish the building, $380,000, would supply only a temporary and easily combustible interior finish, as out of this $380,000 the steam heat, electrical, and mechanical plants must be supplied, interior doors, windows, post-office screens, and everything to make a habitable interior finish from the money left, which of necessity would be nothing more than an extremely cheap character, necessitating wood partitions and the cheapest kind of doors and windows. In other words, this interior finish would only be temporary and later on would have to be torn out, as shown by the Supervising Architect's statement before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and replaced by the finish necessary and equal to the elaborate exterior of the building, and consequently would necessitate a greater authorization and appropriation than that now asked, $400,000, a part of the $380,000 being absolutely wasted, besides endangering the expensive exterior by a probable fire. The authorization for the increase of this building is now absolutely necessary for the reason that the present contracts on the building are nearly completed, or will be on or about September 1, which would leave the building open to inclement weather for the coming winter, or necessitate an unwarranted expenditure of temporarily closing it in, and require the services of a superintendent and watchman in order that the property may be taken care of and protected until such time when the work can proceed.

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE, Denver, Colo., December 5, 1912.

Mr. J. S. FLOWER, Denver, Colo.

DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry of even date, permit me to advise as follows:

Balance due the Government...

Trusting this information will be of assistance to you, and if there anything further I can do for you do not hesitate to call on me,

Yours, very truly,

Jos. H. HARRISON, Postmaster.

DENVER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Denver, Colo., December 4, 1912.

Denver, Colo., December 4, 1912.

Hon. Atterson W. Rucker,
United States Representative, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Rucker: Replying to your telegram which has just reached the Denver Chamber of Commerce and the special committee which is working on the post-office matter, of which I have the honor to be chairman, would say that the present Denver post office was erected about the year 1893. It took nearly 10 years to complete this building, and during that period Denver's population increased from less than 50,000 to upward of 105,000, so that when the building was ready for occupancy it was even then hardly large enough for the purpose.

The city has steadily grown in population since then until Denver's post office is now serving about 250,000 people. The business of the post office meanwhile having grown enormously, a few years ago it was found necessary to build an addition to the present post-office building, which is now occupied by the money order and registry divisions.

building, which is now occupied by the money order and registry divisions.

Postmaster Harrison informs me that he last week submitted to the Post Office Department at Washington a report upon the crowded conditions of the Denver post office, calling their attention by a diagram to the conditions under which they are working in the Denver post office and showing that he would have to rent a great deal of extra space outside beginning January 1, 1913, to enable the post office to take care of the parcel-post business, which beginning then will increase, to a very large extent, the number of fourth-class pieces now handled by the post office. He goes on to show in his letter, of which he has forwarded me a copy, how nearly as much again room is needed for the various departments than is now possible. He shows that he is not able to get good work out of his employees working under the crowded and insanitary conditions in which they are at present placed.

The receipts of the Denver post office have grown from about $300,000 in 1893, with 70 carriers and 54 clerks, to total receipts of about $1,300,000 for 1912, with now 181 letter carriers and 203 clerks.

Postmaster Harrison also tells me that a recent order from the Postmaster General increases the work and business of the Denver post office very largely in connection with the handling of packages from foreign countries subject to duty, involving, as the order does, the receipt at the Denver post office of all matter routed to all portions of the State; while formerly they were carried direct to the destination, the Denver post office being now required to distribute them. This, of course, adds to the necessity for more working space and will require some more employees.

It seems to the Denver Chamber of Commerce committee that with course, adds to the necessity for more working space and will require some more employees.

It seems to the Denver Chamber of Commerce committee that with the large amount of outside office space which the various United States departments not directly connected with the post office are being obliged to rent, owing to lack of space in the post-office building, that the saving which would be effected by having the new post office finished, in which these other departments would occupy space, would be a good rate of interest on this $400,000 appropriation for which we are now asking.

I do not know whether this covers in full the information for which you ask, but this Denver Chamber of Commerce committee, of which Postmaster Harrison is a member, will be very glad to give you all the information you require, and if we haven't it, will obtain it for you here. Whre us freely for any further details, and if anything can be gained by sending a Denver man or a committee from the Denver Chamber of Commerce down to Washington to represent the chamber of commerce in this matter, we will have such man or committee go to Washington.

Thanking you for the interest you are taking in this matter, I am, Yours, cordially,

Charles H. Howe,

Chaterea Committee on New Post Office.

THE DENVER REAL ESTATE EXCHANGE, Denver, Colo., December 5, 1912.

Hon. A. W. Rucker,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: In responding at a moment's notice to your telegram to the Denver Real Estate Exchange for data on the new Federal building we find it quite a task to get together the facts which you need and we desire to supply in the time at our disposal, for truly the situation is a big one, needing careful handling.

As you well know our present post office was finished about 1890 and was in the course of erection about eight years. It was started when Denver had a population of approximately 59,000 and when it seemed that our city would hardly ever exceed 100,000 souls in number.

To show that conditions change very rapidly in Denver, I shall, with other papers, inclose to you a circular covering the post-office proposition January 1, 1904. when I was president of the Denver Real Estate Exchange and our citizens were bending their energies in effort to get Congress to give them a new building. That has been nearly nine years ago, and yet, though our population has increased till we now have a quarter million population, our Federal building drags with that degree of unwillingness almost indicating a dependent and unsupporting people, when the facts are and Mr. Harrison's (our postmaster) statement, inclosed, shows that over and above all costs of running we turn over to the Government this year alone $800,000 net cash.

It is hardly conceivable that a grand and generous Government could be so tardy and so slow and so scrutinizing in dealing with its own people who supply so bounteously the Government in cash. It must be that our Nation's governors do not know true conditions here, and you are asked to inform them. This slowness in putting up our building is a dead loss to the Government, for in the following list of a hundred or more effice rooms it is forced to rent outside of its own building, because of its having no place of its own in which to house the departments, it is plain to be seen that no less than $50,000 a year is now being paid by the Government for rents for the departments, as follows:

United States Bureau of Mines, 502 Foster Building.

United States Army paymaster, 210 Quincy Building.

About a dozen subpost offices.
Nearly all of the above could be housed in the new Federal building.
Some few could, perhaps, not be.
Now as to the status of the new building: As you know, it was started nearly three years ago, and as to its present condition I send you a series of photographs but recently taken, and I send a number so that the Congressmen may have an opportunity to see what is being done.

so that the Congressmen may have an opportunity to see what is being done.

You understand that up to date the only contract let is that of Hedden & Co., which takes in merely the superstructure, concrete floors, etc., and rought plumbing in the cellars. Excepting a small amount of carving on the marble and some little slate to go on the roof, the contract is about finished on their part, and I am informed that by December 31 this company will have boarded up the building and be ready to retire to New York unless the Government gives the necessary appropriation now being asked for, $400,000.

Our city should not be charged with asking for more than originally expected, for in the report of your congressional committee—in Mr. Swartwout's testimony—it is to be seen that the size of the original building was added to by about 650,000 cubic feet, necessitated by added governmental requirements, and if we much longer delay these requirements will grow and add to till Congress will see the necessity of even another building, perhaps. Our eastern friends do not seem to understand that Denver is a fruitful city with each year a big growth. Postmaster Harrison's letter of November 23, 1912, addressed to us says: "A few days ago I submitted to the department at Washington a report upon the crowded condition of our working space, calling their attention, by a diagram which I had prepared, to the exact conditions under which we are working, with a view to their considering the necessity for renting space outside to enable us to take care of the parcel-post business which, after the 1st of January next, will increase to a very large, though uncertain, extent the number of fourth-class pieces now handled by the post office, etc."

So it will be seen that growth is added to growth and the necessity strains for relief.

The photographs will enlighten as to our new building to date. If we can afford further information, please call for it, and oblige Yours, very truly,

J. S. Flower, Chairman the Denver Real Estate Exchange's Public Improvement Committee.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Clark of Florida, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate bill 3974, increasing the limit of cost of the public building at Denyer, Colo., and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill (S. 3974) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo., and that in its consideration all debate be limited to 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 3974, and pending that he moves that the general debate be limited to 15 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, what this bill is?

The SPEAKER. It is a bill to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Denver, Colo., by $400,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr] by striking out "fifteen" and inserting "thirty."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Fields. I withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask all Members who appear in the area before the desk after a roll call to change their votes to state how they voted in the first instance. The Chair does not care, but the clerks have to know in order to keep the tally correctly. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, as amended by the gentleman from Illinois to close general debate in 30 minutes.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question new is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3974) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo., with Mr. Clark of Florida in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3974) to increase the limit of cost of the United States public building at Denver, Colo., and by order of the House general debate has been limited to 30 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I only want a minute or two to concur in the statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Ruckers]. When the bill was first before the committee and there was an intimation that an increase in the limit of cost was to be made on account of a change in the material for the construction of the building, I was opposed to the proposition. But on further examination of witnesses who were familiar with the matter it developed that almost the entire change was made necessary on account of the fact that the court of appeals had been required to sit there and had to have larger quarters and the building had to be enlarged on that account. It was also stated by the architects that they had been assured that the soil for the foundation was good, but as a matter of fact it was not, and necessitated a change which cost $100,000 or $150,000. I believe that the bill ought to pass, because I think that the increased amount was necessitated by reason of this additional expense that could not have been contemplated at the time of the original authorization.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee, if he will yield—

Mr. BURNETT. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER (continuing). How it was that there was a change in the plan of the building-that is, the material out of which it was to be constructed? I understand it was originally planned to be constructed out of Indiana limestone or

Mr. BURNETT. Well, I think, Mr. Chairman, in response to the question, that the Treasury Department would have the right to change any plans of construction so long as the con-struction was within the original authorization, and the Supervising Architect stated it could be constructed within the authorization, but that it would be done in such a way that the interior would be of a very inferior quality of material, and perhaps have to be torn out later, and then come to Congress for changes after the building, possibly, had been constructed.

Mr. FOWLER. Did not the architect say that the authorization of $1,600,000 was ample to construct it out of the material which was originally intended to be used?

Mr. BURNETT. Which architect; the Supervising Architect?

Yes. Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. BURNETT. I do not think so. He said they could construct it out of the new material, but that the interior would be of such an inferior quality that it ought not to be so

Mr. FOWLER. But the entire building could have been constructed and finished according to the original plans for the authorization of $1,600,000. Is not that his statement?

Mr. BURNETT. Of the architect?
Mr. FOWLER. Yes.
Mr. BURNETT. Yes; with this inferior finish.

Mr. FOWLER. But finished in harmony with the material?

Mr. BURNETT. No; I do not think he stated that.
Mr. FOWLER. I think I understood that to be his statement; and, further, is not it stated by one of the gentlemen from Colorado that the change was made from limestone to marble on account of State pride?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. Mr. FOWLER. And that it could have been finished out of the original material for the amount authorized?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; that was stated by Mr. Taylor of Colorado, but if you will notice in the questions I put to him I showed my disapproval of any such increases made on account of any State pride in the use of Colorado marble; but the architect in charge of the work, whom I thought knew more about it than any of those Members of Congress did, followed with the statement that almost the entire increase was necessitated by reason of the enlargement of the building and by reason of the expense of making the excavation.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, does not the architect say that the whole increase asked for is on account of the additional space taken in, which will necessitate about 800,000 cubic feet?

Mr. BURNETT. The Supervising Architect? Mr. FOWLER. Yes. Does not he also say that the cost per foot is 48 cents by contract?

Mr. BURNETT. That is, the architect in charge of the con-

Mr. FOWLER. Now, according to his own statement, does not he ask for $16,000 more than will be required to finish it up inside with the additional new material, Colorado marble?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. There is a very small difference between 48 cents per cubic foot and 50 cents per cubic foot, and he uses them interchangeably-

Mr. FOWLER. The difference is $16,000, and it will amount to a good deal.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. But it would not be used if they could get it at 48 cents.

Mr. FOWLER. If it is appropriated it will be used. I never saw any turned back into the Treasury yet.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Well, I have not had much experience in getting it out of the Treasury.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if the architect did not get $96,000 as a fee out of this appro-

Mr. BURNETT. I do not know, Mr. Chairman. I think that matter was not brought out, but that was allowed under the Tarsney Act, and my understanding is the Tarsney Act was repealed by the appropriation bill that was passed last session. I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] if I am correct that the Tarnsey Act no longer exists. I think it was an outrage, and the great expenditures in buildings was on account of the allowances under the Tarsney Act, but it was the law at that time and the committee had nothing to do with that. If the Committee on Appropriations had not repealed the Tarsney Act it was the purpose of our committee in an omnibus bill, which we will report, to repeal that act.

Mr. FOWLER. Now, do you think that this $400,000 is necessary to complete this two-story building?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, all I know, Mr. Chairman, is that it was so stated by the architect in control of the work.

Mr. FOWLER. That would make $2,000,000 for a two-story building!

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; but it covers a whole block of ground on one side, I think, and perhaps a good part of it on the other. Mr. FOWLER. Do you really think there has been the kind of economy in the construction of this building that ought to have been carried on by good workmen?

Mr. BURNETT. I have very serious doubts about that-very. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, an explanation, I think, is due to the House as to the motion which I made a few moments ago to increase the limit of time upon this bill, and I wish to make this I this fund, and no part of it, as I am informed by the chairman statement: When the House first resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnerr] was entitled to and took the floor. He yielded the time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Rucker], who occupied about 40 minutes. Thereupon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] moved that the committee rise, and then moved to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union again and to limit debate to 15 minutes, which would have given him control of that 15 minutes and given to the minority side of the House no time at all.

Gentlemen on the other side of the aisle ought to have experience enough to know that on ordinary matters they never gain anything in the way of time by endeavoring to prevent the minority from having any time at all to discuss a bill. Fortunately on this occasion some of the more experienced gentlemen on the other side of the aisle voted in favor of the amendment which I had offered, and if they had not so voted, and the amendment had not prevailed, I dare say we would have had another roll call upon the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] to limit debate to 15 minutes, and probably another roll call on the passage of the bill. It always pays, so far as time is concerned, to be somewhat fair to the minority. And when the gentleman in charge of the bill proposes to give himself an hour's time and no time to the other side, he makes a mistake, possibly not intentionally, but certainly a mistake.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. May I interrupt the gentleman from Illinois? I do not know but what I may be blamed personally for having taken up so much of the time. I am quite sure I had no understanding with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] that I would take an hour or any great portion of it. But the gentleman from Illinois will remember that I was kept on my feet by his colleague from Illinois [Mr. Foster] a considerable part of that time. I was ready to quit very much earlier than I did.

Mr. MANN. I think no one attaches any blame to the gentleman from Colorado, nor am I seeking to attach blame to anyone. I am simply stating the situation.

This bill proposes to increase the limit of cost of the Denver post office, a new building, from $1,600,000 to $2,000,000, and the bill itself is quite a commentary upon some of the administrative methods, and possibly some of the legislative procedure of Congress. In January, 1908, before the original limit of cost was fixed, the acting Secretary of the Treasury addressed a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ASSISTANT SECRETARY,
Washington, January 11, 1998.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

Sir: Referring to your request for a report in connection with S. 2299, providing for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colo., for the use of the post office and other United States offices, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $2,500,000, I have the honor to inform you that under date of February 3, 1906, this department reported as follows:

"It is estimated that a four-story-and-basement building having 45,000 square feet ground area will be sufficient, and that such a building of fireproof construction will cost $1,800,000."

In view of the marked increase which has since taken place in the cost of materials, the department is of the opinion that a building of the dimensions indicated will now cost $2,900,000.

Respectfully,

J. H. Edwards, Acting Secretary

J. H. EDWARDS, Acting Sccretary.

Thereupon that item was inserted in the public buildings bill. I do not now recall whether it was inserted in the Senate or came from the committee in the House in the first place, at $1,600,000. The committee had the recommendation, Congress had the recommendation of the department, that $2,000,000 be appropriated for this building. Congress in its wisdom, or lack of wisdom, whichever it may be, decided to authorize this building at the limit of cost of $1,600,000, paying no attention whatever to the law passed by Congress on this subject fixing the limit of cost, and an outside architect, employed by the Treasury Department under the so-called Tarsney Act, proceeded to prepare plans for the $2,000,000 building.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman just one moment right there?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. There may have been, Mr. Chairman, a wrong impression given as to the fees of the architect coming out of this particular amount.

Mr. MANN. I said nothing about the fees of the architect. Mr. BURNETT. I know; but some remark that I made in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois a moment ago might be misunderstood. That $96,000 does not come out of of the committee, who consulted the Supervising Architect. It

I do not know as to that; but I supposed the Mr. MANN. fees of the architect would come out of the sum. I made no such statement.

Mr. BURNETT. I know the gentleman did not, but it was made.

Mr. MANN. Now here is a case where the committees of the House and Senate and the House and Senate themselves, with all the information before those bodies practically which is now before them, decided in arranging for the construction of public buildings throughout the country to authorize a building at Denver to cost $1,600,000. It is quite true that they could construct a building sufficiently large at Denver to accommodate the public business for $1,000,000 and thus save the It is also quite true that Congress determined to allow the $1,600,000 to construct a monumental building.

Now, gentlemen say it is not quite fine enough. They say, "We want a little better building." The same is true as to almost every building that is authorized. When Congress has acted upon these recommendations, with practically no new developments, is the action taken by Congress to be reversed because, perchance, the local architect desires to have a more ornate building or desires to pay a higher price for some local marble, quarried in the State of Colorado?

My distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. Rucker] says that they have a marble quarry in that State where they produce marble finer than the Carrara marble. That may be; I do not know. But I see no occasion for constructing these buildings out of Carrara marble, and I doubt the advisability, where Congress, in the first place, otherwise provided, of constructing them out of marble better than Carrara marble, if it is to cost $400,000 more. When we act upon these public buildings—and, goodness knows, we authorize enough of them which we could do without, so far as expense is concerned—when we do act upon them, unless there has been some development after the action of Congress, the limit of cost ought not, ordinarily at least, to be increased.

I do not know how far this building has progressed. May I ask my friend from Colorado?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Does the gentleman ask me now?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I will exhibit a photograph, taken on the 12th day of this month, showing that the exterior, barring the fact of the windows and doors, has been completed, and I am informed that the work is absolutely at a standstill now, awaiting the determination of the question whether this bill will pass, to allow the finish to be made in conformity with the exterior.

Mr. MANN. Of course I know the gentleman is accurate about his statements. I have no doubt that if this bill is passed at all, it ought to pass now. May I ask the gentleman from Colorado also if he knows how much of the original cost of the building has been expended?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. One million six hundred thousand dollars, minus $380,000, or $1,220,000 has been expended.

Mr. MANN. How long has the building been at the point where it construction has stood still?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. It is not even so now. are at work, but the contract expires on the 31st day of this The building has been three years in course of conmonth. struction.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this building was authorized a good while ago—nearly five years ago. It ought to have been finished long before this. It has been held up for a long while, with a deliberate purpose of attempting to coerce Congress to adopt the original plans which were submitted to Congress and which Congress refused to agree to.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman allow me for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I beg leave to call the gentleman's attention, in view of his last statement, to the fact that the bill in the Senate was introduced only on March 18, 1912, and my bill in the House was introduced on January 3, 1912, so that there has not been any "holding up," as the gentleman ex-presses it. I appreciate fully what the gentleman is saying, but we are in a condition now where you have got to determine how this building shall be completed.

Mr. MANN. This bill itself has been pending for almost a

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman knows that he is himself partly to blame for that. He knows that on two different occasions a point of order was made against the consideration of this bill by the gentleman from Illinois. But we have fixed. This increase has necessitated an increase of limit of been trying all the time to get this bill passed. It has only been pending here for nine months.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not quite recall what took place, but I never made a point of order against the considera-tion of this bill. The gentleman is mistaken about that. I do not now recall whether I objected to the consideration of it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Whether I did or not, there were a number of Members who were intending to do so at the time, not so much to prevent the consideration of the bill, but in order that when it came up there might be some discussion on the question. I think we ought to know what the policy of the House is to be. There are four bills on this Unanimous Consent Calendar, all of the same character, increasing the limit of cost of public buildings. There may be some special reasons in some of these cases, but when we act on a publicbuilding bill and provide a limit of cost that ought to remain the limit of cost unless some exceptional reason can be given for the change. If, in the first place, the department had made an error and recommended a building at $1,600,000, and then discovered that the amount ought to be increased, I would not complain; but in this case the department originally started out to have this building cost $2,000,000, and, flagrantly disregarding the action of Congress, the outside architect provided plans for a $2,000,000 building. Now they say, "We have got the building held up. We are paying so much rent. It is costing you so much to provide accommodations for the Government offices there. Give us this money. We demand it of you."

I am not in favor of being held up by the outside architect or the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, although there are times when I am almost willing to submit to being held up by my distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr.

RUCKER 1.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. And this being one of the times,

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that Congress should not ordinarily increase the limit of cost originally fixed for a public building unless there were reasons and conditions arising subsequent to the action of Congress which would justify such an increase.

I do not pretend to know as much about the history of this building as some of the gentlemen who have discussed it, but it seems to me that there are conditions surrounding the project which have arisen since Congress originally acted and which furnish a most excellent and convincing argument for the granting of the increase.

I will refer, first, however, to an argument-not of the character suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. That is the fact that the Supervising Architect originally estimated the building at $1,800,000. Congress, for some reason or another, fixed a limit of cost of $1,600,000. Probably that was done with a view to helping to keep the total of the publicbuilding appropriation within some total agreed upon. could have been no other very good reason for fixing the limit of cost below the amount estimated by the department.

It seems from the report that since that time the building has been enlarged, or at least it has been found necessary to provide additional accommodations in the building over and above those contemplated at the time of the estimate. been found necessary, by reason of legislation enacted since this building was authorized, to provide for the housing of the United States Court of Appeals. No provision, I assume, was made for this court at the time of the original estimate or at the time the limit was fixed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Under the order of the House all time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In addition to the reason I have just stated for the increase of the limit of cost of the building—that is, the necessity for the housing of the Federal court of appeals—we find that the Supervising Architect calls attention to the fact that it became necessary to further enlarge the building beyond what was originally contemplated on account of the considerable increase in the various branches of the Government business being conducted in Denver. In that connection I might call attention to the increase of accommodations required for the Forest Service, for the Reclamation Service, and for other services which have branches of considerable magnitude and require considerable space at Denver, which is the center of many Government activities in that intermountain country.

The Supervising Architect also calls attention to the fact of a very inconsiderable increase in the cost of material, an increase known to us all, since the item limiting the cost was cost in quite a number of cases, and has operated to a greater extent, perhaps, in the western country to increase the cost of buildings than in some other parts of the country.

This is a magnificent building; it is a splendid monument as well as an exceedingly necessary and useful structure. This building is constructed of very beautiful marble now being extensively quarried in Colorado. The use of that marble did not very materially increase the cost of the building, but did add to its beauty, and the enhancement of beauty of the exterior of the building does add force to the request and suggestion of the Supervising Architect and the view of the committee that the interior of the building should be finished in keeping with its magnificent exterior.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. How much did the use of marble increase the cost of the building?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no knowledge that it increased it at all. Possibly it did. Some other gentleman here can perhaps inform the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman from Wyoming to say it did not increase it at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I said it was my opinion that it did not very materially increase the cost.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know about it, but it must have very materially increased the cost.

Mr. MONDELL. Not necessarily, for the increase now asked for is only $400,000, and the building is larger than originally contemplated; there are more departments of the Government cared for. An additional court room is provided, and in the meantime there has been a general increase in the cost of material throughout the country, an increase that has been greater in the mountain country than elsewhere.

In addition, Congress originally fixed the limit of cost at $200,000 less than the estimate of the Treasury Department, based on careful plans. It is one of the most beautiful of our recent public buildings. It is a great credit to the Government, and it would be very unfortunate not to allow this increase, now that its size has been increased, its cost increased by the increase of the cost of material, and the desire to provide for the decoration of the interior in a manner entirely in harmony and in keeping with the beautiful, majestic, and imposing character of the structure as a whole.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am inclined to think that when the Government constructs a building it ought to so construct it that it will be a credit to the community in which it is being erected. think it ought to set the pace for the local community so that every private structure will be such as to enhance the beauty of the locality. I understood the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] to say that one of the reasons why only $400,000 is being asked now is that from a statement of the architect it appears that in testing the quality of material upon which this building is to be constructed it was ascertained that the foundation was to be laid on a kind of earth that would not carry the weight unless the foundations went deeper than it was originally intended them to go. I want to say in this connection that such a statement ought to subject the architect, or any other official connected with the construction of this building, to censure by Congress. If the architect or Treasury Department understood their business they would know in advance the kind of foundation upon which this building was to be constructed, and they would not be required, if they knew that, to come to Congress and ask $150,000 more because of their lack of information in the first instance.

The mere statement of the architect to the effect that he overlooked this important feature of the cost of the building now being erected in Denver gives evidence of his lack of ability to construct a public building at all. No well-informed architect would attempt to lay the foundation of a great structure without first ascertaining the quality of the material upon which that structure was to be built. No architect having any respect for his reputation as an architect would come to Congress and admit that he failed to furnish himself with this very important information.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman, of course, talks intelligently about this. Now, to get some information upon that point, how would he determine as to the kind of soil on which the foundation was to be placed?

Mr. MADDEN. It is the easiest thing in the world to make

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. How often?

Mr. MADDEN. I would make them sufficiently often on the land upon which the building was to be erected to know exactly what kind of material the foundation is to be laid upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee:

do now rise and report the bill with the recommendation that

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLARK of Florida, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3974, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 48, noes 17. So the bill was passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, DUBLIN, GA.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17683) to increase the limit of cost for the postoffice building heretofore authorized at Dublin, Ga.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost as now fixed for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building for a post office at Dublin, Ga., be, and the same is hereby, increased by the sum of $8,000.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to pass this bill without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Why not dispose of it? The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—
Mr. ASHBROOK. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brantley], the author of this bill, is not present, and it is in deference to him that we ask that the bill be passed.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is capable of making a statement about the bill and the House can determine its policy about the matter, and I do object.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Then I will say to the gentleman that I understand the building has been completed and that the money will probably not be asked for.

Mr. MANN. On that statement I will make no objection. Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brant-LEY] stated to me when objection was made before that if it was not passed then they would be too far along with the building to be of any benefit this year, but I will confer with him and see if that is the case.

Mr. MANN. I do not object to passing the bill over, then. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing this bill without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PUBLIC BUILDING, RICHFORD, VT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6899) increasing the limit of cost for the erection and completion of a public building in the city of Richford, State of Vermont.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost for a public building in the city of Richford, State of Vermont, authorized under section 4 of the act of May 30, 1908, be, and the same hereby is, increased from $60,000 to $74,000, and that the sum of $14,000 to provide for such increased cost be, and the same hereby is, appropriated.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have a statement about the bill. I do not think it will be necessary to go into the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building and customhouse at Richford, Vt. The amount appropriated for the building was $60,000. The contract was let and the work on the erection of the building was commenced. Shortly after the work on the excavation was begun rock was struck, which it was found would increase the cost of the erection of the building if the basement was put down to the depth provided for in the specifications, and work thereupon ceased by order of the Secretary of the Treasury until an additional appropriation could be secured. This bill was passed by the Senate and it was favorably recommended by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with a recommendation from the Treasury Department that $14,000 more be appropriated for the purpose of bringing the building down to the proper grade of the street, and so forth. In letting the contract the amount appropriated was so small that the Treasury Department was compelled to substitute wood cornice for terra cotta and brick. The citizens of this enterprising little city are also very anxious that the building should be trimmed with limestone or grayfaced brick and not with the ordinary plain red brick the same as is used on all the mercantile houses of that city.

The total cost for limestone trimming is $4,000. The other items of expense, which include the nonconducting covering of the plumbing and some marble finishing on the interior and reinstating other important omitted features, in the total aggregate only $14,000. This city is one of considerable importance in that State. It is the port of entry of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with customs receipts amounting to nearly $500,000 a year, and the amount appropriated, in the opinion of the committee, was very small in the first instance, and the committee therefore thought the additional amount asked was most reasonable and ought to be appropriated.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman object to my asking the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] a question about it? Mr. ASHBROOK, No.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] is personally acquainted with the situation?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am. I live within 28 miles of

Mr. MANN. I think it is desirable sometimes to have gentlemen give information, and I will be glad if the gentleman can give very briefly any reason for increasing this amount.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Why it should be favored?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As I understand it, and as the people of Richford have explained it to me, this first appropriation was made by a compromise in the first place. It was before my legislative experience here; but I understand that by some process, by which there was a horizontal reduction in the general measure, it was included in that bill. Then it was agreed they should erect this building at $60,000. The excavation was begun, and they got down a few feet and found rock. narily in New England anywhere, and particularly in Vermont, you might expect to dig down a little way and find rock, because Vermont is founded on a rock. But there were a few Republican things that went through this time that did not strike much trouble, and this was one of them. But they got the rock. The Treasury Department estimates that it will cost somewhere along about $6,000, as I understand it, to go down the 2 feet which it is necessary in order to make a cellar out of this present hole in the ground.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the architect of the Treasury Department in charge of the construction of this building? Are the plans drawn by him?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand so. I do not know enough about the previous legislative history—
Mr. MADDEN. What is the size of the building? What is the limit of cost on the building?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Sixty thousand dollars now. The original appropriation was for $74,000, and the request is made now, in view of the fact-

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is $60,000.

Mr. MADDEN. And now they want $68,000?
Mr. ASHBROOK. They want $14,000 more.
Mr. MADDEN. The $14,000 additional is required because of the fact that they found rock when excavating for the founda-

Mr. ASHBROOK. Not entirely, but there were several substitutes they were compelled to make to hold the contract within the small amount of $60,000.

Who was the man who wrote the statement that they found rock after they began to excavate?

Mr. KENDALL. Within 2 feet. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not within 2 feet. It is 2 feet

Mr. MADDEN. Because they found rock it was costing more to excavate?

Mr. ASHBROOK. I can not answer the gentleman. This bill passed the Senate, and the report from the Senate committee to the Senate is practically the same as the report of the House committee to the House.

Mr. MADDEN. The purpose of my question is whether the statement was made by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, and if he made such a statement, then to show he was negligent in the performance of his duty.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Greene] says that when they had gone down "2 feet." It was a "few

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They went down within 2 feet of the required distance, and then found rock.

Mr. MADDEN. Why did not the Supervising Architect make preliminary boring down as far as it was necessary to go with the foundation?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Ordinarily you would strike rock in Vermont, but this is a river bottom and alluvial soil.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, they would not be able to build a foundation at all, on alluvial soil, for a great building.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is not a great building. It is building to cost $60,000.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me the architect ought to know what kind of earth this building was to be erected upon before he began its erection.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would the gentleman penalize the city of Richford because of that?

Mr. MADDEN. No. I am simply calling attention to the negligence of the office of the Supervising Architect, and say that either because of his lack of knowledge or his failure to perform his duty the people of the United States are being taxed to pay more money for a building than they would otherwise be called upon to pay. That is what I am calling attention to. I am not saying that I am opposed to the allowance of this appropriation, but I am opposed to the methods that are pursued by the men who are supposed to understand what kind of material there is in the foundation upon which a building is to be erected.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not the floor. Mr. PLUMLEY. I desire to ask the I desire to ask the gentleman whether, if the Supervising Architect had known this before, he would not simply have had to ask before for this additional sum? Is not that true?

Mr. MADDEN. The very fact that he did not know it before is evidence of the prior fact that he did not understand his business or that, if he did understand it, he did not attend to it.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I am not here to represent the Supervising Architect's Office and I do not hold a brief from him. I simply wanted to ask the gentleman that question.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. COOPER. Yes.

I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he does not think the negligence, if any, is attributable to the inspector in charge of the work and not to the office of the Supervising Architect in Washington?

Mr. MADDEN. No. In making a plan for a building, the first thing to be determined is what kind of material the building is to be founded on, and borings must be made to ascertain that fact. The inspector can have no knowledge of such facts until the building is under way. He is appointed to supervise the construction of the building after construction is commenced, and not to know what kind of material the building is to be constructed upon.

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman know the particular instructions that were issued to the inspector or supervisor?

Mr. MADDEN. No.
Mr. COOPER. Suppose the inspector failed to carry out the specifications. In that case no fault can be attributed up here to the office of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. MADDEN. This is the fact, as stated by the Chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that when they reached a certain stage in the excavation of the founda-tion they discovered rock 2 feet below the surface. They should have discovered that before they got to digging at all.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I do not think I said "2 feet" below the surface. I said "a few feet."

Mr. KENDALL. How can the supervisor in charge of the building know of the character of the soil without a previous investigation?

Mr. MADDEN. He could not.

Mr. KENDALL. Then there must have been a previous investigation.

Mr. MADDEN. If there was not, there ought to have been. Mr. ASHBROOK. I have no brief to defend the Supervising Architect or excuse this condition of affairs. But the fact is that unless this bill is passed, the building can not be constructed.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not oppose the granting of the appropriation, but I desire to call attention to the fact that somebody somewhere has neglected to perform his duty.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I quite agree with the gentleman.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6899) increasing the limit of cost for the erection and completion of a public building in the city of Richford, State of Vermont.

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost for a public building in the city of Richford. State of Vermont, authorized under section 4 of the act of May 30, 1908, be, and the same hereby is, increased from $60,000 to $74,000, and that the sum of $14,000 to provide for such increased cost be, and the same hereby is, appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Ashbrook, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

nnnounced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected Jacob H. Gallinger, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including December 16, 1912; that the Senate has elected Augustus O. Bacon, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including January 5, 1913; that the Senate has elected Jacob H. Gallinger President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including January 19, 1913, to and including February 1, 1913; that the Senate has elected Augustus O. Bacon President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including February 2, 1913, to and including February 1, 1913; and that the Senate has elected Jacob H. Gallinger President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office from and including February 16, 1913, to and including March 3, 1913.

CHANGES IN HOMESTEAD ALLOTMENTS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKA-

CHANGES IN HOMESTEAD ALLOTMENTS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKA-SAW INDIANS, OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25507) to authorize certain changes in homestead allotments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter] who is in charge of this bill was compelled to go away, and he asked me to request the House that the consideration of this bill be passed to-day. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] asks unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

TO PROVIDE FOR AN ENLARGED HOMESTEAD.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker; unless there is some objection, I wish to state that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Tax-LOB] who introduced the next bill on this calendar has written me a letter requesting that that bill go over until such time as e can be here. He is now at his home in Denver, Colo.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] he can be here.

asks unanimous consent to pass without prejudice the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, which is the bill (H. R. 23351) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead." Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I wish to say that this legislation ought to pass. I do not feel disposed to allow it to go over by unanimous consent unless such action will tend to its ultimate enactment.

Mr. FOSTER. If there is no objection to the consideration of this bill it may be considered and passed, but the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylon] wrote me that letter, and I desired to state the situation to the House. He is at home, and I understand that his whole family have been in the hospital, and he is there now.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster], in case his request is not granted, is disposed to interpose an objection to the consideration of the bill at this time, and therefore cause it to be stricken from the calendar?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know that I should do that; no. would not like to strike the bill from the calendar by objecting to its consideration, but I merely make this statement in justice to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who wrote me in reference to this matter some time ago. I consulted with a friend of his, who thought that possibly the bill ought to go over until the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Taylor] was here. If, after hearing this statement, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] thinks the bill had better be taken up for consideration at this time, I shall not object, and will withdraw my request.

Mr. MONDELL. The entire western country is interested in this legislation. I do not want to agree to any action which would prevent or delay the passage of the act. If objection is likely, and the bill is to be stricken from the calendar unless it is passed over, of course I prefer to have it passed over without prejudice.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall not object to its consideration. Mr. MONDELL. The situation, as the gentleman will see, is somewhat embarrassing.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps it would be well to have the bill reported before we decide what we will do with it.

Mr. FOSTER. I simply made my statement for the purpose of saving time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.
The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 23351) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead."
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] to pass this bill over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill. BRIDGE ACROSS HUDSON RIVER BETWEEN NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5650) to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the New York and New Jersey Bridge Cos, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey," approved June 7, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SABATH. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. This appears on the Unanimous Consent Calendar twice.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I will explain that.
Mr. MANN. It appears on the Unanimous Consent Calendar as No. 411 and also as 435. My inquiry is whether the Clerk in making up the Unanimous Consent Calendar was authorized to place the bill upon the calendar the second time. I do not know whether it may have been done inadvertently, but I wish to ask whether as a matter of right a bill can be placed on the calendar a second time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it came about in this way

Mr. MANN. Evidently it may have been a mistake; but has a Member the right to put a bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent twice?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think a bill ought to be allowed to appear twice on the same calendar, and if it is disposed of at this point, then it goes off the calendar in both places.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It was placed on the calendar twice as the result of a misunderstanding, and it was an accident.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled on that proposition that you can not put the same bill on the calendar twice.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. This bill and bill Calendar
No. 434 are really companion bills and ought to be considered at the same time.

Mr. MANN. It is not possible to consider two bills at the same time.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I mean one after the other. Mr. MANN. The other one will follow this. The SPEAKER. Are these bills the same? Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. They are not the same, but they are both bridge bills for bridges over the Hudson River. The SPEAKER. Is it the same bridge?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. No; there are two bridges. The bills are Calendar Nos. 434 and 435, and I ask unanimous consent that bill Calendar No. 411 be postponed until it is reached as No. 435, and it be then considered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let me ask why is it desirable to have this bill considered after the other bill instead of having the other bill considered after this one?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I would just as lief have the other bill considered after this.

Mr. MANN. If there is any reason, I do not object.
Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. It is immaterial to me.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. Michael E. Driscoll] is right in his statement concerning the character of the bills, and I should join in the request that he makes that the bill which has now been called be passed over until No. 435 is reached, just as he has requested.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York in a minute. What the Chair wants to find out in order to make a correct ruling, and I suppose the first he has ever made on the subject, is, are these two bills the

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. They are evidently for the same purpose, namely, to construct bridges across the North River, or rather to extend the life of the charter.

Mr. MANN. I think the Speaker misunderstands. One bill is on the calendar and another bill similar is on the calendar in another place, but one bill is on twice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules without any qualification that you can not put the same bill in two places on this Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If objection is made to this particular bill, and it is stricken from the calendar, would it not facilitate matters to take the other number up when it is reached in its regular order, or would objection to this bill work automatically to strike the other bill from the calendar? The SPEAKER. It would work automatically.

I understand the gentleman from New York Mr. MANN. now asks unanimous consent to strike Calendar No. 411 off the calendar and leave on the calendar No. 435.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That is the request.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose did the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] rise?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wished to ask somebody why either one of those bills should pass? - A couple of companies in New York have been fooling around this franchise for over 20 years pretending they wanted to build a bridge across the Hudson

Mr. MANN. We have not reached that yet. Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). And I did not know but it might be pertinent, before anything else is done, to inquire why these franchises should be bucketed about; why does not some body build a bridge if they want to do so and not hold up those who want to build a bridge and not be coming here asking us to extend the time with nothing in evidence that the bridge is to be built?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. That is exactly what we do not want to be done, and if they do not commence this bridge within three years they forfeit their franchise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have been here every two or three years since 1894 and it is about time somebody decided whether they intend to build one of these bridges. If they do not, let their rights expire and perhaps somebody will come along who is willing to build a bridge across the Hudson River.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. These extensions were 10 years at a time.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL]?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. My request is that this bill. No. 411, be stricken from the calendar and the same bill, No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to strike the bill, Calendar No. 411, from the calendar without prejudice to the bill where it appears as 435. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will strike the bill, Calendar No. 411, from the calendar and report the next one.

MAKING LABOR DAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25937) making the first Monday in September, Labor Day, a legal holiday.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first Monday in September in each year, the day celebrated and known as Labor Day, be, and is hereby, declared to be a legal holiday, and that the employees of the Navy Yard, Government Printing Office, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and all other per dlem employees of the Government of the United States, at Washington or elsewhere in the United States, shall be allowed a holiday on the said first Monday in September in each year and shall receive for that day the same pay as for other days.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That all per diem employees of the Government of the United States shall receive for all legal holidays, including the first Monday in Septemper, known as Labor Day, the same pay as for other days."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some one in charge of the bill if he has investigated with a view of seeing how much additional cost this will entail upon the Treasury?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, if there is nobody here representing this bill, I will say that I know something about it, because I introduced a similar bill myself and I can explain what the purpose of it is.

I introduced a joint resolution, which is practically the same as this bill amended by the committee, and it simply means to cure what I think was an unintentional defect in the present law. The law to-day provides that on holidays, such as Christmas, Fourth of July, and Thanksgiving Day, the employees of the Government on duty in the navy yards and arsenals, and so forth, if they are called upon to work shall be paid extra-that is, if they do not work at all they get their regular pay-but, if because of some exigency they are called upon to work on the holiday they get not only their regular pay but they get an extra day's pay. It so happens that when the law was passed making Labor Day a holiday it did not have in it-undoubtedly by oversight-the provision which allowed laborers who were called upon to work upon Labor Day their extra pay. The comptroller being called upon to rule, ruled that they could not; that if they were called upon to work on Labor Day they just got their regular Labor Day pay the same as if they had not worked at all. So this is simply to cure that defect and put Labor Day on the same par as Christmas, Thanksgiving, the Fourth of July, and Washington's Birthday.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. COX of Indiana. Under the law as it exists now do these employees when they do not work on Labor Day get any pay? Mr. GILLETT. Mr. GILLETT. Certainly; they get their regular per diem. Mr. COX of Indiana. If they do work on Labor Day, they get this extra pay?

Mr. GILLETT. They ought to get two days' pay. In other words, they get the pay for the holiday—that is, they would if this bill became a law—and also get an extra day's pay. If a man is called upon by some exigency in a navy yard, if there is a stress in getting out a ship, and he works on Labor Day, he would get two days' pay for that work. They would get the holiday pay and the pay for working. And that applies to all the holidays now except Labor Day, and this is to put Labor Day on that same footing.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Could the gentleman make any estimate as to what it would cost?

Mr. GILLETT. You can not, Mr. Speaker, make such an estimate, of course, because it is a thing that probably will not happen very often that many men in these Government establishments will be called upon to work on Labor Day; but if there does come a sudden stress and exigency, then I think it is no more than fair that that holiday shall be treated the same as the others. There probably will not be many.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman know about how many employees it might likely affect?

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, it would affect all of the employees in the Government navy yards and in all of the Government arsenals if they were called upon to work in case of war, for instance, on Labor Day. It would affect them all. Their reason for this law is that occasionally now a man does have to work-some few workmen always have on Labor Day and they feel it to be unfair to them if they are called upon to work when the rest of their fellow employees do not have to work and get just the same pay.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It is to satisfy him under those con-

Mr. GILLETT. No; it is to put them all on the same footing.

Mr. MADDEN: Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. Mr. MADDEN. The Government of the United States does not recognize Labor Day and pay men who are in its service if they are not employed on that day, does it?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Now? Mr. GILLETT. Now.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not a national holiday?

Mr. GILLETT. It is a national holiday.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the reason for this bill?
Mr. GILLETT. I think the gentleman did not hear me. is because, as I explained, the bill that made this day a holiday did not provide for this holiday as on all other holidaysthat if a man did work on this holiday he should be paid double.

Mr. MADDEN. It is a State holiday. Mr. GILLETT. It is a national holiday.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand that a man gets paid on all other holidays when he works?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And this is to equalize it?
Mr. GILLETT. Yes. It is to put him on exactly the same footing on this day as on other holidays.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. Mr. GILLETT. This bill is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if nobody else does, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 25937, making the first Monday in September (Labor Day) a legal holiday, with Mr. CLARK of Florida in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 25937. The Clerk will report the bill.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as introduced, proposes to declare Labor Day a legal holiday. It was introduced by my friend from New York [Mr. Redfield], but I assume that that gentleman did not prepare the bill, because he undoubtedly knows that Labor Day is already a legal holiday. Whoever did prepare the bill was not fully informed on the subject. I wondered whether the committee that reported the bill—the Committee on the Judiciary, which has no jurisdiction over matters of this sort concerned in the amendment—knew what they reported when they reported this bill.

The bill provides-

That all per diem employees of the Government of the United States shall receive for all legal holidays, including the first Monday in September, known as Labor Day, the same pay as on other days.

I presume the purpose was to increase the compensation paid to per diem employees. But unless I am mistaken, the effect of the bill may be to decrease the compensation. employees of the Government who now work on holidays, most of them, get a larger compensation for their holiday work than they do on other days. I think in the Government Printing Office they probably get time and a half. This bill proposes to cut down the extra compensation they get on legal holidays when they work on legal holidays, and pay them only the same amount as they receive on other days. Is that the intention of the two distinguished gentlemen who father the bill?

Mr. SHARP. The verbiage there is "for other holidays."

Mr. MANN. No; it is "for other days." I will ask my friend from Ohio, who is or has been a large employer of labor, whether, if that bill were passed and applied to him and a man now receiving time and a half for a holiday worked then on a holiday, he would feel compelled to pay him simply for time and not time and a half? Is that the purpose of the bill?

But I would like to know, further, whether those who are now engaged in working on piecework will be affected by the provision in reference to the compensation on holidays. included in the legislative bill that was passed a few days ago an item for piecework in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department, with a provision that the people so engaged should be allowed compensation on holidays equal to the average which they receive. And in that connection I may say that when that matter came up in the House the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Johnson], who had charge of the legislative bill, stated that he had never heard any complaint from the people engaged in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department on piecework.

I questioned whether it was entirely satisfactory to require the people who operate tabulating machines in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department to do it by the piece? Since that time I have been called up on the telephone numerous times by people engaged in that department and have received a number of letters, the contents of which, of course, can not be divulged, all complaining that under the piecework system in force in the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department the people who operate these machines, in order to receive the same amount of compensation which they used to receive and which is paid to other similar employees of the Government, have to go to work at 8 o'clock in the morning and, with very little time for lunch, some of them have to work until comparatively late at night; not in the afternoon, but at night, and that is a disgrace to the Government, if it be the case.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Of course, I do not inquire of the gentleman the sources of his information; but is not that objection based on the ground that while the machines work all right the mistakes made by postmasters throughout the country in regard to the money orders make it impossible to tabulate them with the machines?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what is the ground of the com-plaint, and I have never met any of the ladies who do this I think most of it is done by ladies. The statement is made that under that piecework system the allowance of compensation is based upon the ability of those who can do the most rapid work, at the very top notch, and that the others, in order to make anything like a living wage, have to work excessively long hours.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is entirely correct in his criticism of the bill in the form in which it comes from the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill was introduced because of the actual case of a man who had worked by special request upon a number of holidays, and who was paid double time for all of those holidays except for several Labor Days, for which the Comptroller of the Treasury refused to pay him more than single time, giving as his reason that the law was defective in the respect that a clause had been omitted from the act which made Labor Day a holiday, which provided the method of paying upon that day. The Comptroller of the Treasury called my attention to it, and in an interview said it ought to be corrected.- This bill in its original form was drawn by me and was approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury. It went to the Judiciary Committee, and I have never seen it since then until to-day. The effect of it as it now reads would be to undo all that was attempted to be done. wish to offer an amendment, which will restore the bill to its original purpose, I think.

The Chair will state that amendment is The CHAIRMAN. not in order now.

Mr. REDFIELD. At the proper time I will offer the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general debate the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first Monday in September in each year, the day celebrated and known as Labor Day, be, and is hereby, declared to be a legal holiday, and that the employees of the Navy Yard, Government Printing Office, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and all other per diem employees of the Government of the United States, at Washington or elsewhere in the United States, shall be allowed a holiday on the said first Monday in September in each year and shall receive for that day the same pay as for other days.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following: "That all per diem employees of the Government of the United States shall receive for all legal holidays, including the first Monday in September, known as Labor Day, the same pay as for other days."

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "days," in-line 4, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "holidays," and by striking out in line 2 "all legal holidays, including."

Mr. REDFIELD. I ask the Clerk to read it as it will read

The CLERK. The amendment as amended will read:

That all per diem employees of the Government of the United States shall receive for the first Monday in September, known as Labor Day, the same pay as for other holidays.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I suggest that the gentleman insert the word "legal" before "holidays."

Mr. GILLETT. I think it is unfortunate that the committee which reported this bill is not represented here to explain and defend it.

Mr. MANN. I will say in this connection they are over in the Senate representing this body in the impeachment proceedings.

That is correct. I did not think of that, and I was not submitting any criticism, but it is still unfortunate; and I think, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Redfield] is wrong, and the committee is right in its amendment, because, although at first blush it appears as he suggests that this would not provide for the same pay as on other helidays, yet the amendment which the committee has inserted follows exactly the original law applying to other holidays which has been construed already by the comptroller. Here is that law. I only read the last part of it:

The 1st day of January, the 22d day of February, the 4th day of July, the 25th day of December, and such days as may be designated by the President as national days of Thanksgiving, and shall receive the same pay as on other days.

Exactly the language which is put into this bill. Now, that has been interpreted already by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and under that interpretation the men are allowed, if they work on those holidays, double pay. Therefore I think it is wise to leave the amendment as the Committee on the Judiciary, who undoubtedly had investigated the previous statutes and the decisions of the comptroller originally reported it. It is always well, if possible, to use language which has already been tested and interpreted by a court.

Mr. MADDEN. The intention of the law, I suppose, is to provide they shall receive the same pay on these legal holidays as they did on other days when they are not at work on legal holidays?

Mr. GILLETT. And when they do work they get double

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will recall in a great many instances it has been provided specifically where employees work on holidays they shall be paid extra time or time and a half or double time for those days.

Mr. GILLETT. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Now those employees, if they work on other holidays and Labor Day, now receive an extra day's pay.

Mr. GILLETT. They receive it under this law, which I read as to Thanksgiving and all other holidays except this.

Mr. MANN. That extra day's pay goes to everybody alike?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. Mr. MANN. We have special provision, I think, concerning the Government Printing Office that people who work on a holiday shall receive extra compensation.

Mr. GILLETT. Very likely they do.

Mr. MANN. Under this provision, as the committee reported it, it would take that away from them.

Mr. GILLETT. No-

Mr. KENDALL. I do not think they are inconsistent. Mr. GILLETT. I do not think so, because it follows exactly the law of all other holidays which has been construed by the comptroller. I have just read it. Now, is not it wiser to follow the exact law as it is to-day than to make a law on the floor of this House without investigation?

Mr. MANN. I suggest the amendment now offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD] would not change that law at all. It only provides that Labor Day shall be treated as other holidays. That is all.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not see why it does not accomplish the same result. I do not care which language is used if the result is reached.

Mr. MANN. His amendment only provides Labor Day shall be treated as other holidays. It does not change any of the other laws.

Mr. GILLETT. I will agree to that; I do not think it does.

Mr. CANNON. Is not there a law now that the man who works on Labor Day in the Government Printing Office shall not only get his pay as of the holiday but shall get his pay for the day's work double?

Mr. MANN. There is a law if he works on the Fourth of July that shall happen to him.

Mr. CANNON. On the Fourth of July or Christmas he gets three days' pay or two days' pay?

Mr. MANN. He gets pay for the holiday and then he gets two days' pay for working on that day.

Mr. GILLETT. No; he gets pay for the holiday and he gets one day's extra pay. In other words, if he works he gets double

Mr. MANN. He gets one day's pay because of the holiday; if he works, he may get two days' pay in addition.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If he does not work, he is paid for the day's work; if he works, he gets paid for another day-that is, double time.

Mr. MANN. He gets holiday pay in addition. Mr. GILLETT. He does not under this law which I read. Mr. MANN. He gets paid for working extra time; that is under special statute, but not under this statute.

Mr. KENDALL. Not under this statute. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that, it seems to me, the most expeditious way to meet this situation is simply to amend the gentleman's resolution by inserting, after the words "25th day of December," the words "Labor Day or the first Monday of September.'

Mr. MANN. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD] is practically that.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I think they all accomplish the same result. Mr. KENDALL. This joint resolution has been interpreted by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and no confusion could arise if that should be done.

Mr. MANN. That is practically what his amendment is, namely, that Labor Day should be treated as other days.

Mr. GILLETT. I suggest an amendment to the gentleman from New York to his amendment, and that is it should provide, as I provided originally in the resolution which I submitted, "on duty in the United States." You have it in yours mitted, "on duty in the United States." You have it in yours "elsewhere than in the United States." I do not think this is meant to apply outside of the United States. Although the committee did not have that in their amendment, I think you have it in yours.

Mr. REDFIELD. It is not in the amended bill.

Mr. GILLETT. I think it ought to read "duty in the United States," so it should not apply

Mr. REDFIELD. Should it not apply to the Government employees in Hawaii?

Mr. MANN. Hawali is a part of the United States. Mr. REDFIELD. It is a Territory of the United States. Mr. GILLETT. It should not apply to the Philippines or the

Mr. REDFIELD. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. WILDER. Is it not a fact that the workmen in Government employment at this time receive extra pay?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; that is what I have been saying.
Mr. WILDER. If they did work on a holiday they would receive double pay for it?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman has not been here to hear the discussion.

Mr. WILDER. I have heard every word of it.
Mr. GILLETT. This is to provide that they shall get double pay on Labor Day as on other holidays.

Mr. WILDER. If it is a holiday they get double pay. Mr. GILLETT. No; they do not. The comptroller has ruled that way Mr. REDFIELD. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to offer that as an amendment?

Mr. GILLETT. I suggest it to you.
Mr. REDFIELD. Then I will leave it as it stands.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman whether it is necessary to put the word "legal" in there or not. Mr. REDFIELD. I agree to that, namely, that the word "legal" should be inserted before the word "holiday."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Red-FIELD].

Mr. CANNON. How will it read?
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out, in line 2, the words "all legal holidays including." and in line 4 strike out the word "days," and insert the words "legal holidays."

Mr. REDFIELD. Will the Clerk please read it as amended?

Mr. SABATH. How will the bill read now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill as it will read when amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all per diem employees of the Government of the United States shall receive for the first Monday in September, known as Labor Day, the same pay as for other legal holidays.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I addressed the Chair before the vote was put. I do not like to seem too critical, but I wonder if the gentleman is not making a mistake there? I understand, you are going to put "legal holidays" at the end?

Mr. REDFIELD. Yes. Mr. GILLETT. That is what this means. This means they shall get the same pay as they are getting on other days. That is, one workman may get on the holiday the same pay he is getting every day.

Mr. FOWLER. And the effect of the bill is to place the laborer on Labor Day so that he can receive the same pay he does on any other holiday?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. Mr. FOWLER. And then if he should work on the heliday he receives the holiday pay in addition?

Mr. GILLETT. Well, yes; he does.

Mr. FOWLER. That is what the effect of the bill is now, without the amendment?

Mr. KENDALL. Not at all.
Mr. GILLETT. I do not think that amendment is necessary.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think so either.

Mr. CANNON. Does that apply to the people employed in the Philippines'

Mr. REDFIELD. As it now stands it would. Mr. CANNON. And with the amendment? Mr. REDFIELD. As it now stands it would.

Mr. CANNON. Somebody said it would not, under some proposed amendment.

As it now stands, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that it applies to all of the per diem employees of the Government of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr.

REDFIELD].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 3, after the word "day," by inserting the following: "And the 12th day of October each year, to be known as Columbus Day."

Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against Mr. MANN. the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke] desire to be heard on that point of order?

Mr. Burke of Pennsylvania. Well, Mr. Chairman, so far as the point of order is concerned, it seems to me the purpose of this bill, despite its title, is to fix the pay of Government employees on a certain class of days. It does not refer to any one specific day. That class, it seems to me, can be enlarged in this bill. It affects the Treasury and it affects the status of those employees on certain days of the year. The purpose of this amendment is to carry that provision one day beyond those already provided in the bill itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question now is on the adoption of the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Clark of Florida, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 25937) making the first Monday in September (Labor Day) a legal holiday, and had instructed him to report back the same with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass,

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for pay for per diem employees of the Government of the United States.'

On motion of Mr. REDFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

APACHE PRISONERS OF WAR.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6776) for the relief of the Apache Indians held as prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the substance of that bill was provided for in last year's Indian appropriation bill, and I think it might as well be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Why not lay it on the table? Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Fer-RIS] asks unanimous consent to lay the bill on the table. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OLYMPIA, WASH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 6283) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 6283) increasing the cost of creeting a public building at Olympia, Wash.

Be it enacted, etc.. That the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Olympia, Wash., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $150,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Leave to consider it at all has not been granted yet. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear a statement as to the reasons, either from the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Clark] or the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Warburton].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this was one of the emergency bills reported at the extra session of Congress by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The report of the committee sets forth the necessity for it, and I will call the attention of the House to it:

By this bill it is proposed to increase the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Olympia, Wash., $30,000. Olympia is the capital of the State of Washington, and a contract for the erection of the building was awarded May 24, 1912, for the sum of $92,700. The sum heretofore authorized does not permit the construction of a fireproof building, and the Treasury Department, in a letter of July 6, 1912, which is herewith appended and made a part of this report, states that, in order to make the building fireproof and to provide for gutters, drains, and other alternates that are named in said letter, iczislation must be enacted at this session of Congress or work must be suspended pending further legislation. As the contract has already been let, the committee is of the opinion that it would not be right to suspend the work until Congress could act at some subsequent session and therefore believes that this is an emergency case and that the bill should be passed at this session.

Now, as to what has been done since that time I should like to have the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] make an explanation.

Mr. WARBURTON. By direction of the Secretary of the Treasury some four or five months ago work was stopped on the public building at Olympia, Wash., pending further action by Congress. The bill originally provided for a limit of $130,000 for building and grounds. The architect had reported that it would require $130,000 to construct the building, but there was only appropriated $130,000 for the building and the site. The site cost $30,000, leaving only $100,000 for the building and the site. ing itself, and the department was unable to construct a fire-proof building for that amount. It will simply be a frame building, if the work proceeds under the present authorization.

A strong effort was made by the department before a bid was secured. I think it was submitted three different times. They were unable to get a bid which would permit the building of a fireproof structure.

The city of Olympia is the capital of the State of Washington. That State is building a $3,000,000 State capitol there now, and I think it would be a great mistake to build a building that would not be fireproof, or a building that was entirely disproportionate to the other buildings. The appropriation itself is small for a post-office building in the capital of the State. The city of Olympia has about 10,000 inhabitants, and before the building is completed there will probably be double that number of people in the capital. The city is growing very The postal receipts last year, I think, amounted to $35,000.

Mr. MANN. What is the size of Olympia?

Mr. WARBURTON. It has, I think, nearly 10,000 people. It is growing very rapidly. For a number of years it did not grow rapidly, but of late it has been growing very rapidly.

Mr. MANN. How rapidly has it grown? Mr. WARBURTON. I think it has doubled in the last 10 years.

Mr. MANN. From what did it increase, to what? Mr. WARBURTON. I think it was about 5,000 people in 1900 and about 10,000 in 1910.

Mr. MANN. Is that increase due to the number of office seekers who go to the capital of the State?

Mr. WARBURTON. Undoubtedly it is due to that in part, but it is a thriving city, growing rapidly. Manufactures are springing up there.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say whether the limit of cost included the site?

Mr. WARBURTON. The architect originally reported that the building would cost $130,000, but only $130,000 was appropriated for the building and the site. They had not selected their site, but when they did so they paid $30,000 for it, and I think the same ground to-day would cost perhaps $60,000.

Mr. MANN. Was that included in the $130,000?

Mr. WARBURTON. That was included in the $130,000. There was only $130,000 appropriated altogether, although it was estimated at the time that the building would cost $130,000.

Mr. MANN. The report from the department gives very little information on matters that we want to know about. It seems, however, that a contract for the building was let for $92,000

Mr. WARBURTON. Yes.
Mr. MANN. I wondered what had become of the rest of the $130,000; but if $30,000 was paid for the site, of course that explains it.

Mr. KENDALL. The site cost a third as much as the building, which was altogether out of proportion.

Mr. MANN. I should think $30,000 for a site in a city of 10,000 inhabitants was not at all unprofitable to those who sold the site.

Mr. WARBURTON. Well, I think if the Government should buy it to-day it would cost over $45,000.

Mr. KENDALL. The man who sold it lost no money.

Mr. WARBURTON. No; but he did not make any. It is about where it ought to be in the city and covers an entire block, I think an entire block.

Mr. FOSTER. May I inquire of the gentleman whether this building has been begun?

Mr. WARBURTON. The foundations only, I think. I saw it when it was just above ground.

Mr. FOSTER. I see they substituted certain sandstone for granite. Is that on the building outside?

Mr. WARBURTON. I do not know about that. able to say, but the increased amount is to make it fireproof; I know that.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I do not know that is so or not. Let us see. They substituted sandstone for a certain granite, and I do not know that either one of those is combustible.

Mr. WARBURTON. The building will be nothing more than a frame building unless the appropriation is granted. There is no question about that.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Washington does not mean to say this will be a frame building?

Mr. WARBURTON. It will be a frame and stone building; that is exactly what it will be. That is the way I under-

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the gentleman's information that this extra amount is for the purpose of making it fireproof?

Mr. WARBURTON. The sole purpose, I understand. Mr. FOSTER. That it will be a frame building, and this extra amount would make it fireproof?

Mr. WARBURTON. That is exactly what I understand; it is for the purpose of making it a fireproof building. They will have to use a good deal of wood unless they have the appropriation

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman says a frame building. $92,700 is seems to me would build a pretty good frame building; a pretty large one in Washington, I think, could be built

Mr. WARBURTON. No-

Mr. FOSTER. Now, the gentleman says they need this additional amount in order to make this fireproof.

Mr. WARBURTON. Oh, the outside is stone.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has not said so; he said frame building.

Mr. WARBURTON. I said a frame and stone building.

Mr. FOSTER. You mean frame inside; that the floors, etc., will be frame?

Mr. WARBURTON. I think that is the correct name of it. Mr. FOSTER. Let us see a little further. Now, it seems as though some explanation was needed. There is a certain kind of material that does not seem to be changed in order to get fireproof material. Can the gentleman point out in these extras where it is now combustible and they are going to make a fireproof structure out of this building?

Mr. WARBURTON. I only know what the architect tells me. Mr. FOSTER. I am going by what the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury states.

Mr. WARBURTON. This is the report of Mr. Bailey:

1.400

Mr. JAMES. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WARBURTON. The outside of the building, I will say, is granite, and they substituted sandstone because it is cheaper. Mr. FOSTER. The granite is cheaper?

Mr. WARBURTON. The sandstone is cheaper.

Mr. FOSTER. So that the-

Mr. WARBURTON. That is only a small part of the $30,000. Mr. FOSTER. The increase of $30,000 is to make it fireproof. Mr. WARBURTON. To make it fireproof, according to the original plan. Mr. KENDALL. The first estimate for the building was $130,000, and that amount was appropriated, and $30,000 was absorbed in the site, and now it is contemplated to increase the original appropriation $30,000 to make up that deficiency. Is that about it?

Mr. WARBURTON. That is exactly it.

Mr. FOSTER. There is remaining $92,700 for the buildings. and the difference between $130,000 and $92,700 has been paid for the site. Is that correct?

Mr. WARBURTON. That is correct.

Mr. KENDALL. You said it was, in round numbers, $30,000? Mr. FOSTER. Thirty-six thousand dollars. Mr. WARBURTON. My letter from Senator Poindexter says $30,000.

Mr. KENDALL. Does that include architect's fees? Of course, I concede this site is extortionate-

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform the House whether plans for this building have been made under the Tarsney Act? Mr. WARBURTON. I do not know.

Mr. KENDALL. I do not know what these payments in this case were. I am simply speculating—

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is simply supposing.

Mr. KENDALL. I am simply surmising, but the gentleman from Illinois ought to consider the fact this is a State capital in a growing State, and the necessities for a creditable public building there are very apparent.

Mr. FOSTER. I have seen some growing States where the State capital did not grow very much.

Mr. JAMES. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KENDALL. This is growing now quite rapidly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of his bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous conthis bill?

sent that the bill will be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I think as long as the gentlemen were engaged in the debate on the bill and shut off the regular order that we had better have the regular order now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 6283) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, with Mr. Cox of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Olympia, Wash., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $150,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington, so as to get this matter in my mind thoroughly, if this increased cost is entirely for the purpose of fireproof building?

Mr. WARBURTON. That is exactly what the architect tells me

Mr. FOSTER. And not for the purpose of putting on a lot of ornaments that some architect has thought ought to be put on in order to make the building look a little better in this enterprising city?

Mr. WARBURTON. I understand that it will be difficult, even with the appropriation, to complete it, but they think they can do so with $30,000.

Mr. FOSTER. And now you propose to increase the appropriation $30,000 for the building? Mr. WARBURTON. Yes. The original plan was $130,000 for the building. This would make it $160,000, all told.

Mr. FOSTER. If this $30,000 goes on the building?

Mr. WARBURTON. When we passed the bill we only had $130,000 for the building and grounds.

Mr. KENDALL. This makes the total investment $160,000. Mr. FOSTER. One hundred and sixty thousand dollars

Mr. WARBURTON. And the revenues last year were $32,000. Mr. FOSTER. Is there a court at Olympia, or just a post

Mr. WARBURTON. There is no United States court there now, but undoubtedly there will be in a short time.

Mr. FOSTER. Why does the gentleman say that? Mr. WARBURTON. We have a United States district court for the southern division, and at the present time it only holds court in one place. There is quite a demand for it to be held in two other places, and it ought to be, and I think there will be such a demand that it will be held at Aberdeen and Olympia.

Mr. KENDALL. The reason why they had not held it there was that there was no suitable room.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no provision for holding court there. Mr. WARBURTON. The Department of Justice can at any time, I think, compel it to be done.

Mr. JAMES. It is unusual for the Federal court not to be held in the capital. It ought to be held there.

Mr. WARBURTON. It ought to be, in order to save cost to litigants. We have the one court, holding terms in one city, and it could just as well held it in two other cities.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will give me a little information, I would appreciate it. I notice that in the report there is included a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, dated July 6 last, in which he states:

The contractor expressed his intention of beginning work on the 1st instant, and if it is desired to provide for fireproofing the entire building, it will be necessary to enact appropriate legislation at this session of Congress in order not to delay work on the construction, as it is necessary to install the fireproofing during the construction of the work, and it can not be placed afterwards.

Now, the gentleman from Washington tells us that the increased amount is for the purpose of fireproofing the building, and the Secretary of the Treasury informed us that there is no use to make that appropriation unless it was made at the last session of Congress. That session has long since expired and we have a new one. Did the Secretary of the Treasury only bluff when he said that, or was that a statement of fact which has been verified by subsequent events?

Mr. WARBURTON. It was a statement of fact. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Treasury, under an agreement with the contractor, stopped the work so that they could fireproof it if this appropriation passed.

Mr. MANN. The work has not progressed?

Mr. WARBURTON. Not since some time in August.

Mr. MANN. Then it was a pure bluff.

Mr. WARBURTON. I would not want to say that about the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. It was said that this appropriation should be made at that session, if made at all, because it could not be used if not made then. He said to Congress:

If it is desired to provide for fireproofing the entire building, it will be necessary to enact appropriate legislation at this session of Congress.

Mr. WARBURTON. He might have already stopped the work. Mr. MANN. Of course, everybody knows it would stop the work. The appropriation might be made 10 years hence.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to read for a moment? The gentleman did not read far enough.

Mr. MANN. I read the entire paragraph.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The Assistant Secretary wrote:

It will be necessary to enact appropriate legislation at this session of Congress in order not to delay work on the construction.

Mr. MANN. I read that to the end.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Not the last time.

Mr. MANN. But that does not change the meaning of it at all—"in order not to delay work on the construction." Now, they did delay work on the construction.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand from the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] that the failure to enact appropriate legislation at the last session has delayed the work of construction, because they need a fireproof building there, and it is perfect folly for this Congress to appropriate money to build a fire trap in any State capital in the Union.

Mr. MANN. That is begging the question. Nobody expects the department to build a fire trap. It is not necessary to have $130,000 to build a fireproof building. What are some of the items left out that they now want to put in to make it fire-They want to put bronze grills at the entrance in place of cast-iron grills. They want to substitute granite for sand-

Mr. KENDALL. What is the additional cost of those items? Mr. MANN. The latter item is $3,300. Then they want to put in sandstone entablature instead of ornamental terra cotta. That is $3,800.

Mr. WARBURTON. I think the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. They have cut out granite and substituted sandstone, as I understand it.

MANN. The contract was let for $92,700 on an alternative bid where they could make these substitutions, and under that contract they say that in order to complete the building within the original limit of cost they had to make substitution of grills of cast iron for bronze and sandstone for granite and terra cotta for sandstone in certain cases.

Mr. KENDALL. That effected a saving of those amounts. Mr. MANN. But they do not wish to save those amounts. They wish us to appropriate the money for the purpose. All that I rose and took the floor for was for the purpose of inquiring whether that "bluff" of the Secretary of the Treasury came probably from the activities of the gentleman from Washington, and whether it "went" or whether, as a matter of fact, not having secured the money they held up the building until another session of Congress.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the gentleman has just stated I will say this, that instead of doing that I advised him personally that we did not ask for the extra appropriation because we did not think we could get it through.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will then be agreeably surprised.

Mr. WARBURTON. I hope so.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, we have not had the bill read

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cox of Indiana). The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read, as follows:

An act (S. 6283) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash.

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost heretofore fixed for the erection of a public building at Olympia, Wash., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $150,000.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Cox of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 6283) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash., and had instructed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CLARK of Florida, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS-JOHN S. DRAPER.

Mr. Hull, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of John S. Draper, Fifty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted-To Mr. Green of Iowa, until the holiday recess, on account of important business.

To Mr. Akin of New York, indefinitely, on account of illness. To Mr. Brown, indefinitely, on account of illness.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT DUBLIN, GA.

ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, when the bill H. R. 17683, No. 348 on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, was reached to-day, it was passed without prejudice. I now ask unanimous consent to recur to this bill and for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17683) to increase the limit of cost for the post-office building heretofore authorized at Dublin, Ga. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman's request was to recur to the bill. Will he let us know something about it?

Mr. ASHBROOK. This morning, when the request was made to pass the bill without prejudice, I stated that I understood that the building was nearly completed and the money would not be needed.

I understand that. Mr. MANN.

Mr. ASHBROOK. I based that statement on a letter dated August 14, 1912, from the Supervising Architect, in which he stated that the building was then 92 per cent completed. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Brantley], who represents the district in which this building is located, was not present, and it was indirectly stated to me that he had said that unless the bill was passed at the last session the money could not be used. Since the bill was passed on the calendar this morning, however, the Supervising Architect has telephoned to a member of the Public Buildings Committee that, while the building was practically completed, a mere makeshift had been used, including a metal cornice, that should be stone, and that it was very urgent that the amount be appropriated in order that the building might be properly completed.

Mr. MANN. If the gentieman will pardon me, in order to save time I will state that I made this memorandum concerning the bill when it was placed on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent at the last session:

No report from the department on the bill at all; no statement of st or the limit of cost of the building; no information about the

I am speaking of the report-no reason given in the report why the betterment was not covered by the contract.

This was information which ought to have been contained in the report when submitted to the House.

Mr. ASHBROOK. It is quite likely that the report was not as complete as it should be, but it is a fact that the bid was so much in excess of the amount appropriated that numerous substitutes had to be made, which consisted principally in the sub-stituting of a metal cornice for a stone cornice. This report stituting of a metal cornice for a stone cornice. was made to the committee, which probably should have been included in our report to the House.

After the 4th of March next the district in which Dublin is situated will be represented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Hughes], who has personal knowledge of the situation there, and I will therefore yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have personal knowledge of the matters relating to this post-office building at Dublin, Ga.
Judge Brantley now represents that district, but after March 4 I shall have the honor of representing it.

Mr. MANN. We are all very glad to have the gentleman have the honor to represent any district.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I thank the gentleman. He is very kind. I wish to say that during Judge Brantley's absence I called him up over the phone, and he reported what has already been stated. I think the $8,000 additional appropriation ought to be granted, and to be candid, I think it should be really $16,000.

Mr. MANN. How much of a town is Dublin? I confess that there are little towns grown up in the country that I am not familiar with.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. If the gentleman from Illinois will come down to Dublin I undertake to say that I will show him one of the best towns that he ever had the pleasure of

And in the meantime, suppose the gentleman tells us something about it, for we can not know about all of these towns. The truth is, until this bill was introduced, I confess my ignorance of the fact that there was such a town as That is not to the discredit of Dublin, but I would like to hear about it from the sweet and smiling gentleman who has the floor

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Dublin, Ga., is located on the Oconee River. It is a town of importance, from the fact that there are five railroads there, and it also has water facilities and is growing in every particular.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What is the population?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. About eight thousand. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Ashbrook, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

YUMA INDIAN RESERVATION, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 4488, an act to authorize the setting aside of a tract of land for a school site and school farm on the Yuma Indian Reservation in the State of California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I see on page 1, line 6, of the bill that you have changed 320 acres to 80 acres. The report of the Acting Secretary of the Interior is in favor of 320 acres. Was there any evidence in addition to this report of the Secretary about that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We had before us Mr. Abbott, and also the irrigation engineer who belongs to the Indian service. They thought as this was very valuable land it would be better to give only one-half that amount for the school and let the rest of it go to the Indians, because the amount of irrigable land would be more valuable to the Indian individual than it would be for a farm of that kind, and they thought that 80 acres would be sufficient.

Mr. RAKER. Is not one of the great drawbacks to these Indian schools, which are for the purpose of providing for Indians so that they may get some knowledge, the fact that they have not land enough and that they are all the time seeking to get additional lands for the Indian schools? Does not the gentleman think that now while it is Government land it ought to be turned over to the school, so that they will have sufficient land to run the school in proper shape and teach them to conduct a farm and let them participate in it?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not. There is a school double the size in Phoenix, Ariz., and they have not, I think, exceeding 60 acres. I think 80 acres of as good land as that will be sufficient for them, owing to the value of the land and the facilities that they have there and the products of that farm and that country.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the school must be large enough to give the Indians plenty of opportunity to learn to become farmers on the school land, under the supervision of Indian teachers?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. From my experience in the west-ern country, 80 acres would be more than sufficient for the purpose of teaching the Indians how to properly cultivate their land. I will state that at the Salem school there are more Indians than at this school, and there they have about 300 acres and not more than 80 are in cultivation, and that school is 20 years old.

Mr. RAKER. How about the school at the Sherman Institute?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Sherman Institute school has some 60 acres.

Mr. RAKER. I was there the other day myself. Is it not one of the complaints of these schools that they have not sufficient land to give the Indians an opportunity to learn how to become farmers, and that that is what they are seeking to do? The superintendent of the Sherman Institute told me that they wanted more land in the fertile valley in order that they might teach the Indians how to become farmers.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are not now cultivating the amount of land that they already have.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman has no objection to letting it go through at 320 acres, has he?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I stand on the committee report. This is a report offered by the committee after a full hearing upon this matter.

Mr. RAKER. The hearings were not printed, were they?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have them right here in print.

Mr BAKER I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I now move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering this bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 4488, with Mr. Houston in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set aside for the Indian school and as a farm on the Yuma Indian Reservation, in the State of California, not exceeding 320 acres of irrigable land, in addition to the tract of land, including the buildings, situate on the hill on the north side of the Colorado River, formerly Fort Yuma, now used as an Indian school.

Sec. 2. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the committee of the House recommended striking out 320 acres and inserting 80 acres. course, this is irrigable land, but the purpose of this bill is to authorize the setting aside of a certain amount for an Indian school and as a farm. I take it the purpose is to have the Indian school and farm connected with the school and have the pupils of the Indian school study practical farming. Well, you can not do very much on 80 acres, even if it be irrigable land. The department which recommended this recommended 320 acres, and the land will still remain the Indian land, and I doubt whether it can be used for any other purpose as profitably as to teach the young Indians how to farm on that land. It seems to me that the committee amendment ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to state this? At first there were 5 acres allotted to each Indian. We increased that two years ago to 10 acres to each Indian, and that leaves a very small amount, and there are some Indians unprovided for, and if we take 320 acres it will not leave enough to give the Indians 10 acres of good land, which the law now provides.

Mr. MANN. I do not find that information in the report of the Secretary on this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will remember two years ago we enlarged the amount to these Indians from 5 to 10 acres. That restricts the amount that can be irrigated. They have a large amount of land up on the mesa, but you can not reach it with water; but there is a certain amount of land which you can place under the ditches that will be valuable for farming purposes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit an interruption, I will say when the bill was considered in the committee the committee was not satisfied that there should be as large a tract reserved for a farm on those two reservations as 320 acres. That is a very large amount of land as an irrigated farm, and we concluded we would make the amount 80 acres, and the bill could go to con-The conferees would have an opportunity to go into ference. the matter fully, and they could agree upon the maximum amount of acreage, or some amount between the two, that would perhaps be nearer right than either 320 or 80 acres. gentleman will observe this takes in another reservation, the Colorado Reservation, in Arizona.

Mr. MANN. The committee amendment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The committee amendment; and the feeling was unanimous, I may say, in the committee that so far as the information we had at hand goes 80 acres was sufficient. Now, I do not think that the committee is particularly insistent about its amendment, but you must recall that this is not Indian land any longer. The law provided that all unallotted land should be disposed of under the reclamation law, and if we create a farm of 320 acres we take that much acreage out of the reclamation area which is to be reclaimed at the expense of the United States, and we ought not to do it unless we need it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how much information the committee had before it when they reduced this amount from 320 to 80 acres, but the original bill upon this subject provided for taking 320 acres at one place. The land which is described in the bill now is land which was suggested by the Interior Department and is not the land which was included in the original Senate bill as it was introduced. department recommended that these 320 acres be set aside for the purpose in the main of a school farm.

Now, certainly, there is a very wide divergence between 320 acres for a school farm and 80 acres. It does not seem to me that it requires any very extensive knowledge of farming to know that. A very small school would do the work for an 80-acre farm.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman know how many Indians there are on the reservation, or does anyone else know? Mr. MANN. I do not know.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That might throw some light on the subject as to the amount of land that is required.

Mr. HAYDEN. I can furnish the gentleman that information There are four or five hundred Indians on the approximately. Colorado River Reservation, and about 800 on the Yuma Reservation.

Mr. MANN. That means a good number of children.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does that mean the total population?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] tell us what constitutes an irrigated farm in that locality as a rule?

Mr. HAYDEN. The allotment to each Indian is 10 acres. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is there any other land under irrigation?

Mr. HAYDEN. On the Yuma Reservation, near the town site of Bard and not far from the Fort Yuma Indian School, the farm unit is 10 acres, and a little farther from the town the farm unit is 20 acres of land. This land has been sold to white

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The reclamation project contemplates that the land shall be disposed of to settlers in 10 and 20 acre units?

Mr. HAYDEN. On the Yuma Reservation; yes, sir.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That quantity of land is supposed to be sufficient for a man and his family in order to Mr. HAYDEN. That is the theory of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. MANN. Now, as I understand, the Yuma Reservation has a larger number of Indians than the Colorado River Reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Yet the Secretary of the Interior only last May

Mr. MANN. Yet the Secretary of the Interior only last May recommended that on the Colorado River Reservation, which has the smallest number of Indians, there be set aside 320 acres of irrigable land for school and farm purposes. He says:

It is recommended, therefore, that the bill be amended by inserting a

"Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set aside for school, agency, and demonstration farm purposes not to exceed 320 acres of irrigable or nonirrigable land in the Colorado Indian Reservation, Ariz."

Now, we are proposing to expend millions of dollars a year in teaching practical farm demonstration to the white people of the country. While we have this Indian land under our control I can see no other purpose for which it can be so usefully utilized as teaching the Indian children how to really farm.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Indian Office for some time was advocating a large appropriation for the purpose of establishing what are known as "demonstration farms," right in line with the policy to engage in a number of other things that are already provided for under some other bureau or department of the Government, and the policy of the Indian Committee has been to not appropriate or recommend appropriations for demonstration farms inasmuch as under the Agricultural Department we have certain experimental stations and experimental farms. This amendment which the gentleman just read includes demonstration farms, so that whoever prepared it had in mind that we are going to have a demonstration farm out there.

Mr. MANN. That is what any farm is where a school is located. It is a demonstration farm. That is the purpose of having a farm put in connection with a school. Now, I have on several occasions in this body opposed some of the appropriations for teaching the Indians farming, because I could not see at that time a very good excuse for taking out of the Federal Treasury money for teaching a certain class of people particular information not to be given to the rest.

But here is a proposition where we have the right to reserve title to some of the lands for Indian instruction in farming. I can imagine nothing that will do them more good than keeping this land for them and teaching them how to farm.

The proposition involves 220 acres. I suppose it is not very valuable land at best. If we dispose of it and do not reserve it, it will be only a little while until we are asked to buy it back out of the General Treasury. The gentleman has a bill pending now to set aside. I think, several hundred thousand dollars for a purpose like this. I believe that while we have the Indian property which can be diverted to their use without injury to them we had better divert some of it to their use without attempting to pay it all out of the General Treasury.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment for a suggestion along this

Mr. MANN. I yield the floor to the gentleman. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in regard to this matter, it seems to me now is the opportune time to give a sufficient amount of land to make a farm for the purpose of having each Indian in the school learn how to farm. By a personal examination of the Indian schools I may say I have seen them, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and have just left recently the Sherman Institute, in southern California; and one of their needs to-day is from 60 to 80 acres of land for the purpose of working; not only demonstrating the process of working, but to take out each Indian and give him a tract of land that he may learn as a boy how to work it and how to handle it, so that when he becomes of age and leaves the school he can go out and cultivate his own allotment.

In this particular case here is land already in the control and under the supervision of the Government. They are asking to turn over 320 acres to the Indian Department for the purpose of conducting not only an Indian school, but an Indian farm, where there are many Indians who ought to receive the benefit of the white man's knowledge as to how to conduct a farm. If it is turned over later in 10-acre tracts, he has to go to the white man and learn how to handle it. It can do him no damage or injury.

The statement is made that there will not be enough land to go round in 10-acre tracts, or in 5-acre tracts. But here you reserve a large piece of land for school and farming purposes. I am making the statement now from a personal inspection of the Indian schools. In some places it means to have .. sufficient tract of land upon which they can raise their own grain. The Indians are instructed under the supervision of the teachers of the schools. I appreciate what it means at this time to teach young Indians how to raise hay and how to take care of their crops.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understand, the number of Indians on this reservation is not over 600. If all the children on that reservation were in one school, how many children would there be?

Mr. RAKER. That is a mathematical question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is a simple matter.

Mr. RAKER. I am not any more versed in figures than the gentleman is.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It would be a small school, would it not?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; it would be a small school.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If 10 acres is considered sufficient for a family to live on, does not the gentleman think that four times or eight times as much would be sufficient to do just the thing he is taking about—to meet the necessities so far as the school is concerned, which at best would not contain more than 60 or 80 pupils?

Mr. RAKER. I know; but this idea of 5 or 6 acres of land being sufficient to maintain a man and his family is a good deal imaginary, except the land be under the highest state of culti-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that that is the provision of law regarding those lands under which these reservations are being disposed of. The gentleman from Oklahoma tells me that it is 10 acres within a certain range and 20 acres outside of that.

Mr. RAKER. I understand that the unit is 10 acres, and sometimes 20 acres. But this is a farm to be handled by the school, not only in the demonstration work but to go out and actually farm under the supervision of the teachers of the school. It is one of the things that this country is trying to do with its citizens. It is what we are trying to do all over the land—to purchase land upon which we can educate our boys in agriculture-and it ought to be done. But there is no opportunity and no place for it in many of the cities. There is no me to give him the information he asks for?

land available for demonstrating by actual work the processes by which they may become farmers and go out in the country and become producers of this Nation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Exactly; but does not the gentleman believe 80 acres would be quite sufficient for either one of these schools to do everything that he proposes?

Mr. RAKER. No; honestly I do not.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman will observe that in the amendment transmitted by the Secretary, which is section 2 of the bill, he uses the word "demonstrated," evidently showing that the department had in mind a demonstration farm, and the committee cut that out. A demonstration farm, in the mind of the party in the Indian Office who made this recommendation, would be an extensive farm, ostensibly for the general welfare of all the Indians in the country, and it would be contemplated undoubtedly to expend very large sums of money upon this demonstration, whereas I do not suppose that outside of the Indians on that reservation there would ever be any other Indian who would see it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that you have demonstration farms all over California and in this vicinity? One of these bands of Indians is on one side of the Colorado River in Arizona and the other is on the other side in California. Now, is it not a fact that you have demonstration farms in this valley, and near this place, kept up by the United States Government, so that all the Indians would have to do would be to go to the Government farm a few miles away, and possibly in the same township, in order to see what is being done by the funds of the United States? If we enter into this project will we not be duplicating? If we give them 320 acres to start an experimental farm, will we not be duplicating exactly what we are doing now for the white people? Why should we discriminate? Why should we have two farms, one for the whites and one for the Indians, with a duplication of the expense of the farmers and all the paraphernalia that goes with these experimental farms? What is the necessity for it?

Mr. RAKER. To make myself plain, so that the gentleman may understand it, it is not a question of taking one of these Indian boys out and driving him up and down the lawn, walking him over the grass and telling him, "This is what we have done; now you go and do likewise." The idea is that the boys are in the school. They are old enough to take tracts of land of 2 or 3 or 4 acres while they are at school and actually farm the land under the direction of the superintendent. Twenty or forty boys can each of them be running tracts of from 1 acre to 5 acres on that farm, and by actual personal experience attain some benefit. That is the opportunity they ought to have, in affairs of that kind, so that they can obtain results.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from California yield to allow me to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee?

Mr. RAKER. I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman from Texas tell how many children are attending this school for which this farm is to be provided?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are 200 in one place, and I suppose there would be about 10 children to each 100. I suppose there would be 12 children in the small reservations, and there would not be more than 50 or 60 in the others.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that there are only from 10 to 15 Indian children attending these schools?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not know, because they have been sent to various boarding schools. They are under the control and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Indian Bureau can farm them out wherever they please.

Mr. MONDELL. But, as I understand it, this is a farm in connection with a specific school. How many children are there?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have schools on the reservations. I do not know the extent, because I have not been on every one of them. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] has been on them.

Mr. MONDELL. The area necessary for a school farm depends entirely upon the number of children employed or attending the school, if it is intended to be used as a farm on which the Indian boys are to be taught agriculture. There are only 10 Indian boys in one of these schools. A farm of 80 acres might be large enough to afford 10 boys an opportunity to mow and reap and plant and cultivate. But if there are 100 or 200 boys, then a larger farm would be necessary to give the boys employment and an opportunity to learn the methods of agriculture

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit

Mr. MONDELL. I only have the floor through sufferance of the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota to ask a question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not to ask a question, but to answer the question that the gentleman from Wyoming asked a while ago as to the number at the two schools. attendance at Yuma for the last fiscal year was 115 and at the

Mr. MADDEN. Making 186 in all. Mr. RAKER. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the land is there now and in control of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. It will be there anyway, will it not?

Mr. RAKER. Not under the same title. It will go to other individuals and the title will be conveyed. The title is now in the Government, and we can reserve that amount of land, and if it becomes necessary later to eliminate some of it it can be done. Practically all the schools in my part of the State are clamoring for more land for the purpose of giving the Indians that attend these schools some information in the line of what was the intent and purpose of the Government, to teach them how to become agriculturists.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from California yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I have in my hand the hearings on the Indian appropriation bill. On page 141 of those hearings is information in regard to the Shoshone Indians in my State. That school has an attendance of 173. The area of the farm is 1,200 acres. The land is all irrigable and all irrigated and is all farming land, and produced, above the cost and above the value of the products used in the school, products to the amount of over $9,000 last year.

I do not pretend to be very well informed as to the area necessary in this particular case, but I will say that a 1,200acre farm is not found too large for the purposes of a school with 173 pupils. The practice is to employ these boys on the farm during the vacation, and also to give them practical in-struction on the farm during the school period. They work on the farm half a day, the forenoon of one week, and in the afternoon of the next week, and the farm is not found any too large for the purpose of instruction in agriculture on that reservation.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in that connection that I visited an Indian school at one place in my district. The superintendent said: "RAKER, isn't there some way, somehow, that this Government can provide a farm in connection with this school to the end that we may teach these boys how to become farmers; that we may have some cows around this institution; that we may have an orchard growing here so that we can teach them how to become horticulturists; that we may have some land where we might put in potatoes, and instead of the boys being idle in the summer time, running over the country, wasting their time, and the girls as well, they may be employed on the farm? We can not employ them now, because we have no land. There is no land attached to a number of these schools for the purpose of agriculture."

You are telling these people all the time that you are going to try to educate them and improve them, and there never was a better time than in the case of this kind, where the land is now in the hands of the Government, to equip this school, where these boys and these girls can have an education and learn how to do all the things necessary on a farm.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RAKER. I will yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman if he has any experimental farms in his State?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; the finest on earth.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How many boys and girls in the nearest one to the gentleman's home?

Mr. RAKER. Well, it is quite a little ways from my home.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How far?

Mr. RAKER. About 400 miles.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is not very far in California. How many acres of land does that agricultural school have?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know the number now, but I will insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is not certain about that?

Mr. RAKER. I can not give the exact number.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Well, that is 21 acres each.

Now you propose to give more to these Indians?

Mr. RAKER. It is their land, and the object is not to reservation affect the title so it can be taken from them. It is better to purposes?

hold it while you have it and dispose of it later by allotment, if it becomes necessary. These people are appealing to this Congress and will appeal before adjournment that you appro-These people are appealing to this priate money for the purpose of buying land that they might have a farm in connection with the school, and why should we now, with the right given to the Congress, with the land in our control, and when the Government says they ought to have this amount of land-why should we turn around now and cast it aside and give it up and let it be put to some other purpose when we can retain the title and make it an Indian school and an Indian farm, not only as a matter of name but in fact. And if it becomes necessary later to eliminate some of this land because it may not be necessary, why, it is easy to do it, and the title then will go to these allottees who are entitled to it. I could not with consistency permit the reduction of the acreage knowing, as I do, the conditions in the northern part of the State as well as at the Sherman Institute, with its magnificent buildings and grounds, roads, concrete sidewalks, and boulevard that is not excelled in the United States. The superintendent said to me that one of the reasons and one of the objections to the proper education of these boys and girls is that they have not sufficient ground and they ought to have another 80-acre tract, to the end that it might be conducted as a farm instead of sending these boys and girls out over the country to receive no benefits during the summer but acquiring bad habits and bad conditions. You have a large appropriation bill for the Indians. Let us go right at it in a proper way and put them on the farm; let them learn to be farmers in deed and not in thought or on paper. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will not detain the committee but to make an observation or two in regard to this bill. The condition with these two reservations is that the Indians have been or are being allotted irrigable lands so that each Indian will receive ultimately his own irrigated Now, it was proposed when that legislation was enacted for the irrigating of these Indian lands that the surplus irrigable lands could be sold for sufficient to recoup to the Treasury the cost of the work of reclamation. Now, the gentleman wants to take 640 acres of this irrigable land and set it aside ostensibly because it is necessary in connection with this Indian school, but after they have improved this land and after Congress has spent thousands and thousands of dollars perhaps in buildings up there and an experimental farm, then our friends from California and Arizona will come in here with a bill that the school is no longer needed as an Indian school and a proposition to donate it to their respective States; and I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee in reporting this bill took into consideration what they believed was required for the needs of the various respective schools, and the committee thought that 80 acres was sufficient, and the committee, I think, still thinks so.
Therefore I hope the amendment of the committee will prevail, and I will say to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and other gentlemen who are apprehensive perhaps that 80 acres is not sufficient that the bill after it passes the House in the form in which it is reported will go to conference, where there will be an opportunity to increase the amount from 80 acres up to some point not exceeding 320 acres. So I say, in view of all the circumstances, the amendment proposed by the committee ought to be accepted and adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read.

The following committee amendment was read:

Amend, in line 6, by striking out the words "three hundred and twenty" and inserting implies thereof "eighty."

The question was taken, and the chairman announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MANN and Mr. RAKER) there were-ayes 13, noes 8.

So the amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment.

Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to set aside for school, agency, and farm purposes not to exceed 80 acres of irrigable land in the Colorado River Indian Reservation, in the State of Arizona: Provided, That the withdrawal authorized hereby may include not to exceed 5 acres each for the use of duly recognized religious organizations now engaged in mission work on said reservation."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. The amendment is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona whether he is satisfied that 80 acres of irrigable land at this reservation will be sufficient for the school, agency, and farm Mr. HAYDEN. Personally I would like to provide for a little more land, but the committee had an idea the matter would be taken care of in conference.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, we do not pass bills upon the idea, when we insert something in the House, that the work is to be done somewhere else. If the gentleman does not know what he wants and expects to leave it to some other body to determine, then I shall try to get it out on a point of order.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill is a department measure; it is not my bill.

The gentleman is mistaken about it being a Mr. MANN. department bill. This provision is not what the department recommended. I do not think the gentleman or the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to recommend an amendment with a view of having the real question settled by another body. Have we not sense enough to have our own idea upon this subject? Is the gentleman satisfied with 80 acres of land for his reservation?

Mr. HAYDEN. I think that strictly for farm purposes it might be enough. The letter of the Secretary of the Interior mentions certain land for school and agency purposes, so that more than 80 acres might possibly be required.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman made the report in which he recommended the adoption of an amendment to give 80 acres of irrigable land in this reservation for school and farm purposes where they ask for 320. If the gentleman is satisfied with 80 acres, I am satisfied. If he is not, then let him say what is needed.

Mr. HAYDEN. I shall be satisfied if the bill passes as recommended by the committee.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I make the point of order against the amendment. My point of order is that this bill is to set aside a tract of land for school-site and school-farm purposes on the Yuma Indian Reservation in the State of California, a particular proposition. This is an amendment to set aside for school, agency, and farm purposes a tract of land on an entirely different reservation, with no relation to the first; and it is a familiar principle of parliamentary law, as practiced in the House of Representatives, that a bill relating to one special subject can not be amended by introducing another spe-

Mr. KENDALL. Why not amend the title of the bill?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Why can not we amend the title of the bill and agree with you on some amount so that we can amend the bill in conference and get it through?

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] does not know what he wants.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is a member of the committee, and when he accedes to a report of the committee he will not go back on it. Would the gentleman do that him-

Mr. MANN. Oh, if I had made a report— Mr. STEPHENS of Texas (continuing). If he had joined in report?

Mr. MANN (continuing). I think I would tell you what I thought. But I am not asking the gentleman to do anything out of the way, but quite the contrary. I have no criticism of the gentleman for standing by the report. If the committee made a report with the intention of letting the Senate fix the amount instead of taking the responsibility themselves, I do not agree to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman agree to permit us to amend the title and to strike out "eighty" and put in "one hundred and sixty" acres, if agreeable to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke]? We are being held up on this matter. We had better take what we can get.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will state, so far as the title is concerned, that I had prepared an amendment.

Mr. MANN. That does not go to the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to say to the gentleman that the committee's action in fixing the amount of 80 acres was on the theory that 80 acres was sufficient for a farm, and section 1 only provides for the farm. Section 2 includes language to set aside for "school, agency, and farm purposes."

There was absolutely no information that any land was required there for anything but a farm. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Haypen] says that he believes that 80 acres is sufficient for a farm, but if land is necessary for agency purposes perhaps more land would be required, and he thinks in view of the possibility of the land being needed for agency purposes, the acreage perhaps ought to have been 160 acres. Mr. MANN. I think the distinguished gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] has handled himself very well. He has stated what his position is in reference to this. I make the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not do nat. We would rather give the 160 acres than let the matter go over in this way, because then we will have to introduce a bill and go over the same thing again.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can introduce a bill and get a report from the department on the subject.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand, and it has always been my own impression that Congress is the judge of its own actions, and we do not have to look to the executive departments of this Government to ascertain what we should do.
Otherwise we should disband Congress.
Mr. MANN. If the House of Representatives fixes an amount with the idea of having it really fixed by the Senate afterwards, we had better disband here, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman from Illinois understand that every bill is made possible of enactment by agreement between the House and Senate? Is not the gentleman aware of that fact?

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman is asking for information on that subject.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am.
Mr. MANN. Very likely; and I could probably acquire a Mr. MANN. great deal of information from my distinguished friend in relation to the handling of bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of parliamentary law, to the effect that you can not amend one distinct proposition by another, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What becomes of section 2? Mr. MANN. That is a separate committee amendment that has not been acted upon.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I thought that was what we were acting upon at this present moment. The amendment of the committee was to strike out section 2 and substitute in its place what has been read.

Mr. MANN. That is true; and that amendment has been ruled out on a point of order. The gentleman can move to strike out section 2 if he desires.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is the object of my parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that section 2 is now in the bill, after the Chair has ruled that the amendment is not in order? As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, a point of order made against section 2 of the bill, providing that all acts and parts of acts in conflict are hereby repealed, has been sustained?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made to the nendment offered. The amendment offered was to strike amendment offered. out those lines and insert the amendment proposed by the committee. The point of order was against that amendment to strike out, and the Chair sustains it. That leaves the section as it was before.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then I move to strike out section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] moves to strike out section 2. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. A division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were-ayes 11, noes 0.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended, with a favorable recommendation, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Houston, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 4488) to authorize the setting aside of a tract of land for a school site and school farm on the Yuma Indian Reservation, in the State of California, and had instructed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HAYDEN. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 9.

So the amendments were agreed to,

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Stephens of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WATER IN THE DESERT PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a request that the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12826) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is an old bill. It was introduced a year and a half ago. What is the reason for the proposed change of reference at this time?

The SPEAKER. This change of reference was suggested by the chairman of the committee to which the bill was referred, and by the gentleman from California [Mr. Stephens].

Mr. MANN. It may have been his bill. Mr. STEPHENS of California. It was my bill, and during the last session I tried to have a hearing upon the bill, but did not succeed, because the committee were busy with some other

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is a very good reason. Mr. STEPHENS of California. When I waited upon the committee at this session the chairman of it said he believed the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands. Therefore the request is made.

Mr. MANN. Of course, everybody knows that the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands have not been nearly as busy as the Committee on the Public Lands, so the reason that the gentleman has given-that the committee which has the bill is too busy and that the other committee is not-is hardly a sufficient reason.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I did not make the request in that way

Mr. MANN. I think the matter is of sufficient importance to lie over, so that we may have a chance to look at the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may make his request later, when we have had a chance to look at the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS FOR SCHOOL SECTIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25738) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the right to object, or I will object at once, just as the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] desires. I wish to accommodate the gentleman. I will object at once, although I am willing to hear what he

Mr. RAKER. I would not prefer that the gentleman object

Mr. MANN. I am willing to hear the gentleman's statement as to how this bill is differentiated from the bill to which I did object once or twice.

Mr. RAKER. There is considerable difference.

Mr. MANN. If the House will bear with us, I am willing to hear how this bill is differentiated from the other bills.

Mr. RAKER. I am satisfied that the Members of the House will hear us for a few moments, anyhow, because gentlemen are always courteous.

I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that since the introduction of this bill and its favorable report by the Committee on the Public Lands, the Senate and the House have passed in the appropriation act an appropriation of $28,000 for the purpose of inspecting these listed lands. Since this appropriation there have been about 16 high-class, competent men in the field making an examination of the lands that were thus listed by the State for the purpose of exchange, and it is practically all completed with the exception of a general going over of the same in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. expect that to be completed in a short time. When that is done, the provisions of this bill will give the Secretary of the Interior the power to make the exchanges and to approve the selections, provided that under the examination that has been made in the field by Government experts within the last six months the land is shown to be nonmineral in character.

Mr. MADDEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. RAKER. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says the investigation is now being made, but that it is not complete?

Mr. RAKER, Yes, Mr. MADDEN, Do Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to let this legislation go over until the investigation is complete?

Mr. RAKER. No; and for this reason. Well, this is important legislation. Does not the gentleman think this ought to be passed under some rule by which it could be given some consideration and not by unanimous consent?

Mr. RAKER. Let me say to the gentleman that the people in California who are interested have not raised their voices, but are in favor of it.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not make the claim that the people of California have made objections, but I think that the legislation is of such far-reaching importance that it ought not to be considered under the Unanimous Consent Calendar. It ought to be considered at a time when every phase of the legislation can be properly looked into, and I feel constrained to object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. If my colleague will pardon me, the gentleman from California [Mr. Knowland], I think, is interested in this bill, and he is detained at home on account of illness. I think it would be as well to let it go over.

Mr. MADDEN. I am perfectly willing to let it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this bill being passed over without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears JUDICIARY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23186) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 28 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 28. That any sult of a civil nature, at law or in equity, arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treatles made or which shall be made under their authority, of which the district courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by this title which may now be pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the district court of the United States for the proper district. Any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the district court may be removed into the district court of the United States are given jurisdiction by this title, and which are now pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court may be removed into the district court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein being non-residents of that State. And when, in any suit mentioned in this section, there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said sult into the district court of the United States for the proper district. And where a suit is now pending or may hereafter be brought in any State court in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is now pending or may hereafter be brought in any State court to the United States for the proper district, at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be made to appear to said district court of the United States for the proper district, at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be remade to appear to said district court that, f

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether there is anything in this bill not in the existing law except the last proviso?

Mr. GARRETT. I was just about to say that that is all there is in the bill. All the new legislation is in the last proviso, beginning in line 9, page 4, which reads:

Provided further, That no suit against a corporation or joint-stock company, brought in a State court of the State in which the cause of action arose, shall be removed to any court of the United States on the ground that the parties are citizens of different States if the suit is brought in the county where the cause of action arose or within the county where the defendant is served with process and the plaintiff resides.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a controversy existed as to where the cause of action arose, would that be for the Federal court to Mr. GARRETT. I should think that that was a question of fact for the Federal court to determine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Garrett, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

IMMIGRATION SERVICE

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 21220, a bill to extend the power of the Commissioner General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the power of establishing rules and regulations for protecting the United States and allens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, conferred upon the Commissioner General of Immigration, subject to the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, by section 22 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907, shall be, and the same is hereby, extended to the supervision of the transportation of alien immigrants to their respective places of destination in the interior of the United States, and of their safe conduct upon arrival at such places, and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may establish stations for the purpose of such supervision within the limits of the amount that may be appropriated for that purpose and subject to the terms and conditions of the act making such appropriations.

Sec. 2. That for the establishment and maintenance of such a station in the city of Chicago for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, there is hereby appropriated, from moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000, which shall be expended in such manner consistent with the purposes hereof as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may direct.

Sec. 3. That for succeeding years estimates of the appropriations necessary for the service hereby established shall be included in the estimates for the Immigration Service annually submitted to Congress.

The SPEAKER. There is no chance to object; that question has been passed, and also the request to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I dare say that the gentleman from Texas desires information as to the bill, and I shall be pleased to give it to him as soon as the amendments have been reported.

The Clerk reported the committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 12, to the word "alien" affix the letter "s" and strike out the word "immigrants" next preceding.

Page 2, line 5, insert the following proviso after the sentence ending with the word "appropriations": "Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the Commissioner General of Immigration to pay the cost of transportation of any arriving alien."

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "appropriated" and in lieu thereof insert the word "authorized."

The committee amendments were agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the engressment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Sabath, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order now to ask my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to explain the bill?

The SPEAKER. That stage of the proceeding has passed. Mr. MANN. Then it seems to me it would be a good thing to quit; it is 5 o'clock. The SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. MANN. Unless some gentleman on that side desires to adjourn the House, I shall desire to have a quorum here.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think

Chicago is a good stopping place?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, not wishing to detain the House, I am going to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, so that the gentleman can read what I have to say about the bill in to-morrow's RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] asks leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. On what subject?

Mr. MADDEN. On this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. . The House has passed much important legislation to-day, but no bill considered at this session is as far reaching in importance as the bill now under consideration, which extends the power of the Commissioner General of Immigration to the supervision of the transportation of aliens to their respective places of destination in the interior of the United States, and of their safe conduct upon arrival at such places, and authorizing the establishment of stations for the purpose of such supervision.

The section of the bill authorizing the establishment and maintenance of such a station in Chicago, and authorizing the appropriation of $75,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for such appropriations as may in future years be recom-mended in the estimates to Congress for the Immigration Service is a step in the right direction. Chicago is the distributing point for the Central West and the Northwest and Southwest. A large percentage of the immigrants arriving in this country come to and pass through Chicago. Up to the present time they have had no adequate protection. The supervision of immigrants between the ports of entry and their final destination has been in the hands of the railroad companies. Many abuses creep into the supervision now in vogue. It can not be otherwise under the existing system. Extortion is frequently practiced against the immigrant passing through a strange land, speaking a strang tongue. Women and young girls are often taken advantage of by unscrupulous people whose business it is to traffic in their virtue. Before they become aware of what has befallen them they have been led into lives of shame from which they are freed only by death. At present and for some years past a number of patriotic citizens in Chicago have contributed of their time and means in an effort to protect aliens coming to our city, but the work of this voluntary organization has been far from adequate to meet the needs of the case. enactment of this legislation will enable the Federal authorities to perform a most important work—a work the value of which can not be measured in dollars. It will save those who come to our shores from many unpleasant experiences, give them a feeling of security in their movements from the ports of entry to the point of final destination, will enable them in many cases not now possible to locate their friends; it will, in fact, be a blessing to every alien, and with the strong arm of the Government as their friend and protector many innocent women and young girls will be spared from what is worse than a living death. The House is to be congratulated for giving considera-tion to this salutary measure, and on behalf of the good people of the country who in the past have devoted themselves to the care and protection of incoming aliens and particularly on behalf of those who have done and are doing that patriotic service in Chicago I wish to thank the Members.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, so it can be considered to-morrow, if it is germane, two amendments to the Burnett immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California RAKER] asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD two amendments to the Burnett immigration bill.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object—Mr. RAKER. Oh, well, the Dillingham bill.

Mr. MANN (continuing). I desire to say the gentleman printed in the Record of yesterday morning a very long amendment which I dare say nobody in the House will read.

Mr. RAKER. Neither of these I now desire to put in are over about five lines apiece.

Mr. MANN. I say, the gentleman yesterday morning printed in the Record a very long amendment which I dare say nobody will read. I merely wish to inquire whether these amendments are to be a few lines or a few volumes long.

I would like to inform the gentleman from Mr. RAKER. Illinois one of these amendments is only about five lines long and the other about six lines, and I am sorry to state-I will withdraw that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can state anything he pleases, but I have very little respect for the man who does much work who will read anything printed in the Record in small type.

Mr. RAKER. Well, I can not get it in in any larger type.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California to print these amendments in the Record? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments are as follows:

Amend Senate bill 3175, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," as follows:

"1. By inserting, on line 14, page 58, after the semicolon and before the word 'All,' the following: 'All aliens, native of any part of Asia, or the islands adjacent to Asia, or in Asiatic seas, and the descendants of such natives, who can not read and write in some European language, including Hebrew or Yiddish'; to be followed with a semicolon, and change the capital 'A' to a small 'a' in the word 'all,' in line 14, same page.

and change the capital 'A' to a small 'a' in the word 'all,' in line 14, same page.

"2. In section 2, line 10, page 59, add between the words 'dialect' and 'no,' the following paragraph: 'Provided, That for the purpose of ascertaining whether the aliens, native of any part of Asla, or the islands adjacent to Asla, or in Asiatic seas, and the descendants of such natives, can read and write in any European language, including Hebrew or Yiddish, the immigration inspectors shall be furnished with copies of uniform slips, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plain type, in some European language or in Hebrew or Yiddish, and each such alien shall be required to read and write the words printed on such slip.'"

INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 756 (H. Rept. 1274).

House resolution 756 (H. Rept. 1274).

Authorizing the Committee on the District of Columbia to conduct an investigation of the affairs of the office of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia and of certain fire insurance companies doing business in the District of Columbia.

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives, or any subcommittee thereof which the chairman of said committee may appoint, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the conduct, management, history, records, and affairs of the Commercial Fire Insurance Co. of Washington, D. C., and of the First National Fire Insurance Co. of the United States, Washington, D. C., both doing business in the District of Columbia, and of the office of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia, and of Tutile, Wightman & Dudley (Inc.), doing business in the District of Columbia, together with those of their associates, representatives, and agents, and to examine the books, papers, accounts, and affairs of the aforesaid companies and of the superintendent of insurance of the District of Columbia; to appraise the property, real and personal, belonging to said corporations, or either of them. Said committee, or such subcommittee thereof as may be selected, is authorized to sit during the sessions of the House and during any recess of Congress. Its hearings shall be open to the public, and it is authorized and empowered to employ counsel, expert accountants, appraisers, and such other clerical, stenographic, and expert assistance as it may deem necessary; also to compel witnesses to attend and testify, and to send for such persons and papers and to administer oaths to witnesses as the committee may deem best. The expense incident to the investigation herein authorized shall not exceed $10,000, and shall be paid out of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about it or anybody connected with any of these corporations. But why not just enlarge it so as to investigate everything in the District of Columbia and pay for it from the contingent fund?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think I can satisfy the gentleman in just a few words as to this resolution. The resolution was prepared and introduced by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Committee on Rules heard the chairman of that committee and two of the members of the committee, and also heard the attorney of the insurance companies designated in the resolution. The two insurance companies are also desirous of having a speedy investigation ing subject to a mortgage of something less than a million and just as provided for in the resolution. There is no opposition to the investigation from any source. The Committee on Rules was convinced that the best thing to do would be to bring in the resolution providing for a prompt investigation.

Mr. MANN. There are very serious charges here in reference to the matter, and they ought to be investigated.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And the sooner the better. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will be glad to do so. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. In listening to the reading of the resolution I think it provides for the employment of counsel. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is customary in reporting these resolutions of investigation to authorize committees to employ counsel, and, furthermore, is there necessity for it in this case?
Mr. HENRY of Texas.

It is customary. what the intentions of the committee are in that regard, whether they wish to employ counsel or not, but we thought it better to give them that privilege. It is a very important matter, and justice to both sides demands that prompt action be taken,

I think, in these cases.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that here are two corporations created by virtue of Federal law and operating under it. If there is fraud upon the stockholders or if they are wasting the funds of the institution, the courts are open. The reason I asked any question about it at all, without having any knowledge of it, was that here is a proposition to pay for an investigation from the contingent fund of the House by a resolution without further explanation. It seems to me by a resolution without further explanation. It seems to he if there is something wrong full redress could be obtained through the courts under the law. But here, on mere suggestion of somebody, not of the corporations, I presume, and also asked for by the corporations themselves—I suppose to establish lish, perchance, a credit which they think they have not-it is proposed to investigate and pay for the investigation out of the contingent fund of the House. And I doubt very much, from any knowledge that I have in the premises or any information that has been furnished to the House, the propriety or the wisdom of adopting a resolution that would set a committee of the House at work, with the privilege to employ counsel. I apprehend the committee would not abuse its privilege; at least, I hope it would not; but the employment of counsel in many of these cases, without knowledge, has raised in my mind, in some investigations that have been made by the House, a suspicion that it is a genteel way of blackmailing and giving false information.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker, just a moment. I think I can help the gentleman out a little as to that.

Mr. CANNON. I will be very glad.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. This matter has been given publicity in the newspapers. Here are two financial institutions in the District of Columbia, and an institution of this sort is a very sensitive kind of plant, so to speak, when such publicity is given as has been given concerning these two insurance companies in the newspapers. They are just as anxious to have this investigation as is the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Commissioners of the District are also pressing for the investigation, and the Committee on Rules did not see proper to go into the detailed charges and allegations pro and con, but they have thought, after examining everything which was brought before them and hearing everything that has been said, that it was a better plan to authorize the District Committee to make this investigation and ascertain what the real facts are.

Mr. CANNON. Whether or not these newspaper reports are damaging to the insurance companies I do not know, as I have no familiarity with them. I have not read the newspaper articles touching this matter.

But if there is something rotten touching these companies it seems to me, on the part of the policyholders and upon the part of the stockholders, there is certainly ample room for people to employ their own counsel and to go into the courts and have a judicial hearing.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There is a good deal more than private rights involved here.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield to me?
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. I am informed that there is a company engaged in selling stocks. I know I have seen their advertisement within the last month, and as a part of the credit they have obtained for themselves, in order to induce the purchase of stock, they have inflated the value of the Southern Building, in the city, $2,000,000, as against a purchase by them of the Southern Builda half dollars, making, with just one stroke of the pen, an extra credit of $500,000, which they use as an inducement to people to purchase the stock. Now, what are the facts?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do not know, but I have heard a good deal more about it. What the facts are I do not under good deal more about it. What the facts are I do not under-take to say, but it is something that can not be investigated by a court, so far as these questions are concerned, and it seems to me they ought properly to be investigated by a committee of

Mr. CANNON. We might, with great propriety, investigate at the same time all the mining ventures in the country.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me right there, this resolution also provides for an investigation of the insurance commissioner of the District, a public officer.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As to his conduct in connection with the two institutions?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; and some public matters as ell. If there ever was a case demanding investigation, it seems to me that this one is plain.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. These insurance companies are required to make reports at some specific time to some authority in the What is that authority? Is it not the insurance District? commissioner?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; but I do not know whether he has required it to be done.

Mr. KENDALL. Is delinquency on the part of that officer charged?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. It has been charged.

Mr. KENDALL. He should be included in the investigation.
Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I would say that the resolution provides for the investigation of his office.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry] whether there is any likelihood of a report being made by the Committee on Rules on the New England transportation problem?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, I will say that I hardly think the committee will be able to take that matter up until after the holiday recess. Some time in January we hope to consider it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I do not object, for the reason that the minority leader, on the one hand, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Henry], on the other, seem to think that this investigation ought to be made. I must say that I haltingly subordinate my judgment in withholding an objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in this connection I would like to say a word upon another matter relating to this insurance com-I hold in my hand an advertisement of the Merchants' Fire Insurance Co. of the District here, an advertisement such as can be found, I think, any day in any of the daily newspapers in Washington. I notice by this that there is published as a director of this company Hon. George W. Atkinson, justice of the United States Court of Claims, and as a director and vice president Hon. Ashley M. Gould, justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. I simply wish to put on record my opinion, that it is wholly improper for those on the bench to be appointed or selected as directors and officers of life-insurance companies or other companies, especially those that are involved in business complications and seeking to sell stock by employing the names of honorable and eminent gentlemen as directors. [Applause.]

I know these men. I have no especial desire to criticize them. I think if they apprehend their duties they will resign from these positions at once. [Applause,]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution. The resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 144. Joint resolution authorizing payment of December salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment for the holiday recess.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 17, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an amended estimate of appropriation for pay, etc., of officers and men, vessels Coast and Geodetic Survey, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 1176); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copy of communication from the Chief of Ordnance recommending certain addition to appropriation "Automatic machine rifles" in Army appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 1177); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of urgent deficiency in the appropriation for contingent expenses, District of Alaska, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 1178); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chairman of Interstate Commerce Commission, submitting twenty-sixth annual report (H. Doc. No. 946); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an abstract of the official emoluments of the officers of the customs service received by them during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 1179); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PARRAN: A bill (H. R. 27320) to authorize the widening and opening of Western Avenue; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CLINE: A bill (H. R. 27321) to regulate the shipping of live stock; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce

To the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States in Congress convened.

HONORABLE GENTLEMEN: Believing, in common with a majority of the best-informed people, that the traffic in intoxicating beverages is clearly destructive of morality and the public welfare, and that it will be infamously iniquitous before God to permit liquor dealers to outrage every principle of right and justice by continuing to vend intoxicating beverages where the people have made such traffic a legal crime by deliberately sending such beverages into prohibition territory. I hereby respectfully petition your honorable body to adopt the amended Kenyon bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to the Pocahontas Memorial Association to aid in completing and erecting at Jamestown, Va., a suitable monument to commemorate the preservation of the first permanent settlement of the English-speaking people on the Western Hemisphere at Jamestown, Va., through the intervention of the Indian princess, Pocahontas.

Sec. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay said sum to the treasurer of the said Pocahontas Memorial Association: Provided, That the treasurer of the said Pocahontas Memorial Association shall, before receiving the amount hereby appropriated, or any part thereof, give a bond to the United States in the sum of $5,000, with surety or sureties to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned upon his faithfully disbursing the money hereby appropriated for the purpose and in the manner herein specified and rendering an itemized account of such disbursements, with satisfactory vouchers, to the Auditor of the Treasury for the State and Other Departments, said account to be first certified and approved by the legal counsel of the said Pocahontas Memorial Association: Provided further, That the design of said monument, together with the site upon which it is to be erected, shall first be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and the said Pocahontas Memorial Association: Provided further, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be so paid until the said Pocahontas Memorial Association shall have raised and paid on said monument an equal sum of $5,000, and satisfactory vouchers therefor presented to the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That no part of said money shall be paid until the site upon which said monument shall be erected shall have been donated, granted, or otherwise set apart and secured for said purpose: And provided further, That when said monument is erected, the responsibility for the care, keeping, and preservation of the same shall be and remain with the Pocahontas Memorial Association, it being expressly understood that the United States shall have no responsibility therefor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I suppose it would be ungracious to object, and I will not prevent the consideration of this bill; but I am opposed to it, and as I do not intend to ask that the roll be called I will occupy time enough to say that if Congress enters upon a policy like this it will soon happen that many persons and many events of small importance will be commemorated by monuments, and they will become so common that it will be no special honor to the memory of a person or an event to have a monument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Virginia if there is any particular reason why this bill should be acted upon so hastily

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will say that a bill similar to this passed the Senate unanimously in 1908. The Pocahontas Memorial Association is an organization that has collected $5,000 to erect a monument to Pocahontas by a noted sculptor. They have a deed to the land upon which to erect it and the monument is now waiting in New York the payment of an additional $5,000. The United States Government in 1907 erected a monument at Jamestown Island to John Smith, and it was thought by this patriotic association, composed of ladies and men from every part of the United States, that it would be appropriate to have at Jamestown Island a suitable memorial to Pocahontas.

She is not an ordinary personage in American colonization. The colony there would have been repeatedly destroyed but for her courage, her bravery, and her privation. She made possible the first permanent English settlement in America.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a poor compliment to your ancestors. Mr. SWANSON. The ladies of America feel that we have been very recreant to our duty not to have a suitable memorial anywhere

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting-

Mr. SWANSON. This association is desirous of getting this measure through at the present session of Congress. The bronze statue is now in New York, in the studio of a noted artist; the land has been deeded; the pedestal is there; and these ladies understood that if they would raise half the Federal Government would raise the other half. The Senate in 1998 unanimously passed a similar bill. The Library Committee of the House reported it unanimously, but it failed of passage on account of the lateness in the session and the pressure which usually characterizes the passage of bills near the close of a session.

I hope the Senator from Utah will not object. It would seem to me that the monument ought to be erected by the United States Government itself. These patriotic ladies have gotten up an organization and furnished half the money; they have the land and the pedestal; and all that is asked is $5,000 to commemorate the heroic achievements of this Indian princess. It seems to me that we should certainly appropriate this small

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the appropriation of the money for this purpose, but I do not see why a bill just reported to the Senate at this time, When everything is so congested, should be put on its passage. Other Senators have bills on the calendar in which they are just as much interested, and I do not see why this bill should be considered here by unanimous consent without going to the calendar. That is the only reason why I mention the fact.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will not object and that the bill may go through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the circumstances I will not object. There being no objection, the bill was considered in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 7784) granting an increase of pension to Katherine M. Gray; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 7785) confirming titles of Deborah A. Griffin and Mary J. Griffin, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 7786) granting an increase of pension to Victoria

L. McHone; and A bill (S. 7787) granting a pension to Effie M. Crail; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 7788) granting an increase of pension to Joseph H. Alexander; and

A bill (S. 7789) granting an increase of pension to Emily S. Reader; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 7790) granting an increase of pension to Clara A. Long (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HITCHCOCK:

A bill (S. 7791) granting an increase of pension to Allen Price; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 7792) authorizing James Sottile, his heirs and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Cooper River, Charleston County, S. C., and also a bridge and approaches thereto across Shem Creek, Charleston County, S. C.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GUGGENHEIM:

A bill (S. 7793) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin

F. Jay (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 7794) granting an increase of pension to Ellen M. Kilbourne:

A bill (S. 7795) granting an increase of pension to Sophia H. Burgess; and

A bill (S. 7796) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Quimby; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (8, 7797) for the relief of Frederick J. Ernst; to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 145) to provide for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property in connection with the presidential inaugural ceremonies in 1913 (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ADDRESS BY FRANCIS T. A. JUNKIN (S. DOC. NO. 983).

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I send to the desk a short address by Francis T. A. Junkin delivered at the one hundred and thirtyfourth commencement of Kenyon College, June 17, 1912, the subject being, Is Our Representative Government Imperiled? I ask that the address be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE WHITE-SLAVE TRAFFIC (S. DOC. NO. 982).

Mr. CURTIS. I have a copy of an address by Hon. Stanley W. Finch, chief of the bureau of investigation of the Department of Justice, delivered before the World's Purity Congress, Louisville, Ky., May 7, 1912, on the white-slave traffic. I ask that the address be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR NIXON.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire to give notice that on Saturday, February 8, 1913, I will ask that the business of the Senate be suspended that fitting tribute may be paid to the memory of my late colleague, Hon. George S. Nixon.

SNAKE RIVER BRIDGE, WYOMING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3947) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. Jones, Mr. Warren, and Mr. Newlands conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 21220. An act to extend the power of the Commissioner General of Immigration, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

H. R. 23186. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 17683. An act to increase the limit of cost for the postoffice building heretofore authorized at Dublin, Ga., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 25937. An act providing pay for Labor Day for per diem employees of the Government of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19115, known as the omnibus claims bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3. 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, to get the RECORD as it should be in form, I wish to state that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] offered an amendment to this bill proposing to incorporate into it what are known as the French posing to incorporate into it what are known as the richard spoliation claims. That offer has been made and is properly before the Senate. I had introduced, and there had been laid on the table, an amendment which I desired to propose to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. desire to formally offer that amendment and move its adoption, so that the Record may be complete. Then, without in any way displacing the position of the pending bill, I shall give way to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon], who desires to conclude the remarks he began on yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to make an inquiry. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota to my amendment has, I think, been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It has been read, Mr. President, and its items appear in the RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wanted to be sure that the amendment to the amendment had been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota offer his amendment at the present time?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do; and I move its adoption. I desire to be heard upon it later, but will now yield the floor to the Senator from Iowa, who, as I have stated, desires to conclude the remarks he began on yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford] to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] will be the pending amendment when the bill is again taken up for consideration.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford] for his kindness in the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill to which the Senator from Iowa is about to speak will be read by title.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the morning hour yesterday I was trying, in my feeble way, to discuss the constitutional power of the Federal Government as to local commerce where there was an apparent conflict with the police powers of the States in the regulation of their internal affairs. While it is true that one State can not by its laws have extraterritorial effect upon contracts made and executed in another State, yet is it not equally true that one State should not have extraterritorial power to break down and destroy the laws of another State under the pretense that they were protected by the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution? The need of such an act was expressed by the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, who has presided over the Senate with such ability and fairness, in his views submitted to Congress some years ago when Congress had under consideration a number of similar bills, and he stated it so much better than I am able to state it, that I make bold to use his language:

state it, that I make bold to use his language:

Briefly stated the conditions which demand the passage of this or some similar bill are these: Every State in which the traffic in liquors has been prohibited by law is deluged with whisky sent in by people from other States under the shelter of the interstate-commerce law. There are daily trainloads of liquors in bottles, jugs, and other packages sent into the State consigned to persons, real and fictilious, and every railway station and every express company office in the State are converted into the 1 ost extensive and active whisky shops, from which whisky is openly distributed in great quantities. Liquor dealers in other States secure the names of all persons in a community, and through the mails flood them with advertisements of whisky, with the most liberal and attractive propositions for the sale and shipment of the same. Freed from the expense of the middleman, the distiller or dealer in other States is enabled to sell to the individual in the prohibition State at a less price than the purchaser formerly paid to the domestic whisky dealer. It is evident that under such circumstances the prohibition law of a State is practically nullified, and intoxicating liquors are imposed upon its people against the will of the majority.

If further distinguished authority was needed in this era

If further distinguished authority was needed in this era of Democratic jubilation, I think no better authority could be produced than an extract from the veto message of the governor of New Jersey, who so narrowly escaped being unanimously elected to the Presidency. In New Jersey an act to enable wholesale liquor dealers to extend their trade outside of the licensing unit was vetoed by Woodrow Wilson on April 2, 1912, in the following words:

There is a very strong argument for the range proposed in this bill in the fact that the policy of the Federal Government in respect of interstate commerce permits liquor dealers outside of the State to deliver their wares at pleasure inside of the State, thus unquestionably working a hardship on their competitors within the State, but it does not seem to me a mistaken and hurtful Federal policy justifies an initation of that policy by the State itself. It seems to me imperative upon the principle of self-government to preserve the integrity and autonomy of the several licensing districts and that that autonomy is seriously impaired by this act.

I am not concerned at all with the question of whether a State in the exercise of its police power might adopt a law prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors. If it does do so, it ought to be able to make that law effective. If it adopts the contrary policy, it should be permitted to make that effective. If intoxicating liquors can be freely shipped into a State which has a prohibitory law and the State government is powerless to prevent it, and the Federal Government is likewise powerless to prevent it, if this liquor is to remain in the twilight zone between Federal and State jurisdiction, then, indeed, it is time for some further amendment to our Constitution,

I call attention in this connection to a circular issued by a wholesale liquor house in the State of Utah. It is illuminated with pictures of Uncle Sam, some 10 in number, in various pleasing and satisfactory poses, and announces at the top of the The circular is as circular that "Uncle Sam is our partner." follows:

UNCLE SAM IS OUR PARTNER. THE FRED J. KIESEL CO., OGDEN, UTAH, Mail order liquor department.

Mail order liquor department.

To meet the surprisingly increasing demand from dry Idaho counties and other dry sections we have increased our bottled in bond and blended whisky stock and are ready to supply all demands from the thirsty, be they bankers, merchants, tradesmen, laborers, ministers, bootleggers, or even politicians, from the governor down to the least official. Our list includes the following well-known brands: Sunny Brook, old Crow, Old Klesci, Hermitage, Our Joe, Guckenheimer, Paul Jones, and Chicken Cock.

Pabst Blue Ribbon, "the beer of quality."
Idan-ha, the monarch of table and medicinal waters; also finest of wines and brandies from our own winery at Sacramento, Cal.

Price lists furnished on application. Address all communications to The Fred J. Klesel Co., Mail Order Department, Ogden, Utah.

I refer to this, Mr. President, because of the significant words at the top of the circular, "Uncle Sam is our partner." The partnership of the Federal Government with the bootlegger ought to be permanently dissolved. The assistance of the Government in maintaining "holes in the walls" and "speak easies" ought to cease. That is the purpose of this bill. It would seem as if the purpose would meet the approval of everyone, whether engaged in the liquor business or opposed to it. There is no purpose in this bill, and the language can not be distorted into the idea so freely circulated in the literature now being distributed by those opposed to this bill, that it destroys the right of a man to the personal use of intoxicating liquor. No State in the Union has passed an act prohibiting the personal use of liquor. It is not made a crime for one to purchase liquor, and the right to use it is only affected as it might be incidentally by the prohibition of sale. I assume that no State ever will pass a law prohibiting the personal use of intoxicating liquor, up to the point at least where a man by so doing might become a drunkard or make a nuisance of himself. This bill goes no further than State law; it leaves the question entirely with the States; it does not attempt to say whether liquor shall be sold or used or given away. It is drawn on the theory and to carry out the purpose that the police powers of a State should not be made impossible of operation by the failure of Congress, in the interest of the general public welfare, to remove from commerce an article which might impede the carrying out of those powers in the State. It never was intended by the Constitution in conferring upon Congress an exclusive power to regulate interstate commerce, to take away from the various States the right to make reasonable laws concerning the health, life, and safety of its citizens, even though such legislation might indirectly affect foreign or interstate commerce.

In Sherlock v. Alling (93 U.S., 99) it was said:

And it may be said generally that the legislation of a State not directed against commerce or any of its regulations, but relating to the rights, duties, and liabilities of citizens, and only indirectly and remotely affecting the operations of commerce, is of obligatory force upon citizens within its territorial jurisdiction, whether on land or water, or engaged in commerce, foreign or interstate, or in any other pursuit.

With these preliminary observations, I desire to take up the legal and constitutional questions involved, and they group themselves about as follows:

First. Has Congress the power, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, to prohibit the transportation in commerce of any commodity which it may desire?

Second. If Congress has not that full power, then has it power to prohibit in commerce between the States those articles which are generally considered injurious in and of themselves to the general public?

Third. Are intoxicating liquors so recognized as articles of commerce that Congress can not include them among those subjects which are in themselves or by their use deleterious to public welfare?

Fourth. Would the prohibition of the shipment in interstate commerce of intoxicating liquors violate any of the inhibitions of the Constitution?

Fifth. Can the contract of shipment be invalidated by the undisclosed intention of one of the parties to violate the law of a State?

Sixth. Must Congress, if it attempts to prohibit in any degree the transportation of liquors intended to violate the law of a State, go further and absolutely prohibit them?

Seventh. Has it power to turn over to a State regulation the question of when such liquors shall cease to be a part of com-

Eighth. Does the bill in section 2 not delegate to the States the power to regulate interstate commerce?

Ninth. Is it within the power of Congress to say when the interstate-commerce transaction shall cease, and can it divest an article of the interstate-commerce character while it is in actual, physical transportation?

Tenth. Does section 2 not recognize the right of transportation into the State and at the same time permit the police power to prohibit transportation?

Eleventh. Has Congress the power as to the fundamental aspect of interstate commerce, namely, the actual, physical transportation, to say that that commerce shall cease before the commodity reaches the consignee?

These suggestions go, I think, to all the objections raised to this bill, and I have suggested those things which might be considered as against the constitutionality of the bill, as well as those which might make in its favor. I have no pride of opinion in this bill. The bill originally was drafted by a distinguished lawyer of the State of Oklahoma. Believing in the principle thereof, I introduced the bill. The committee struck out some parts of the original bill and added thereto as an amendment section 2, which was drafted by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Sanders]. I have no desire, nor has he, that the bill pass if the Senate is of the opinion that it is unconstitutional.

I have no patience with merely passing a bill that we may regard as unconstitutional and pass it up to the Supreme Court and let them determine the question. I do not believe any Serator should vote for any bill where he believes it is unconstitutional; but if there is a serious question in his mind with relation thereto, and it is a question of such general public interest that the Supreme Court should pass thereon, then it would seem to me the proper procedure to pass the bill and invite the judg-ment of the Supreme Court thereon in a proper case. In no other way could great constitutional questions ever be determined, because good lawyers will always differ thereon as well as good judges, as is evidenced by the fact of the large number of dissenting opinions in practically all the cases where great constitutional questions have been involved.

My answer to the first one or two questions, I think, answers them all as well as I can answer them. Has Congress the power to take intoxicating liquors out of the domain of interstate commerce? My proposition as to the first section of the bill is this: Congress has the absolute power to take intoxicating liquors out of interstate commerce. Now, if Congress has that power, then it makes absolutely no difference what kind of a regulation Congress may make, because the lesser regulation is included within the greater.

Section 8, Article I, of the Constitution, enumerating the powers of Congress, says:

To regulate commerce with the foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

There is, as was suggested by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. Sutherland], some distinction between the power of Congress, acting with respect to foreign commerce and among the Indians and acting among the States, but it is a distinction without a difference. It is the theory that we act as to Indian tribes and act as to foreign nations in the capacity of a sovereign. But the decisions of our Supreme Court would seem clearly to indicate the thought of that court-that Congress practically deals as a sovereign or at least has the power of sovereignty with relation to commerce between the States.

Congress, in its power to regulate commerce with Indian tribes, may exclude any selected article from such commerce as deleterious. See:

United States v. Holliday (3 Wall., 407). Sarlis v. United States (152 U. S., 570). United States v. Maynard (154 U. S., 552).

Congressional power over commerce among the States is analogous to the same power over foreign commerce, so held in Crutcher against Kentucky, One hundred and forty-first United States, page 57; Brown against Houston, One hundred and fourteenth United States, page 622; Gibbons against Ogden, Ninth Wheaton, page 1. Congress may regulate interstate.commerce in any manner it pleases without having its reasons questioned. (Bartemeyer v. Todd, 94 U. S., 535.)

The provision of the Constitution as above set out gives to Congress plenary power over interstate commerce, and that power knows no limitation except the restrictions of the Constitution. The question, then, is not one of discretion, but merely a question of power, and an unbroken line of decisions from almost the commencement of the Republic to the present time ought to set at rest the proposition that there is absolutely no limitation to this power except the limitations of the Constitution.

For instance, as constitutional limitations, all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce to the ports of one State over those of another, nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another. Other constitutional inhibitions would be under the fifth amendment, providing that no person should be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; or the fourteenth amendment, providing that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

The earliest discussion of this question was the famous case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat.). This was a case with relation to navigation, and the discussion is under the commerce clause of the Constitution, and the court said, speaking through its great Chief Justice:

We are now arrived at the inquiry. What is this power? It is the power to regulate; that is, to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution. These are expressed in plain terms and do not affect the questions which arise in this case or which have been discussed at the bar. If, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution of the United States.

It is, of course, true that when the subjects of commerce are national in character and require uniformity of regulation affecting alike all the States the power of Congress is absolutely exclusive. It would seem useless to enter into a discussion of the numerous cases from Gibbon v, Ogden down through all the years where the courts have reiterated over and over again that the power of Congress over interstate commerce is Under this clause safety-appliance acts, employers' liability acts regulating contracts between master and servant, hours-of-service acts, pure-food acts, pure-drug acts, white-slave acts, acts prohibiting transportation by railroads of coal mined by them, have been upheld and are indicative of how this great power of Congress has been used to bring about legislation for the benefit of mankind. Progressive legislation has gone forward under this clause of the Constitution. I call attention to only a few of these decisions:

In the Northern Securities case (193 U. S., 335), Justice Harlan, in the majority opinion, uses the following vigorous language (quoting in his opinion with approval some of the words of Marshall from the Gibbons v. Ogden case):

By the express words of the Constitution Congress has power to "regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes," In view of the numerous decisions of this court there ought not at this day to be any doubt as to the general scope of such power. In some circumstances regulation may properly take the form and have the effect of prohibition. In re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545; Lottery case, 188 U. S., 321, 355; and authorities there cited. Again and again this court has reaffirmed the doctrine announced in the great judgment rendered by Chief Justice Marshall for the court in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1, 196, 197), that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations is the power "to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed"; that such power "is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than are prescribed in the Constitution"; that "if, as has always been understood, the sovereignty of Congress, though limited to specified objects, is plenary as to those objects, the power over commerce with foreign nations and among the several States is vested in Congress as absolutely as it would be in a single government having in its constitution the same restrictions on the exercise of the power as are found in the Constitution allows to Congress a large discretion, "with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people"; and that if the end to be accomplished is within the scope of the Constitution "all means which are appropriate, which are planiny adapted to that end and which are not prohibited, are constitutional.

It will be noted the opinion confirms the doctrine that regu-

It will be noted the opinion confirms the doctrine that regulations in some circumstances may take the form and have the effect of prohibition. In the Commodity Clause case (213 U. S., 415) the court in construing the commodity clause of the Hep-burn Act, which provided that it should be unlawful for any railroad company to transport from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to another State, and so forth, any article and commodity other than timber, and the manufactured products thereof, mined or produced by it, or which it may have any interest in, directly or indirectly, except to be used in the conduct of its business, says:

we then construe the statute as prohibiting a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce from transporting in such commerce articles or commodities under the following circumstances and conditions: (a) When the article or commodity has been manufactured, mined, or produced by a carrier or under its authority, and at the time of transportation the carrier has not in good faith before the act of transportation dissociated itself from such article or commodity; (b) when the carrier owns the article or commodity to be transported in whole or in part; (c) when the carrier at the time of transportation has an interest, direct or indirect, in a legal or equitable sense in the article or commodity, not including, therefore, articles or commodities manufactured, mined, produced, or owned, etc., by a bona fide corporation in which the railroad company is a stockholder.

The question then arises whether, as thus construed, the statute was inherently within the power of Congress to enact as a regulation of commerce. That it was we think is apparent. ** ** **.

Without claborating we hold the contention that the clause under consideration is void because the exception as to timber and the manufactured products thereof is without merit. Deciding, as we do, that the clause, as construed, was a lawful exercise by Congress of the power to regulate commerce we know of no constitutional limitation requiring that such a regulation when adopted should be applied to all commodities alike. It follows that even if we gave heed to the many reasons of expedience which have been suggested in argument against the exception and the injustice and favoritism which it is asserted will be operated thereby, that fact can have no weight in passing upon the question of power. And the same reasons also dispose of the contention that the clause is void as a discrimination between carriers.

It will be noted in this opinion that the action of Congress in excepting timber, while including other commodities, under this act did not render it void; that Congress had the power to prevent transportation in commerce of such a well-recognized article as coal. It would be difficult to find a more complete exercise of plenary power by Congress than in the commodity clause case. It might well be claimed under these decisions sustained by the lottery case, to which I will refer later, that if Congress desired it could prohibit the transportation of any article in commerce between the States. I do not so claim, but it is true that a strong argument could be made, as there has been by good lawyers, sustaining this proposition. There is great force in the position.

The Constitution does not limit Congress in its regulation to those things which may be harmful in themselves, and it may well be claimed that Congress must have power over every article of commerce in order to give it power over any. Likewise the character of the article to be transported would not have anything whatever to do with the question of power. Power is given by the Constitution, not because of the nature of any article, but simply because it was deemed necessary to have this power somewhere. The action of Congress may be called out by certain conditions, but those conditions do not give the grant of power. And it is claimed by those who take this radical view that Congress has the same power to prohibit the shipment of corn, wheat, of pure meats, of nonexplosives as well as explosives; that there is absolutely no exception and no limitation except as heretofore indicated. It is not to be presumed that Congress would ever use such power, as it is composed of intelligent individuals who would not do absurd or unreasonable things, but that is no reason for saying that or threasonable things, but that is no reason for saying that the power does not exist. For instance, Congress is given the power to declare war. If it declared war to-morrow against Turkey or China or any other power, it would be an unreason-able thing, but because this would be ridiculous is no reason for saying that the power is not there to declare war when the necessity arises; but it is not going to declare war except under such circumstances as would satisfy the conscience of the people, nor would it prohibit the shipment of corn or wheat bread unless under such circumstances as would always satisfy the conscience of an enlightened nation; so the fact that power may be wrongfully used is no argument against the existence of the power. I do not desire, however, in this argument to go to that extent. It is not necessary to sustain this bill, and I am not satisfied in my mind that an attempt on the part of Congress to prohibit the transportation of wheat, corn, bread, and those articles that are recognized as necessities to sustain human life could be sustained. It occurs to me that there would be a constitutional right in the preservation of life to contract with citizens of other States for bread or wheat or corn and have them shipped in interstate commerce and that Congress could not prevent the same or attempt so to do without an invasion of the liberty of the citizen, and hence violate the Constitution.

I prefer to pass that question with what has already been said and base the argument on the proposition that intoxicating liquors are recognized by practically, if not all, the States of the Union as differing from bread or wheat or corn. If this is not true, and if it is not so commonly recognized by mankind, then why license the sale of liquor any more than the sale of bread; why have regulations for closing hours; why prohibit the sale to minors; why prohibit sales on Sunday; why any of the hundreds of regulations that the various States and municipalities seek to adopt? Why does Congress make it an offense to introduce liquor into Indian country? Why prohibit sale to Indians? It is quite apparent and beyond successful argument that intoxicating liquors do not stand on the same plane with bread and wheat and other commodities, and all courts have recognized this fundamental distinction, and so has Con-

I desire on this subject to use not my language but the language of some of the courts of the United States, including the Supreme Court of the United States in a number of cases, with reference to this. In the case of Welsh v. State (126 Ind., 72) the court says that-the unrestricted sale of intoxicating liquors results in much evil and is detrimental to society—

And in the latter it says that-the license law treats the traffic as dangerous, as dangerous to public and private morals, and as dangerous to the public peace and the good order of society.

In The State v. Gerhardt (145 Ind., 439) the court says:

The unrestricted traffic in intoxicating liquors has been found by sad experience to be fraught with great evil and to result in the most demoralizing influence upon private morals and the peace and safety of

In Mugler v. Kansas (123 U. S., 623, 658-662) the Supreme Court of the United States said:

It is not necessary for the sake of justifying the State legislation now under consideration to array the appalling statistics of misery, pauperism, and crime which have their origin in the use or abuse of ardent spirits. * * * For we can not shut out of view the fact within the knowledge of all that the public health, the public morals, and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks; nor the fact established by statistics acceptable to everyone that the idleness, disorder, pauperism, and crime existing in the country are in some degree at least traceable to this evil.

Again, the Supreme Court of the United States, in Crowley v. Christensen (137 U. S., 86), says:

By the general concurrence of opinion of every civilized and Christian community there are few sources of crime and misery to society equal to the dramshop, where intoxicating liquors in small quantities, to be drunk at the time, are sold indiscriminately to all parties applying. The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than to any other source.

That there is no constitutional right to sell intoxicating liquors at retail or to manufacture and sell, and that the same does not inhere in citizenship, is held in Mugler v. Kansas (123 U. S., 205). In Crowley v. Christensen (137 U. S., 86) the court said :

There is no inherent right in a citizen to thus sell intoxicating liquors by retail; it is not a privilege of a citizen of the State or of a citizen of the United States.

This was cited with approval in Cronin v. Adams (192 U. S., 108); also in Bartemeyer v. Iowa (85 U.S.)

Mr. President, it can not be questioned that the power to regulate is plenary.

THE POWER TO REGULATE EMBRACES THE POWER TO PROHIBIT,

This proposition is held in the Northern Securities case, heretofore cited; likewise in what is known as the Lottery case (188 U. S., 321). The court there recognized the changed sentiment of the Nation with respect to lotteries. changed conditions, it is interesting to note that Congress once authorized a lottery in the District of Columbia, but in later years the Supreme Court took judicial notice of the change in the sentiment of the country with relation thereto.

It is a matter of some historic curiosity that at one time Congress permitted or licensed a lottery in the District of Columbia, but in the decision in the lottery case the Supreme Court took judicial notice of the change of sentiment in this country with relation thereto.

In the Riverside Mills Co. against the Atlantic Railroad Co. the court recognized the sentiment of the Nation with respect to the condemnation of the practice of railway companies in making contracts for shipment where liability was limited to their own line, and so with other propositions that might be suggested where the court itself keeps in touch with the changed spirit of the times and takes judicial notice thereof. In the Lottery case the court said:

Lottery case the court said:

We have said that the carrying from State to State of lottery tickets constitutes interstate commerce, and that the regulation of such commerce is within the power of Congress under the Constitution. Are we prepared to say that a provision which is, in effect, a prohibition of the carriage of such articles from State to State is not a fit or appropriate mode for the regulation of that particular kind of commerce? If lottery traffic, carried on through interstate commerce, is a matter of which Congress may take cognizance and over which its power may be exerted, can it be possible that it must tolerate the traffic and simply regulate the manner in which it may be carried on? Or may not Congress, for the protection of the people of all the States and under the power to regulate interstate commerce, devise such means within the scope of the Constitution, and not prohibited by it, as will drive that traffic out of commerce among the States?

If a State, when considering legislation for the suppression of lotteries within its own limits, may properly take into view the evils that inhere in the raising of money in that mode, why may not Congress, invested with the power to regulate commerce among the several States, provide that such commerce shall not be polluted by the carrying of lottery tickets from sone State to another? In this connection it must not be forgotten that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States is plenary, is complete in itself, and is subject to no limitations except such as may be found in the Constitution. What provision in that instrument can be regarded as limiting the exercise of the power granted? What clause can be cited which, in any degree, countenances the suggestion that one may, of right, carry or cause to be carried from one State to another that which will harm the public morals? We can not think of any clause of that instrument that could possibly be invoked by those who assert their right to send lottery tickets from State to State except the one providing that no person shall be deprived of his liberty without due process of law. We have said that the liberty protected by the Constitution embraces the right to be free in the enjoyment of one's faculties; "to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts that may be proper." (All-geyer V. Louisiana, 165 U. S., 578, 589.) But surely it will not be said to be a part of anyone's liberty, as recognized by the supreme law of the land, that he shall be allowed to introduce into commerce among the States an element that will be confessedly injurious to the public morals.

It is a kind of traffic which no one can be entitled to pursue as of

That regulation may sometimes appropriately assume the form of prohibition is also illustrated by the case of diseased cattle, transported from one State to another. Such cattle may have, notwithstanding their condition, a value in money for some purposes, and yet it can not be doubted that Congress, under its power to regulate commerce, may either provide for their being inspected before transportation begins or, in its discretion, may prohibit their being transported from one State to another. Indeed, by the act of May 29, 1884 (chap. 60), Congress has provided: "That no railroad company within the United States, or the owners or masters of any steam or sailing or other vessel or boat, shall receive for transportation or transport from one State or Territory to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia, or from the District into any State, any live stock affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, and especially the disease known as pleuropneumonia; nor shall any person, company, or corporation deliver for such transportation to any railroad company, or master or owner of any boad or vessel, any live stock knowing them to be affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease; nor shall any person, company, or corporation deliver for such transportation to any railroad company, or master or owner of any boad or vessel, any live stock knowing them to be affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease; nor shall any person, company, or corporation drive on foot or transport in private conveyance from one State or Territory to another, or from any State into the District of Columbia, or from the District into any State, any live stock knowing them to be affected with any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease, and especially the disease known as pleuropneumonia." (Reid v. State of Colorado, 187 U. S., 137, present term.)

In Rhodes v. Iowa (170 U. S., 412, 426) that statute—all of its provisions being regarded—was held as not causing the power of the State to attach to an interstate-commerce shipment of intoxicating liquors "whilst the merchandise was in transit under such shipment, and until its arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee."

Thus under its power to regulate interstate commerce, as involved in the transportation, in original packages, of ardent spirits from one State to another, Congress, by the necessary effect of the act of 1890, made it impossible to transport such packages to places within a prohibitory State and there dispose of their contents by sale, although it had been previously held that ardent spirits were recognized articles of commerce and, until Congress otherwise provided, could be imported into a State, and sold in the original packages, despite the will of the State. If at the time of the passage of the act of 1890 all the States had enacted liquor laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within their respective limits, then the act would necessarily have had the effect to exclude ardent spirits altogether from commerce among the States; for no one would ship, for purposes of sale, packages containing such spirits to points within any State that forbade their sale at any time or place, even in unbroken packages, and, in addition, provided for the seizure and forfeiture of such packages. So that we have in the Rahrer case a recognition of the principle that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce may sometimes be exerted with the effect of excluding particular articles from such commerce.

It is said however, that if in order to suppress lotteries carried on with the effect of excluding particular articles from such commerce.

It is said, however, that if, in order to suppress lotteries carried on through interstate commerce, Congress may exclude lottery tickets from such commerce, that principle leads necessarily to the conclusion that Congress may arbitrarily exclude from commerce among the States any article, commodity, or thing, of whatever kind or nature, or however useful or valuable, which it may choose, no matter with what motive, to declare shall not be carried from one State to another. It will be time enough to consider the constitutionality of such legislation when we must do so. The present case does not require the court to declare the full extent of the power that Congress may exercise in the regulation of commerce among the States. We may, however, repeat in this connection what the court has heretofore said, "that the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the States, although plenary, can not be deemed arbitrary, since it is subject to such limitations or restrictions as are prescribed by the Constitution."

This power, therefore, may not be exercised so as to infringe rights secured or protected by that instrument. It would not be difficult to imagine legislation that would be justiyl liable to such an objection as that stated and be hostile to the objects for the accomplishment of which Congress was invested with the general power to regulate commerce among the several States. But, as often said, the possible abuse of a power is not an argument against its existence. There is probably no governmental power that may not be exerted to the injury of the public. If what is done by Congress is manifestly in excess of the powers granted to it, then upon the courts will rest the duty of adjudging that its action is neither legal nor binding upon the people. But if what Congress does is within the limits of its power, and is slmply unwise or injurious, the remedy is that suggested by Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons v. Ogden, when he said: "The w

There is no reason why Congress can not act as to liquors exactly the same as to lottery tickets. These decisions would seem to clearly establish the proposition that the right to regulate is the right to prohibit. Were further authority needed, the numerous cases arising under the Sherman Antitrust Act would be in point. Congress, then, having the power to pro-hibit the transportation in interstate commerce of all intoxicating liquors—in other words, to remove them as articles of interstate commerce-can it be seriously questioned that it may make a lesser rule or regulation with respect thereto? The present bill does not seek to prohibit the transportation of all intoxicating liquors, but only those liquors shipped with the intent to violate the laws of a State. Having the power to absolutely prohibit, the power must exist to make any kind of a regulation.

To prohibit the transportation of all liquors that had not been kept for a certain length of time, or liquors that had not been inspected by some designated authority; in fact, any kind of a regulation that it might make would be within its power. While the intent question as involved in this bill may be difficult of proof, may make the law unwieldy, may be considered by some as ridiculous and absurd, yet that has no relationship whatever to the question of power. If the State prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors, then where they are shipped with intent to be sold they have no protection under the interstatecommerce clause. If liquors are shipped with the intent to be used by the person for his own personal use and in no way to violate the law of a State, then they are subjects of commerce. In other words, any shipment intended by those interested therein to be used in violation of the law is not a subject of inter-state commerce. I realize the difficulties involved in the intent proposition and the force in the argument that an innocent consignor ought not be compelled to suffer in any way for the undisclosed intention of a consignee. As a matter of practice, of course, the consignor well knows, with reference to the shipment he has made, whether it is made for personal use or to violate the law. He is amply protected by securing his charges in advance. So would a railroad company be protected by securing its freight in advance, and the railroad company has a right to extend credit to one and not to another without being guilty of any discrimination, just as a man has in any other kind of business.

A large number of statutes passed by Congress recognize, as of course they must, the intent question. The fact that intent is difficult to prove does not destroy such laws. For instance, section 245 of the Criminal Code prohibits the shipment of certain drugs intended to be used for certain purposes. Other statutes make unlawful the removing of timber from public lands with intent to export or dispose of same. Others for equipping vessels with intent to bring in slaves. Others punish those who with intent to defraud falsely make, forge, counterfeit, or alter any obligation of the United States. Others punish those who with intent to defraud pass or attempt to pass falsely made obligations; the carrying on of correspondence with foreign Governments with intent to influence measures or conduct of foreign Governments in relation to disputes with nations at peace with the United States. Others provide for the punishment of those who fit out or arm vessels with intent that such vessels be employed in the service of foreign powers to war against those with whom the United States is at peace. So that Congress recognizes the question of intent in a large number of its statutes.

The question of intent is merely a question of fact to be determined from all the circumstances and evidence in each particular case. Nor does the act violate any constitutional right. The question of the contract has been raised here. The Supreme Court of the United States has many times said that there is no liberty of contract in this country.

In the case of Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Motley (219 U. S., 467) the court goes fully into the question where the proposition is the violation of contract rights arising under a contract for a pass given by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad before the enactment of the Hepburn Act.

Time forbids entering into a discussion of it, but this was a case where the railroad company had made a contract for a life When the Hepburn Act came into force and effect the railroad company ceased to give the pass. A suit was brought, and the Supreme Court held that contracts of that nature were made subject to the possibility that even if valid when made, Congress may, by exercising its power, render them invalid. That there was no violation of the fifth amendment because contracts were invalidated which conflicted with the public policy declared in the act. In Knox v. Lee (12 Wall., 551) the court said:

As in a state of civil society, property of a citizen or subject is ownership, subject to the lawful demands of the sovereign, so contracts must be understood as made in reference to the possible exercise of the rightful authority of the Government and no obligation of a contract can extend to the defeat of legitimate Government authority.

This act would not infringe upon the constitutional liberty of the citizen to make contracts in any way. There is no liberty of contract where the contract may be contrary to the declared public policy of the Government.

In Giozza v. Tiernan (148 U. S., 661), a Texas case, the court

The privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States are privileges and immunities arising out of the nature and essential character of the National Government and granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States, and the right to sell intoxicating liquors is not one of the rights growing out of such citizenship.

Nor can it be contended that this act would be in violation of the fourteenth amendment. In Powell v. Pennsylvania (127 U. S., 678), it was said that-the fourteenth amendment was not designed to interfere with exercises of the police power by the State for the protection of health * * * and the preservation of public morals. * * * The power which the legislature has to promote the general welfare is very great, and the discretion which that department of the Government has in the employment of means to that end is very large. * * The possibility of abuse of legislative power does not disprove its existence.

In the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Co. v. Riverside Mills (219 U. S., 186), construing what is known as the Carmack amendment, making the carrier liable for loss or damage to merchandise received for interstate transportation beyond their own lines, notwithstanding any contract of exemption in the bill of lading, the court held it to be a valid exercise of such power and not in conflict with the due-process provision of the fifth amendment. The court there said, referring to the various decisions:

It is obvious from the many decisions of this court that there is no such thing as absolute freedom of contract. Contracts which contravene public policy can not be lawfully made at all. * * * * The power of government extends to the denial of liberty of contract to the extent of forbidding or regulating every contract which is reasonably calculated to injuriously affect the public interest.

Therefore it would seem clear as to section 1 of this act that there could not be serious doubt-as to the power of Congress to pass the same without violating any constitutional provisions. It would meet the difficulty which has arisen in the enforcement of prohibition laws in the various States, and prevent, when liquor within the borders of the State-to be used in violating the laws of the State-is seized by the State in the exexcise of its police power, the defense thereto being made that such articles were protected by the interstate-commerce clause. The power exists to remove all intoxicating liquors from interstate commerce. The lesser power only is used. No constitutional rights are infringed. Why, then, simply because the question of intent would be difficult of ascertainment, refuse to pass such a law and give the relief demanded? It is no more uncertain than "reasonable restraint" of trade under the Sherman Act. What divinity is there that surrounds a shipment of liquors from one State intended to be used in violating the law of another State? What reason is there in common sense why a State should not deal with this troublesome proposition as it pleases, so long as it does not infringe constitutional rights? Why not have the privilege to exercise its laws free from the impediment now imposed by the interstate-commerce clause? It is not revolutionary; it may be novel, as much legislation nowadays is novel to those who can not see or understand that the only purpose of government and the only reason for its existence is to serve the people who comprise that gov-

REVIEW OF CASES RELATING TO THIS SUBJECT.

Probably no more perplexing problem has ever been presented to the courts than the question of just what a State may do in those cases which might affect interstate commerce more or less. Nearly all the States have in the exercise of their police power passed laws in the last few years for the regulation of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. Many of the States have passed laws absolutely prohibiting the carrying on of the liquor business within the State. Some of the States have adopted prohibition as a part of their constitution, and as late as the last election, the State of West Virginia, by over 90,000 majority, adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. It is quite apparent that these various laws have given rise to many controversies and many decisions, and I shall attempt to review only the more important ones. As late as December 2 of this year the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, after citation to various authorities with reference to the police power of the Co. ties, with reference to the police power of the State, said:

That the State in the exercise of its police power may prohibit the selling of intoxicating liquors is andoubted. * * * It is also well established that when a State, exerting its recognized authority, undertakes to suppress what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures having reasonable relation to that end as it may deem necessary in order to make its action effective. It does not follow that because a transaction separately considered is innocuous it may not be included in a prohibition the scope of which is regarded as essential in the legislative judgment to accomplish a purpose within the admitted power of the Government.

As far back as 1847 the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire passed laws with relation to the regulation of the liquor traffic and the licensing thereof. various laws of these States are summarized in the syllabus of Thurlow v. Massachusetts (5 How., 504):

Thurlow v. Massachusetts (5 How., 504):

Laws of Massachusetts providing that no person shall presume to be a retailer or seller of wine, brandy, rum, or other spirituous liquors, in a less quantity than 28 gallons, and that delivered and carried away all at one time unless he is first licensed as a retailer of wine and spirits, and that nothing in the law should be so construed as to require the county commissioners to grant any licenses, when in their opinion the public good does not require them to be granted. * * Of Rhode Island, forbidding the sale of rum, gin, brandy, etc., in a less quantity than 10 gallons, although in this case the brandy which was sold was duly imperted from France into the United States and purchased by the party indicted from the original importer. * * Of New Hampshire, imposing similar restrictions to the foregoing upon licenses, although in this case the article sold was a barrel of American gin, purchased in Boston and carried coastwise to the landing at Piscataqua Bridge and there sold in the same barrel. * * All adjudged to be not inconsistent with any of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States or acts of Congress under it.

For 50 years it never was questioned by the bar of this country that the States had this full police power; that the silence of Congress gave to the States this power, but when the Bowman case was decided, in One hundred and twenty-fifth United States, page 465, this policy was reversed, and tional as being an attempted regulation of interstate commerce, and the court (Justice Matthews) said:

It is conceded, as we have already shown, that for the purposes of its policy a State has legislative control, exclusive of Congress, within its territory of all persons, things, and transactions of strictly internal concern. For the purpose of protecting its people against the evils of intemperance it has the right to prohibit the manufacture within its limits of intoxicating liquors; it may also prohibit all domestic commerce in them between its own inhabitants, whether the articles are introduced from other States or from foreign countries; it may punish those who sell them in violation of its laws; it may adopt any measures tending, even indirectly and remotely, to make the policy effective until it passes the line of power delegated to Congress under the Constitution. It can not, without the consent of Congress, express or implied, regulate commerce between its people and those of the other States of the Union in order to effect its end, however desirable such a regulation might be. regulation might be.

the Bowman case was decided, in One hundred and twentyfifth United States, page 465, this policy was reversed, and there a statute of the State of Iowa requiring a certificate of relation to the shipment of liquor was held to be an interference with interstate commerce, and was therefore void.

One of the most important cases that has arisen is Bowman v.
Chicago & Northwestern Railroad Co. (125 U. S., 465), where the Iowa statute, prohibiting transportation except upon a certificate from the auditor of the county where consignee resided that the consignee had the right to sell, was held unconstitucase. * * * It is enough to say that the power to regulate or forbid the sale of a commodity after it has been brought into the State does not carry with it the right and power to prevent its introduction by transportation from another State.

That the right of importation carries with it the right to sell the article imported does not appear to me doubtful. Of course, I am speaking of an article that is in a healthy condition, for when it has become putrescent or diseased it has ceased to be an article of commerce, and it may be destroyed or its use prohibited. To assert that, under the Constitution of the United States, the importation of an article of commerce can not be prohibited by the States, and yet to hold that when imported its use and sale can be prohibited, is to declare that the right which the Constitution gives is a barren one, to be used only so far as the burden of transportation is concerned, and to be denied, so far as any benefits from such transportation are sought. The framers of the Constitution never intended that a right given should not be fully enjoyed.

Assuming, therefore, as correct doctrine that the right of importation carries the right to seil the article imported, the decision in the Kansas case may, perhaps, be reconciled with the one in this case by distinguishing the power of the State over property created within it, and its power over property imported—its power in one case extending, for the protection of the health, morals, and safety of its people, to the absolute prohibition of the sale or use of the article, and in the other extending only to such regulations as may be necessary for the safety of the community until it has been incorporated into and become a part of the general property of the State. However much this distinction may be open to criticism, it furnishes, as it seems to me, the only way in which the two decisions can be reconciled.

It will be noted that a strong dissenting opinion was filed in the Bowman case by Justice Harlan, concurred in by Associate Justice Gray, in which this language was used:

Justice Gray, in which this language was used:

This court has often declared that the most important function of government was to preserve the public health, morals, and safety; that it could not divest itself of that power, nor, by contract, limit its exercise; and that even the constitutional prohibition upon laws impairing the obligation of contracts does not restrict the power of the State to protect the health, morals, or the safety of the community, as the one or the other may be involved in the execution of such contracts. (Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S., 814, 816; Butchers' Union Co. v. Crescent City Co., 111 U. S., 746, 751; New Orleans Gas Co. v. Louisiana Light Co., 115 U. S., 650, 672; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 623, 664). It is inconceivable that the well-heing of any State is at the 664.) It is inconceivable that the well-being of any State is at the mercy of the liquor manufacturers of other States.

The purpose of committing to Congress the regulation of commerce was to insure equality of commercial facilities by preventing one State from building up her own trade at the expense of sister States. But that purpose is not defeated when a State employs appropriate means to prevent the introduction into her limits of what she lawfully forbids her own people from making. It certainly was not meant to give citizens of other States greater rights in Iowa than Iowa's own people

And that was a statement from one of the greatest jurists who ever sat on that bench.

While dissenting opinions do not make good law they ofttimes express excellent common sense. While the Bowman case merely went to the question of the certificate required by the Iowa statute, being an interference with interstate commerce, the deduction was fair to be drawn therefrom that shipments in original packages could not be disturbed until after delivery to the consignee and sale by him. On page 485 of the Bowman case is this significant language:

So far as these regulations made by Congress extend, they are certainly indications of its intention that the transportation of commodities between the States shall be free, except where it is positively restricted by Congress itself or by the States in particular cases by the express permission of Congress.

Indicating the thought of the court that Congress might give permission to the States to restrict transportation of commodities between the States. Of course, this may very properly be said to be mere obiter dictum. While the Bowman case was determined upon the question of the Iowa law relating to certificates being a regulation of interstate commerce, the indication from the court's opinion was rather strong that the State could not interfere with the shipment in the original package, even after delivery to the consignee, until it was sold and became commingled with the common mass of property within a State. It was therefore natural that circumstances would arise leading to the decision in Leisy v. Hardin (135 U. S., 100). This was likewise a case arising from Iowa. The court there squarely held that the right to import liquors from a sister State and the sale in the original unbroken package was beyond the power of the State law to stop; that the protection of interstate commerce extended even to the sale. And it had been the law that the sale was as much a part of the protection of interstate commerce as the actual transportation. There was nothing startling in this decision, as all the decisions heretofore with relation to the subject of interstate commerce had held that the sale was just as much a part of the commerce as the actual physical transportation. The fact that the sale was an incident to commerce had not at that time been suggested. Under this decision the State was absolutely without power to stop the sale of intoxicating liquors transported from one State into another while they remained in the original package. The bootlegger had an unparalleled era of prosperity. Express offices became distributing points; prohibition laws in the various States amounted to nothing, and the alleged constitutional right to break down State laws enacted for the public health, morality, and sobriety of the people reigned supreme. It was stated by a distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. Baistow] a few days ago on the floor of the Senate, that while the Constitution was in theory the supreme law of the land, yet the will of the people was in fact the supreme law, and nowhere has it been better exemplified than in the demand of the people for relief from the situation arising under the Leisy v. Hardin case (135 U. S., 100). If the constitutional right to transport in interstate commerce involved the right likewise to sell, as was held in the Leisy case, then there was absolutely no relief for the people from this situation.

Some of the language of the court in that case is instructive as well as interesting, although the language of the court seemed to indicate that legislation might be enacted by Congress prohibiting importation from abroad or from a sister State. The court said:

The court said:

That ardent spirits, distilled liquors, ale, and beer are subjects of exchange, barter, and traffic, like any other commodity in which a right of traffic exists, and are so recognized by the usages of the commercial world, the laws of Congress, and the decisions of courts is not denied. Being thus articles of commerce, can a State in the absence of legislation on the part of Congress prohibit their importation from abroad or from a sister State or when imported prohibit their sale by the importer? If the importation can not be prohibited without the consent of Congress, when does property imported from abroad, or from a sister State, so become part of the common mass of property within a State as to be subject to its unimpeded control?

Articles in such a condition as tend to spread disease are not merchantable, are not legitimate subjects of trade and commerce, and the self-protecting power of each State therefore may be rightfully exerted against their introduction, and such exercise of power can not be considered a regulation of commerce prohibited by the Constitution; and the observations of Mr. Justice Catron, in the License Cases (5 How., 504, 599), are quoted to the effect that what does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State, but that which does belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Quoting with approval, Mr. Justice Matthews in Rowman con-

United States.

Quoting with approval, Mr. Justice Matthews, in Bowman case, thus proceeds (p. 493): "For the purpose of protecting its people against the evils of intemperance, it has the right to prohibit the manufacture within its limits of intoxicating liquors; it may also prohibit all domestic commerce in them between its own inhabitants, whether the articles are introduced from other States or from foreign countries; it may punish those who sell them in violation of its laws; it may adopt any measures tending, even indirectly and remotely, to make the policy effective until it passes the line of power delegated to Congress, express or implied, regulate commerce between its people and those of the other States of the Union in order to effect its end, however desirable such a regulation might be."

The conclusion follows that as the grant of the power to regulate

The conclusion follows that, as the grant of the power to regulate commerce among the States, so far as one system is required, is exclusive, the States can not exercise that power without the assent of Congress, and, in the absence of legislation, it is left for the courts to determine when State action does or does not amount to such exercise; or, in other words, what is or is not a regulation of such commerce. When that is determined, controversy is at an end.

* * the responsibility is upon Congress, so far as the regulation of interstate commerce is concerned, to remove the restriction upon the State in dealing with imported articles of trade within its limits, which have not been mingled with the common mass of property therein, if in its judgment the end to be secured justifies and requires such action.

The plaintiffs in error are citizens of Illinois, are not pharmacists, and have no permit, but import into Iowa beer, which they sell in original packages, as described. Under our decision in Bowman v. Chicago, etc., Railway Co., supra, they had the right to import this beer into that State, and in the view which we have expressed they had the right to sell it, by which act alone it would become mingled in the common mass of property within the State. Up to that point of time we hold that in the absence of congressional permission to do so the State had no power to interfere by seizure, or any other action, in prohibition of importation and sale by the foreign or nonresident importer. Whatever our individual views may be as to the deleterious or dangerous qualities of particular articles, we can not hold that any articles which Congress recognizes as subject of interstate commerce are not such, or that whatever are thus recognized can be controlled by State laws amounting to regulations while they retain that character; although at the same time, if directly dangerous in themselves, the State may take appropriate measures to guard against injury before it obtains complete jurisdiction over them. To concede to a State the power to exclude, directly or indirectly, articles so situated, without congressional permission, is to concede to a majority of the people of a State, represented in the State legislature, the power to regulate commercial intercourse between the States by determining what shall be its subjects, when that power was distinctly granted to be exercised by the people of the United States, represented in Congress, and its possession by the latter was considered essential to that more perfect union which the Constitution was adopted to create. Undoubtedly there is difficulty in drawing the line between the municipal powers of the one government and the commercial powers of the other.

It must be noted that a strong dissenting opinion was filed by three of the justices in this case, Justice Gray saying, among others:

The police power extends not only to things intrinsically dangerous to the public health, such as infected rags or diseased meat, but to things which, when used in a lawful manner, are subjects of property and of commerce, and yet may be used so as to be injurious or dangerous to the life, the health, or the morals of the people. Gunpowder, for instance, is a subject of commerce and of lawful use, yet, because of its explosive and dangerous quality, all admit that the State may regulate its keeping and sale. And there is no article the right of the State to control or to prohibit the sale or manufacture of which within its limits is better established than intoxicating liquors. (License cases, 5 How., 504; Downham v. Alexandria Council, 10 Wall., 173; Baxteneyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall., 129; Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S., 25; Tiernan v. Rinker, 102 U. S., 123; Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S., 201; Mugler v. Kansas and Kansas v. Ziebold. 123 U. S., 623; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S., 1; Ellenbecker v. Plymouth County Court, 134 U. S., 31.

Nor is the case affected by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. As was said in the unanimous opinion of this court in Barbier v. Connolly, after stating the true scope of that amendment, "But neither the amendment, broad and comprehensive as it is, nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the State, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the State, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity." (113 U. S., 27, 31.) Upon that ground the amendment has been adjudged not to apply to a State statute prohibiting the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors in buildings long before constructed for the purpose or the sale of oleomargarine lawfully manufactured for the purpose of the statute. (Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 623, 663; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S., 678, 683, 687.)

If the statutes of a State restricting or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its territory are to be held inoperative and void as applied to liquors sent or brought from another State and sold by the importer in what are called original packages, the consequence must be that an inhabitant of any State may, under the pretext of interstate commerce, and without license or supervision of any public authority, carry or send into, and sell in, any or all of the other States of the Union intoxicating liquors of whatever description, in cases or kegs, or even in single bottles or flasks, despite any legislation of those States on the subject, and although his own State should be the only one which had not enacted similar laws. It would require positive and explicit legislation on the part of Congress to convince us that it contemplated or intended such a result.

And it is important in all this language of the court, particularly the majority opinion, to note that while they held the right to import carried with it the right to sell in the original package, yet they used such language as-

We hold that in the absence of congressional permission to do

Again-

Without congressional permission,

And, quoting the language in an opinion of Mr. Justice Mat-

It can not without the consent of Congress, express or implied, regulate commerce between its people.

So the implication can readily be drawn from this case, and it is strong, that the court thought the power rested with Congress to take an article out of interstate commerce. The outcry against the opinion in this case was so strong that Congress was moved shortly thereafter, and within five or six months to pass what is known as the Wilson Act, found on page 3177, volume 3 of the United States Statutes, and that act was as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State and Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

It is quite apparent that it was the intention of Congress, and it so appears from the debates, that the police power of the States in dealing with the regulation of intoxicating liquors should attach before sale or even before delivery. An action was commenced soon thereafter to test the constitutionality of the Wilson Act, and practically the same claims were made as to the harrowing and destructive effect of that act and the unconstitutionality thereof as are now made with reference to this

This case came up from the State of Kansas and was argued by eminent counsel, and is perhaps one of the most important cases ever determined by the Supreme Court with reference to the commerce clause of the Constitution. The court held the the commerce clause of the Constitution. The court held the Wilson Act to be constitutional, using the following significant language (In re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545):

The power of the State to impose restraints and burdens upon persons and property in conservation and promotion of the public health, good order, and prosperity is a power originally and always belonging to the States, not surrendered by them to the General Government nor directly restrained by the Constitution of the United States, and essentially exclusive.

The fourteenth amendment, in forbidding a State to make or enforce any law abridging the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States or to deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, or to deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws, did not invest and did not attempt to invest Congress with power to legislate upon subjects which are within the domain of State legislation.

The power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States, when the subjects of that power are national in their nature, is also exclusive. The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraint. Therefore, it has been determined that the failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject shall be free from restrictions or impositions upon it by the several States.

And the fact must find its support in this, whether the prohibited article belongs to and is subject to be regulated as part of foreign commerce or of commerce among the States. If from its nature it does not belong to commerce, or if its condition, from putrescence or other cause, is such when it is about to enter the State that it no longer belongs to commerce, or, in other words, is not a commercial article, then the State power may exclude its introduction. * * * And here is the limit between the sovereign power of the State and the Federal power. That is to say, that which does not belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State, and that which does belong to commerce is within the jurisdiction of the United States. And to this limit must all the general views come, as I suppose, that were suggested in the reasoning of this court in the cases of Gibbons v. Ogden, Brown v. The State of Maryland, and New York v. Miin.

By the adoption of the Constitution the ability of the several States to act upon the matter solely in accordance with their own will was extinguished and the legislative will of the General Government substituted. No affirmative guaranty was thereby given to any State of the right to demand as between it and the others what it could not have obtained before; while the object was undoubtedly sought to be attained of preventing commercial regulations partial in their character or contrary to the common interests. And the magnificent growth and prosperity of the country attest the success which has attended the accomplishment of that object. But this furnishes no support to the position that Congress could not, in the exercise of the discretion reposed in it, concluding that the common interests did not require entire freedom in the traffic in ardent spirits, enact the law in question. In so doing Congress has not attempted to delegate the power to regulate commerce or to exercise any power reserved to the States or to grant a power not possessed by the States or to adopt State laws. It has taken its own course and made its own regulation, applying to these subjects of interstate commerce one commerce undersumed the subjects of interstate commerce one commerce

No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain designated subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within its competency to

The framers of the Constitution never intended that the legislative power of the Nation should find itself incapable of disposing of a subject matter specifically committed to its charge. The manner of that disposition brought into determination upon this record involves no ground for adjudging the act of Congress inoperative and void.

Congress did not use terms of permission to the State to act, but simply removed an impediment to the enforcement of the State laws in respect to imported packages in their original condition, created by the absence of a specific utterance on its part. It imparted no power to the State not then possessed, but allowed imported property to fall at once upon arrival within the local jurisdiction.

This is not the case of a law enacted in the unauthorized exercise of a power exclusively confided to Congress, but of a law which it was competent for the State to pass, but which could not operate upon articles occupying a certain situation until the passage of the act of

It will be observed, in passing, that the Wilson Act, construed in the Rahrer case, is the same as the second section of the in the Kanter case, is the same as the second section of the present bill, with the exception that the words are added in this bill, "and before delivery to the consignee." Practically the same arguments were brought against that act as are now brought against this bill. The court recognized in this case that an article may be taken out of commerce by Congress; that Congress has the power to remove such article from commerce; that by such legislation Congress does not delegate the power to regulate commerce or to exercise any power reserved to the States, or to enlarge the police power of the States, or grant a power not possessed by them; that Congress has made its own regula-tion, the uniformity of which is not affected by the variations in the State laws dealing with such property, and particularly significant is the language of the court, that-

No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within the competency of Congress to

That suggestion of the court has never been answered by the opponents of this class of legislation. The next important case dealing with this question is that of Rhodes v. Iowa (170 U. S., 412), and the court there held that the term "upon arrival within the State" meant delivery to the consignee and separated interstate commerce for the first time into two divisions— the fundamentals of interstate commerce and the incidents thereof-holding that the sale was a mere incident of such commerce, and that the actual transportation was the fundamentality. It is difficult to understand why the protection of the commerce clause should apply to the transportation and not the sale. Transportation without sale is ineffective, and had been so recognized for the last 50 years of decisions. In the Rhodes case the court said:

while it is true that the right to sell free from State interference interstate-commerce merchandise was held in Leisy v. Hardin to be an essential incident to interstate commerce, it was yet but an incident, as the contract of sa's within a State in its nature was usually subject to the control of the legislative authority of the State. On the other hand, the right to contract for the transportation of merchandise from one State into or across another involved interstate commerce in its fundamental aspect, and imported in its very essence a relation which necessarily must be governed by laws apart from the laws of the several States, since it embraced a contract which must come under the laws of more than one State. The purpose of Congress to submit the incidental power to sell to the dominion of State authority should not without the clearest implication be held to imply the purpose of subjecting to State laws a contract which in its very object and nature was not susceptible of such regulation, even if the constitutional right to do so existed, as to which no opinion is expressed.

And it was doubtless this construction, which caused the court to observe in the opinion in In re Rahrer (140 U. S., 545, 552) that the act of Congress "divests them (objects of interstate-commerce shipment) of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case." We think that, interpreting the statute by the light of all its provisions, it was not intended to and did not cause the power of the State to attach to an interstate-commerce shipment while the merchandise was in transit under such shipment and until its arrival at the point of destination and delivery there to the consignee; and, of course, this conclusion renders it entirely unnecessary to consider whether, if the act of Congress had submitted the right to make interstate-commerce shipments subject to State control, it would be repugnant to the Constitution.

It will be noted that the court does not determine the question, but leaves it expressly undecided whether, if the act of Congress had submitted the right to make interstate-commerce shipments subject to State control, it would be repugnant to the Constitution; but the inference might be drawn fairly from the case that the court had such thought in mind. It is interesting, likewise, to note that a strong dissenting opinion was filed in this case by Justices Gray, Harlan, and Brown, who did not take the same view of the term "arrival in the State," but took the following view, as expressed by them:

The opinions heretofore delivered in this court upon the effect of the act of Congress of 1890, although they do not decide, clearly imply that the "arrival in such State" contemplated and intended by the act is an arrival within the territorial limits and jurisdiction of the State.

The statute under which the Rhodes case was decided is practically the same as the statute under which the Bowman case was decided. It will be noted that the court interpreted the Wilson Act as not intending to or causing the power of the State to attach to an interstate shipment whilst the merchandise was in transit under such shipment. The distinction between fundamental and incidental commerce had not before been referred to. As to the constitutional aspect of the application of a law or principle which recognized the power of a State operating through its police power to stop a shipment at the border thereof and thus entirely prevent interstate commerce, is re-tained to be discussed in relation to the second section of this

In American Express Co. v. Iowa (196 U. S., 133) the question of the operation of the Iowa law under this Wilson Act as to a C. O. D. shipment from the State of Illinois is discussed. court held that the contract was complete in Illinois, that the shipment into Iowa constituted interstate commerce, and that there was the right to sell in the original package.

The last important case dealing with this subject is Louisville & Nashville Railway Co. against Cook Brewing Co. Kentucky had a statute prohibiting common carriers from transporting intoxicating liquors from dry points in Kentucky. The court held this to be a valid enactment as to the intrastate shipment but not effective as to the interstate shipment, but as to that was an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce. The court says:

By a long line of decisions, beginning even prior to Leisy v. Hardin, it has been indisputably a detriment.

(a) That beer and other intoxicating liquors are a recognized legitimate subject of interstate commerce.

(b) That it is not competent for any State to forbid any common carrier to transport such articles from a consignor in one State to a consignee in another.

(c) That until such transportation is concluded by the delivery to the consignee such commodities do not become subject to State regulation restricting their sale or disposition.

The court plants its decision upon the ground that the Wilson Act does not apply before actual delivery to the consignee. The language of this case would seem upon casual reading to be strongly against the purpose of the present bill, but a careful analysis thereof would indicate that it is not at all conclusive as to the bill in question. That beer and other intoxicating liquors are a recognized subject of interstate commerce is not questioned, but they would not be a recognized subject of interstate commerce if Congress in its power over that subject removed them from interstate commerce. True, of course, is division (b) that a State can not forbid a common carrier to transport from one State to another such articles, but the complete answer to this is that Congress may forbid. Division (c) is answered by the thought that the term "State regulation" is expressly used, but, as in the Rahrer case, there is no reason why Congress may not remove from interstate commerce articles which otherwise would be under the protection of that clause until delivery and sale, and the court seems to emphasize the thought that the receiving for transportation to consignees in Kentucky from consignors in other States could not be prohibited by any State law, and why? Simply because it would be an unlawful regulation of interstate commerce not authorized by Congress. No power exists to remove that impediment or to regulate that interstate commerce but Congress, and Congress by this bill establishes a uniform rule of regulating interstate commerce by removing the impediment to the exercise of the police power.

In Delamater v. South Dakota (205 U. S., 93) the question arose as to the law of South Dakota imposing an annual license charge on traveling salesmen offering for sale or soliciting orders for intoxicating liquors in quantities less than 5 gallons. It was held that this was a police regulation and not a taxing act and was constitutional and within the purview of the Wilson Act. The court said:

Wilson Act. The court said:

It is settled by a line of decisions of this court, noted in the margin, that the purpose of the Wilson Act, as a regulation by Congress of interstate commerce, was to allow the States, as to intoxicating liquors, when the subject of such commerce, to exert ampler power than could have been exercised before the enactment of the statute. In other words, that Congress, sedulous to prevent its exclusive right to regulate commerce, from interfering with the power of the States over intoxicating liquor, by the Wilson Act adopted a special rule enabling the States to extend their authority as to such liquor shipped from other States before it became commingled with the mass of other property in the State by a sale in the original package.

That act, as we have seen, manifested the conviction of Congress that control by the States over the traffic of dealing in liquor within their borders was of such importance that it was wise to adopt a special regulation of interstate commerce on the subject. When, then, for the carrying out of this purpose the regulation expressly provided that intoxicating liquors coming into a State should be as completely under the control of a State as if the liquor had been manufactured therein, it would be, we think, a disregard of the purposes of Congress to hold that the owner of intoxicating liquors in one State can, by virtue of the commerce clause, go himself or send his agent into such other State, there, in defiance of the law of the State, to carry on the business of soliciting proposals for the purchase of intoxicating liquors.

The ruling thus made is particularly pertinent to the subject of intoxicating liquors and the power of the State in respect thereto. As we have seen, the right of the States to prohibit the sale of liquor within their respective jurisdictions in and by virtue of the regulation of commerce embodies in the Wilson Act is absolutely applicable to liquor shipped from one State into another after delivery and before the sale in the original package. It follows that the authority of the States, so far as the sale of intoxicating liquors within their borders is concerned, is just as complete as is their right to regulate within their jurisdiction the making of contracts of insurance. It hence must be that the authority of the States to forbid agents of nonresident liquor dealers from coming within their borders to solicit contracts for the purchase of intoxicating liquors which otherwise the citizen of the State "would not have thought of making" must be as complete and efficacious as is such authority in relation to contracts of insurance, especially in view of the conceptions of public order and social well-being which it may be assumed lie at the foundation of regulations concerning the traffic in liquor.

In Adams Express Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky (214)

In Adams Express Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky (214 U. S., 218) the decision was based on the Wilson Act. court there followed the Rhodes case in holding that the State law would not attach to any interstate shipment until the completion of the transit by delivery to the consignee.

I have attempted in this to review impartially all the cases of the Supreme Court dealing with this important question. They are difficult to reconcile. An interesting discussion of this matter is found in the statement of the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who has so lately been called to his reward, when this question was before the Judiciary Committee of the United States Senate some years ago. As great a lawyer as Senator Rayner-and no better, in my judgment, has ever graced this Senate—was unable to harmonize these various cases. Speaking to the committee of the fundamental and incidental right as set forth in the Rhodes case, he said, and his language will be found on page 6 of the report:

Will be found on page 6 of the report:

There is no separation between them, because a matter of sale is not an incident; a sale is a fundamental right, and if you destroy a matter of sale you destroy a right under the Constitution. * * * I do not see any difference between a package before it gets into the hands of a consignee and that package after it gets into the hands of a consignee and is opened. I think if you can stop the right to sell it you can stop it in transit. I can not get into my mind the slightest distinction between an incidental right and a fundamental right under the Constitution, because there is a line of cases which I have read in which the Supreme Court has held that the right of sale is absolutely a fundamental right and not an incident.

The following interesting conversation took place, or, rather, statements:

Senator RAYNER. The same courts have held that we could absolutely stop the sale of whisky. In the Indian Tribe cases they come right down to the doctrine of the absolute prohibition of the sale of whisky. Now, the question I want to submit to the committee is this: Assuming that we can stop the sale of whisky—

Senator Nelson. In the Indian cases that was put upon the ground that the Indians were our wards.
Senator RAYNER. No; I have got the briefs and records, and they show that point was not argued at all. It was assumed that we could stop the sale of whisky any place we wanted to, either to the Indians or to anybody else.
Senator BACON. In the United States?
Senator BAYNER. Yes. Now, could we pass a law to-day prohibiting the sale of whisky?
Senator FULTON. You mean prohibiting its entering into interstate commerce?

Senator RAYNER, Yes. Then, if we can do the greater, why can we not do the less? If we can pass a law prohibiting the sale of whisky from State to State, why can we not pass a law removing an impediment, so far as the States are concerned, and make whisky subject to the police regulations of the State when it reaches the boundary of the State? Does not whisky stand on a different footing from an inneurous article?

That is a point that her given me trouble. Would a low second by nocuous article?

That is a point that has given me trouble. Would a law passed by Congress to-day, stopping the sale of whisky, be a valid law? If it would be a valid law, why can we not say to the State that it can pass a law prohibiting the importation of whisky into the State or say to it that we give the State the right, when the article reaches its boundaries, to subject it to the police regulations of the State? I have not come to any conclusions, in my mind, upon that question. I have examined the question thoroughly.

I am satisfied, however, that Scnator Rayner had serious doubt as to the constitutionality of this law. This emphasizes the fact heretofore expressed by me, that honest lawyers, frank with themselves, must concede that the questions involved are exceedingly troublesome; but inasmuch as the Supreme Court has expressly left open the question, it would seem that this was a proper case to place the matter squarely before them in order that a question of such great importance might be deter-

THE QUESTION OF PERSONAL USE.

It has been claimed by opponents of this measure, in literature which they have industriously circulated, that this bill would prevent a person securing intoxicating liquor for his own personal use. It would be sufficient answer to this contention to ask a careful reading of the bill from anyone upon whom the attempt was made so to deceive. I am not here to argue either for or against the right of a person to have intoxicating liquors for his or her own use. No State has attempted to prevent the personal use of liquors except in so far as it might be said the prevention of sales might indirectly affect it. But if a State should undertake to penalize a person for the use of liquors (of course excluding questions of where he becomes drunk and a nuisance) it would, in my judgment, violate the constitutional right which inheres in citizenship, so that if a State should pass such law the present measure could not affect it, as such State law would in all probability be held unconstitu-tional. Were the State to pass such a law, and if the same should be upheld by the courts, then, of course, this bill would affect it, but it is a far-fetched conclusion. Men differ on the question as to the right to use liquor for personal use being a right protected by the Constitution. Two interesting cases on this proposition have arisen, one the case of Scott v. Donald (165 U. S., 107) and the other Vance v. Vandercook (170 U. S., 436). Both cases arose under the South Carolina statutes, and in the Vance v. Vandercook case the court said that:

The right of persons in one State to ship liquor into another State to a resident for his own use is derived from the Constitution of the United States, and does not rest on the ground of State law.

The Supreme Court had held in the Rhodes case that under the Wilson law Congress had not submitted intoxicating liquors shipped for sale to the jurisdiction of the State into which they were shipped until delivery to the consignee. In Vance against Vandercook the court was viewing the situation where the delivery of a package of liquor to the original consignee was intrefered with by the State statute. The State statute imposed conditions on such shipment, and the only importations that could be made for sale were to the officers of the State. It is quite apparent that the case did not turn upon the question of personal use, but rather upon the conditions imposed upon the shipment to an original consignee in the original package, and such legislation clearly interfered with such shipment.

In Scott against Donald the court said:

It is sufficient for the present cases to hold, as we do, that when a State recognizes the manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors as lawful, it can not discriminate against the bringing of such articles in and importing them from other States; that such legislation is void as a hindrance to interstate commerce and an unjust preference of the products of the enacting State as against similar products of the other States.

And there the law was held unconstitutional solely because it discriminated against the bringing of such articles in and importing them from other States and not because the a were intended for personal use. 'The court further said:

It is not a law purporting to forbid the importation or manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating liquors as articles detrimental to the welfare of the State and to the health of the inhabitants, and hence it is not within the scope and operation of the act of Congress of August, not w 1890.

These cases were again referred to in Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw (198 U. S., 25). There the court, in construing the Wilson law, said:

In so far, however, as the State law imposed burdens on the right to ship liquor from another State to a resident of South Carolina, intended for his own use, and not for sale within the State, the law was held to be repugnant to the Constitution, because the Wilson Act, whilst it delegated to the State plenary power to regulate the sale of liquors in South Carolina, shipped into the State from other States, did not recognize the right of a State to prevent an individual from ordering-liquors from outside of the State of his residence for his own consumption and not for sale.

In Heyman v. Southern Railway Co. (203 U. S., 270), the liquors in controversy were seized before delivery, so that the case was similar to the Rhodes case, and they quoted, with approval from Vance against Vandercook, as follows:

It follows that under the Constitution of the United States every resident of South Carolina is free to receive for his own use liquor from other States and that the inhibitions of a State statute do not operate to prevent liquors from other States from being shipped into such State for the order of a resident for his use.

And they refer to the ruling in Vance against Vandercook, as upholding the right of a citizen of one State to bring from au-other State into the State of his residence and keep therein for his personal use the merchandise referred to in the Wilson

It has been decided, as reference has heretofore been made in Mugler against Kansas, that the right to manufacture intoxicating liquors for one's personal use was not an inalienable right.

In Kidd against Pearson, it was held that there was no right in a citizen to manufacture liquors contrary to the laws of his State, notwithstanding the fact that they were intended for exportation. There is no practical trouble with the personal-use question. There is no attempt on the part of anybody to construct a law that shall prevent personal use or prevent shipment for personal use, and this bill does not do so.

Mr. President, I had very much hoped to finish my remarks to-day, and I had hurried about as fast as I could, but have not covered everything I wanted to cover. I think I can finish in 10 or 15 minutes to-morrow morning, and at that time I am going to ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Crawford] to yield to me. I will not occupy over 10 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I give notice that, at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow morning, I shall ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the omnibus claims bill, and I shall be glad to have the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] conclude his remarks.

Mr. LODGE. I call attention to the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has given notice of a speech tomorrow morning, but I understand it is to be a very brief one.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Of course I do not desire to interfere with a notice of that kind.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. President. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massa-chusetts makes the point of no quorum, and the roll will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Lodge McLean Martin, Va O'Gorman Smith, Ariz. Smith, Ga. Smith, S. C. Ashurst Culberson Curtis Dixon du Pont Fletcher Gallinger Bacon Bailey Smith, S. C. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last sitting of the Senate as a Court of Impeach-

The Secretary read the Journal of Monday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any inaccuracies in the Journal? If not, it will stand approved. Counsel for the respondent will proceed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, when the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourned yesterday Mr. Saums was under direct examination. I should be very glad if he might be allowed to stand aside for the present. We have a number of gentlemen here whose time is of great importance and we should like to examine them first.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I understand Mr. Saums is not to be excused.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; he is not to be excused. My direct examination has not been finished.

Mr. President, I wish to introduce Mr. M. J. Martin, of the Scranton bar, who is associated in the defense of Judge Archbald and who has been kept away thus far by circumstances over which he had no control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The name of Mr. Martin will be entered in the record as of counsel for the respondent

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask that Col. Phillips be called.

REESE A. PHILLIPS-RECALLED.

Reese A. Phillips, heretofore sworn, was recalled and was further examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you have a conversation with Christopher G. Boland after the Truesdale meeting you told us about on the 5th of October, 1911?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after that?-A. Two or three weeks.

Q. I want to ask you what took place at that conversationif there was anything said on the subject of the claim of the Marian Coal Co. against the railroad company?—A. Yes, sir.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object. Counsel is inquiring about a subsequent transaction and is asking about something that Mr. Boland said to the witness. We fail to see wherein that could be material or in rebuttal of anything we have brought out.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, the Truesdale conference, which of course the Chair will remember, when Mr. Watson presented his claim to the president of the Lackawanna road and other officials, was held on the 5th of October, and the evidence shows that shortly after that time Mr. Watson ceased to have anything to do with that matter.

There is also in evidence here a letter written by Judge Archbald, dated the 13th of November, addressed to C. G. Boland, under the name of "My Dear Christy," in which he refers to the interview he had with an official of the Lackawanna road in presenting this claim, Mr. Loomis being the person referred to, and informing Mr. Boland that his efforts were unsuccessful.

We stated in the opening here that we expected to show before we got through with this case that Christopher G. Boland, after Mr. Watson had ceased to have anything to do with this matter, came to Judge Archbald and implored him to go on and try to bring about a settlement, because the troubles with the railroad company were affecting the mind of his brother, William P. Boland. Now, we wish to show that at the same time and before this letter of November 13 was written, Christopher G. Boland came to the official of the railroad company and urged a settlement upon precisely the same grounds.

Now, since Mr. Boland has been upon the stand here to substantiate the claim of the managers that the whole effort on the part of Judge Archbald to bring about this settlement was for the purpose of using his influence with the railroad company to get them to pay something that they did not owe, I think it is very important for us and proper for us to be allowed to show that Christopher G. Boland himself went to the railroad company and was making the representations at the same time without any intervention of Judge Archbald.

I read from page 412 the ruling the Chair made at the time:

The President pro tempore. Do the managers expect to connect Judge Archbald with this particular matter in any way?

Mr. Manager Flove. With this particular proposition that was made we do not. This was a proposition made by Mr. Boland on his own responsibility after the negotiation in which Judge Archbald had participated had entirely failed.

The President pro tempore. It is not the purpose then to hold Judge Archbald responsible?

Mr. Manager Flove. Not to hold him responsible in any way for this particular transaction.

The President pro tempore. The testimony on the part of the managers might be admitted, in the opinion of the Chair, to complete particular transaction.

The President pro tempore. The testimony on the part of the agers might be admitted, in the opinion of the Chair, to complete their witness

And then he went on to tell-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What page is that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Page 412, about the top of the page.

On page 411, the middle of the page, appears the question on which this discussion arose:

Q. (By Mr. Manager FLOYD.) Did you, in conferring with the officers of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., namely, Mr. Phillips and Mr. Loomis, make a proposition of settlement to either of them and did they make a counter proposition to you? If so, state what the propositions were.

That was objected to, and was held to be competent.

Now, we want to give Mr. Phillips's account of that conversation, which is important, because Christopher G. Boland was allowed to testify to it, and more important for the reasons I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear from the manager.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Now, Mr. President, we think it would be perfectly competent to prove by Mr. Boland—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the manager will permit, the Chair will ask the Reporter to read the question.

The Reporter read the question as follows:

Q. I want to ask you what took place at that conversation; if there was anything said on the subject of the claim of the Marian Coal Co. against the railroad company.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Now, Mr. President, we think it would be competent for them to prove by Mr. Boland what he may have said, but counsel is seeking to prove by this witness some conversation or conference between this witness and Mr. Boland. It does not seem to me that that kind of testimony is admissible, unless its purpose be to contradict something Mr. Boland said about it. If that is his purpose, then it might, and I think would, be admissible; but if it is simply to confirm something that Mr. Boland said it is in the nature of purely hearsay, and would not be admissible. That is why we object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire of counsel if it is proposed by this testimony to contradict what

Mr. Boland said?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is to give a very different account of the same conversation he was asked about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it for the purpose of contradicting him?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know what the evidence is to be.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have stated the substance of the evidence. I have said that we offer to prove that Mr. Boland implored Mr. Phillips to bring about a settlement of the claim of the Marian Coal Co. against the railroad company, not because of anything Mr. Boland said there, but because the troubles of the Marian Coal Co. were affecting his brothers' mind; and he implored him on account of his feeling for his brother to bring about a settlement of the claim.

The Chair must remember that we expect to prove that at almost the identical time Mr. Boland was making the same sort of an appeal to Judge Archbald to induce him to go to see Mr. Loomis on this last occasion, and then comes here-not say what he comes here for. That is apparent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is for the purpose of contradicting a witness, the counsel would have the right to proceed.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. As I understand the conversation, the matter to which counsel for the respondent refers, he himself objected, and we were permitted only to prove that there was a proposition submitted and the amount. That is my recollection of the matter and the conversation. What was said, what was discussed, was excluded, and only the mere fact that a proposition was made was admitted, and the witness was allowed to state the amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair finds upon reference to the page stated by the counsel that the witness was not permitted to go into the details of the conversation, but only to state the fact. The Chair thinks, however, that without going into the matter in detail, counsel should be permitted to prove any fact that would tend to contradict the testimony of a former witness.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. In that case I must lead the witness's mind to the precise point instead of asking him to state what occurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) State whether at that interview anything was said by Christopher G. Boland in reference to the reason why he wanted the claim settled .- A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. He stated that his brother—
Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. If counsel would call attention to the particular testimony that this is intended to contradict the Chair would be in a better position to rule upon it. simple fact of a conversation was all that was proved before.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understand him to say that is all he did-that he went there and made a proposition.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. It was all he was permitted to say. Mr. WORTHINGTON. It seems to me if they were allowed to prove that he went there and made a proposition he ought to be allowed to finish the sentence. If he said, "We went there and made the proposition because," I think he ought not to be cut off at the "because."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will admit the tes-

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) State any reason Mr. Christopher G. Boland gave you on that occasion for wishing to have the claim of the Marian Coal Co. against the railroad company settled .- A. He stated in a very affecting way, with tears rolling and coursing down his cheeks, that he was worried and fretting about his brother Will; that he was afraid he would lose his mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair limits it to the distinct proposition as to what the witness proposed and the reason he gave for it; not all the possibilities.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I hope the Chair did not misunderstand me. I claim only that he ought to be permitted to finish the sentence. When he said he made his proposition and said he wanted it carried through "because," we ought to be allowed to follow up the word "because"; and this is following

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness could not go further than the rule would permit. He can state what he desired and his reason without going into the detailed conversation. If it was because of the interest of his brother it would be sufficient for him to state that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. With that ruling of the Chair, I have nothing further to ask the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be an interminable matter if all possible conversations of the parties were admitted.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We have no questions, Mr. President.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I feel bound to ask this witness a question since he is here. [To the witness:] Do not answer for the present. Having tendered him as a witness I feel bound to ask him whether he was to receive any of the $60,000 that has been referred to in the testimony.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not want it said hereafter that we brought him here and did not offer to ask him that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If he should say "no," would be an issue upon which the other side would be justified in introducing evidence. There would be no termination to a proceeding of that kind.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Then I have no further questions to ask.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We have no questions. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Call Maj. Warren.

TESTIMONY OF EVERETT WARREN.

Everett Warren, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Where do you reside?-A. I reside in the city of Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your profession?-A. I am a practicing lawyer; in general practice.

Q. In Scranton?—A. In Scranton and elsewhere.

Q. How long have you been practicing there and elsewhere?-A. I have been practicing law for a little over 30 years.

Q. And mainly in Scranton?-A. I should say mainly in Scranton; yes, sir.

Q. And to what other bailiwicks has your practice extended?—A. I have tried cases in other counties than Lackawanna County, which is the county of which Scranton is the county seat, and in several counties in the State, and in the Federal courts in Pennsylvania, and indeed in some other jurisdictions.

Q. Are you in practice by yourself or in a firm?—A. now a member of the firm of Warren, Knapp & O'Malley.

Q. Composed of whom besides yourself?-A. Composed of myself, Judge Knapp, Mr. O'Malley, and Mr. Hill.

Q. How long have you been a member of that firm?-A. The firm was changed after the death of Judge Willard, the senior member of the firm, in 1910. The firm had been Willard, Warren & Knapp for a good many years, except while he was a member of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania.

Q. In a very general way, what is the nature of your practice?-A. We have a general practice up in the provinces; I might say we run the whole gamut of the law. We represent in Scranton the Eric Railroad as its local counsel, the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., the capital stock of which I understand is controlled by the Erie.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I should like to know from the respondent's counsel the purpose of interrogating the witness in detail about his business. I suppose he intends to ask him about the character of Judge Archbald, to which we have no objection, but, to go into the character of this witness, giving an account of his business and giving the range of it and the scope of it, we do not think is proper. We think he should come at once to the character of the judge, and unless respondent's counsel can indicate the purpose of the range of this examination and the necessity for it, we shall have to object.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As I had finished all I wished to ask the witness on that point, I will not reply to the manager's objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest that that line of inquiry is certainly not elucidating any issue, and will very largely encumber the record if it is pursued in each case, a possibility it might be well to try to avoid.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As I have already said, Mr. President, since I have already asked all I intend to ask on that line, I will not make any argument upon it. If the question arises hereafter, I may want to be heard upon it. The learned manager assumed that I did not intend to ask this witness anything except about the character of Judge Archbald.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I did not indulge in any such assumption, but I thought that was what counsel was next I did not indulge in any such going into; and I made the objection, so that the court could direct the attention of counsel for the respondent to the point to which the manager has directed it, so my brother might not be guilty of that error hereafter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When I am convicted by the court I will plead guilty.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?—A. I am very well acquainted with him.

Q. In a general way what is the nature of your acquaintance with him?-A. I have known Judge Archbald ever since I was a small boy. I have been before him in a great many As I was saying when objection was made, I am in general practice and I have been in very active practice, and, generally speaking, for the last 20 or 25 years I have been the trial lawyer of the firm; I do not mean to say exclusively, but generally, and as such I have been before Judge Archbald in many, many cases.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I want to renew the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the personal history of the witness is not a matter that is at issue here, or his personal character or professional work.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, may I say—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the objection.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I want to say that this witness is a lawyer, and ought not to offend against the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I insist that everything this witness has testified to is proper and competent from our point of view.

This witness, Mr. President, is one who contributed to that purse, and is it not important for us to show what were his relations to Judge Archbald, so that the Senate may judge whether it was intended as an honorable and proper gift or as

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is on that line, among others, that am examining this witness

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If counsel will confine himself within those limitations, he will be proceeding in order. He may proceed.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Tell us whether or not you did contribute to the purse that was presented to Judge Archbald in 1910 before he went to Europe?—A. I did; yes, sir.
Q. Tell us the circumstances of it.—A. I want to say that that purse originated with some of his friends at the bar. I can not now recall just the particular person who suggested it to me, but I remember that at one time some of us were together in one of the antercoms waiting for the court to meet. I remember the occasion. We had been advised that his wife's relative-I can not remember now what the relationship wasinvited them to go to Europe at the expense of this relative of Mrs. Archbald, and I remember the suggestion was made that it would be very desirable for us to do something to make it at least enjoyable to the judge. We knew he had not been there, and we knew something of his life, something of his frugality, Various suggestions were made, and finally it was thought desirable that we should try to raise a purse. The understanding, of course, was that it was not to be known to him or from whom the purse arranged for came.

I contributed to this proposition. I remember talking with some of my brethren at the bar. I remember asking the clerk, as he had more time than we did, that he communicate with some of the gentlemen around the district whom he knew and felt would desire to be contributors, and I think he did so.

Q. Now, Maj. Warren. I want to ask you to tell us, from your long acquaintance with Judge Archbald and your observation of him as a judge, what were his principal characteristics as a judge as to integrity, ability, and industry.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I object to the question as immaterial and irrelevant. The counsel has a right to ask the witness as to reputation, but I do not believe he can go beyond that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I would not be prepared to argue this matter except for a word or two that fell from the Chair the other day when a witness who had volunteered a statement about Judge Archbald's character was on the stand.

While I recognize the fact that in the ordinary tribunals and in ordinary cases you are confined in asking about the reputation of a party to a formal stereotyped question as to what his reputation is in the community in which he lives, and whether It is good or bad, and you stop there, which amounts to nothing.

I contend that in this case no such rule is applicable or ought to be applied, and that Senators who are to vote upon the question of the guilt or innocence of Judge Archbald ought to know a little more about him than that, and ought to know what kind of a judge he is and what kind of a man he is.

I do not mean to go into great detail about it; I could have this witness say all that I expect to have him say in less time than I have been talking about it; but inasmuch as I expect to ask the same question of several other witnesses who are here in attendance, lifelong associates at the bench and bar and in private of Judge Archbald, I would like to take up the time of the Senate for a moment or two in stating why in this case we think the rule should be more liberal.

I have examined the history of this matter in other impeachment cases. I have here the report of the trial of Judge Chase, who was, as you, Mr. President, well know, a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, and was tried in the Senate, charged with various offenses in his judicial character. On page 297 of this book I find what I shall read, and I should remind the Chair and the Senate that in this trial, which took place in 1805, there were in the Senate, as Members of the Senate and as counsel in the case, men who had been members of the Constitutional Convention which framed our Constitution, and who were presumed to have some idea of what was meant by the impeachment clauses of the Constitution.

I find this sort of examination by Mr. Harper, one of the counsel for Judge Chase:

Mr. Harper. Please to inform this honorable court whether you are accustomed to practice law in the courts where Judge Chase presides?

Mr. PURVIANCE. I am, sir.
Mr. Harper. Is it not his practice frequently to interrupt counsel?
Mr. PURVIANCE. I think so, but I always attributed it to his quickness of apprehension, which induced him rather to anticipate counsel than to listen to them; this I always ascribed to his superior sagacity.

Mr. Harper. Have you seen any difference in his interruptions between counsel with whom he was supposed to be on ill terms and those with whom he was on good terms?

Mr. PURVIANCE. I never observed any difference in his conduct arising from a consideration of persons, but it always appeared to me to arise from the manner in which gentlemen treated the subject. (Trial of Samuel Chase, Vol. I, p. 303.)

I happened upon that passage in opening the book at random, and I give it as a sample of what is there.

I have here the record of the impeachment trial of Judge Peck, district judge of the United States, whose trial occurred in 1831. He was charged with having punished a lawyer for criticizing one of his opinions. I find this precise question was raised there, and this is the way it was disposed of. A lawyer, the Hon. Spencer Pettis, was under examination. I read from page 211 of the report of the trial, published at the close of it, in 1833:

A. I have practiced before him ever since he has been on the bench.

- The witness had said that he practiced law before Judge
- Q. Does not his manner usually become more carnest as he proceeds in the course of an extensive discussion?

This was objected to as a leading question, and in that form it was waived.

Q. What is the effect on Judge Peck's manner when delivering an extended answer to a protracted argument at the bar (for this argument had occupied two days). I ask; what is his usual manner in such cases as he advances?—A. His usual manner, when he says but little and does not speak at length, is very mild, smooth, and easy; but it always occurred to me as a fault in the judge that, in delivering an opinion at great length, he becomes warm and gesticulates much. I remember many cases of this kind, and this manner struck me very foreibly; his usual manner is to become much excited and to use a great deal of gesture.

Q. Have you known the judge long and well?—A. Ever since I have been in Missouri. I am intimately acquainted with him. (Report of the trial of James H. Peck, p. 211.)

There was a situation presented in that case which was exactly what we have here. Then this question was asked:

Q. Is his disposition that of an arbitrary and oppressive man?

Mr. Buchanan. We object to that question.

Mr. Wirt. Do you? Then we must take a question upon it.

(Here a discussion took place between the managers and the counsel, when the form of the question was changed.)

Q. What is the habitual disposition of the judge as to mildness and patience or arbitrary and oppressive propensities?—A. I always viewed him as one among the mildest men I ever knew in my life. He is very patient in the arguments held before him and in all that I know of him. He is a man who shows firmness, however, on all occasions. He is very firm but very mild in his disposition. In these remarks I speak of Judge Peck both in his judicial and his private character. (Report of the trial of James H. Peck, p. 211.)

Now, Mr. President, the chairman of the managers in that case was Mr. Buchanan, who at that time held the office my distinguished friend holds here now as chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House. I need not say anything as to who the counsel was, Mr. Wirt, who with Mr. Buchanan framed that question as a proper one to be asked, nor need I remind the Senate that among the Senators learned in the law was Daniel Webster, at that time chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

But, Mr. President, going far beyond what I have given is the decision of the Senate itself in a vote taken during the trial of Secretary Belknap. I read from page 261 of the report of that trial as published by authority of Congress. It will be remembered, of course, that Mr. Belknap was charged simply with having received bribes while he was Secretary of War from one who, it was claimed, he had appointed to office where he had large opportunities to make money, something in the nature of selling sutlers' supplies. This question arose in the examination of a witness in that case:

of a witness in that case:

Q. From all you know of the subject, and from all you know of Gen. Belknap, I ask you what has been the general character of his administration of the War Department?

Mr. Manager Jenks. Stop. The objection I make to that is that a witness must testify to character instead of to the specific acts of this man or general acts. He must know what has been said by those who are familiar with his administration in that office, instead of how has he done the business.

Mr. Black. It is character in the sense of reputation we are asking about.

Mr. Manager Jenks. It is character in the sense of reputation that you should confine yourself to.

Mr. Manager Hoar. We understand also that it should be the opposite of the particular offense charged. If a man is charged with adultery, his reputation for chastity; if he is charged with perjury, his reputation of the Secretary for official integrity?" (Congressional Record) containing the proceedings of the Senate sitting for the trial of William W. Belknap, p. 261.)

That is what these learned managers say we should be tied

That is what these learned managers say we should be tied down to in this case.

Mr. Carpenter (to the witness). Answer the question.
The Witness, I ask the question to be read.
The question was read by the Reporter.
Mr. Manager Hoar (to Mr. Carpenter). That question we understand you modify.
Mr. Carpenter, No; we do not.
Mr. Manager Jenks, It must not be the personal knowledge of the witness, but reputation.
Mr. Manager McMahon. "What do other people say of him?" is the question.

Mr. Manager McMahon. "What do other people say of him?" is the question.

Mr. Carpenter. That opens up a very large question which I am certainly in no condition even to state to-day. We shall claim when we come to sum up this case that the general management of the War Department by Gen. Belknap is a proper subject of consideration; that if they could establish this particular charge we could still prove the general management and official conduct of the department, and then appeal to the Senate upon the whole record of the administration of that office whether his whole conduct in the office is to be considered.

Mr. Manager Hoar. We do not understand that it is competent to prove by a subordinate officer in the Army as an expert the general character of the administration of a great officer of state. There is no such thing as an expert in such an administration. We object to the question unless it is limited to the reputation of the Secretary for official integrity.

Mr. Black. For integrity.

Mr. Manager Hoar. Well, you may leave out the word "official" if you prefer. We will not object.

The President pro tempore. Does the counsel modify the question?

Mr. Carpenter. No, sir.

Mr. Manager Hoar. Then we object to it.

The President pro tempore. Objection is made. The question will be read by the Reporter.

The question was read, as follows:

Q. From all you know of the subject and from all you know of Gen. Belknap, I ask you what has been the general character of his administration of the War Department?

The President pro tempore. The question is, Shall this interrogatory be admitted?

The president pro tempore of the Senate sitting for the trial of William W. Belknap, p. 261.)

It appears there was not even enough opposition to the question with the Senate site is the Senate shades and the state of the Senate sitting for the trial of William W. Belknap, p. 261.) the question. Mr. CARPE

It appears there was not even enough opposition to the question in the Senate to bring about a vote and that the Senate practically unanimously held that it was competent to go into the general administration of the War Department by Gen. Belknan

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inquire the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I stated the page when I began. It is page 261.

Now, that remark of Mr. Carpenter, Mr. President, was a hint of what he proposed to go on and show if it was necessary, but it does not seem to have been necessary, because the Senate admitted the evidence at once. I ask you to remember, Mr. President, that we are not trying this case before a jury. We are trying this case before a tribunal which is the judge of the law and the judge of the facts, and the tribunal which is to inflict the sentence as well. The question when we come to the end of this case will not be simply whether certain things are proved against Judge Archbald which he should not have done, but as to the character of the man, and upon the whole evidence and the whole case what judgment should be rendered, not only whether the respondent shall be removed from the honorable position he has held so long as a Federal judge, but whether there shall be put upon him the brand of infamy as being not fit ever to hold office of any kind under the Government of the United States.

When my distinguished friend here, the chairman of the managers, was district attorney of the United States in Alabama, prosecuting offenders in the time of the Cleveland administration, I knew that with his big heart if any man had been brought up for sentence who was the meanest man whoever crawled around his district, and had offered to show it was the first offense or something else that might affect the mind of the court in sentencing the accused it would not have been denied.

The question which the Senate is to determine at the end of this case is not the mere question whether this or that thing is proved, but whether, upon the whole, taking into considera-tion the character of the man, the good that he has done, the kind of judge that he is, what the people in and about Scranton think of him and know of him, he shall be deprived of office and be held forever incapable of showing his head as a reputable man because of the contention that has been made here that he is not fit to hold any office of any kind under the Government of the United States.

Now, one thing more, it seems to me, takes this entirely out of the considerations which are invoked in ordinary courts of justice when a similar question arises: When our forefathers framed this Constitution of ours they put into it the provision that the trial of persons accused of crime shall take place in the districts where the crime was committed. I do not know how well many of us remember the origin of that clause in the original Constitution. It was because in the time of Henry VIII a statute had been enacted which had become obsolete at the time of the Revolutionary War, or just before that, when the Parliament of England undertook to revive it and to take the early patriots of 1774 and 1775 to England for trial. The fact is that when Gen. Gates set out from Boston the 18th of April, 1775, with that detachment which marched to Lexington and Concord one object of that expedition was to arrest John Hancock and Samuel Adams, who were living in a house near Lexington, and that Paul Revere came down to them on his celebrated ride, and they got out just in time to escape capture. The purpose of that raid was, among other things, to arrest those men and take them to England for trial instead of being tried in Massachusetts, where they lived and had committed the offenses and where everybody knew what kind of men they

Because of that this clause was put in the Constitution of the United States, and when the Constitution was before the State conventions for ratification objection was made to it because it did not provide that accused persons should be tried by a jury of the vicinage.

Let me recall what was said in one of those State conventions. Everybody will recall what was in the minds of all our forefathers at the time. This was said by Mr. Tredwell in the convention held in New York for the purpose of considering the ratification of the Constitution:

Have we not neglected to secure to ourselves the weighty matters of judgment or justice by empowering the General Government to establish one Supreme and as many inferior courts as they please, whose proceedings they have a right to fix and regulate as they shall think fit, so that we are ignorant whether they shall be according to the common, civil, the Jewish, or Turkish law? What better provisions have we made for mercy when a man, for ignorantly passing a counterfeit continental note or bill of credit, is liable to be dragged to a distant county, two or three hundred miles from home, deprived of the support and assistance of friends, to be tried by a strange jury, ignorant of his character, ignorant of the character of the witnesses, unable to contradict any false testimony brought against him by their own knowledge of facts, and with whom the prisoner, being unacquainted, he must be deprived totally of the benefit of his challenge? And, besides all that, he may be exposed to lose his life merely for want of property to carry his witnesses to such a distance." (2 Elliott's Debates, 400.)

Now, Mr. President, in this case the trial has to be here in the Senate Chamber. This defendant can not have the benefit of being tried by his neighbors, the people who know him and know the witnesses against him. In that case I think it safe to say the trial would not have lasted 24 hours.

We can not take the Senate to Scranton, but we do want to bring to this trial the atmosphere of Scranton so far as relates to Judge Archbald's reputation and as far as we can give him the benefit of that which the meanest criminal throughout the Union has-to be tried in the place where the crime was committed, and among people who know him and who know those who testify against him. We can not go there, where the witnesses generally know the man. We want Senators to know what the men who have spent their lives in and around Scranpracticing before Judge Archbald-his neighbors and friends-think of him and what his reputation is throughout the whole State of Pennsylvania.

Let me, in conclusion, remind the Senate of something that has been said in this case on the question of the rules of evidence. I refer first to what was said by Mr. Manager Webb, on page 135:

Mr. President, later on, I think, it will be developed that it will be absolutely necessary to ask the Senate to cross-examine this witness. I shall conform as far as possible to the ordinary rules in an ordinary court, but, of course, we realize that this court has no limits as to its discretion as to what evidence shall be introduced.

So, again on page 153, Mr. Manager Clayton, in arguing against some objection we had made as to the admissibility of evidence, said:

evidence, said:

It is said by some of the writers that this court renders a mixed verdict; that is, in reaching a verdict and judgment the court pronounce both upon the law and the evidence in the case.

Mr. President, that at once lifts this tribunal above the atmosphere of a mere petty courthouse trial where a $5$ pettifogging lawyer may undertake in the defense of a criminal to interpose all sorts of technical objections, and where the judge is to pass upon the law and the jury upon the facts. This is a different tribunal from that. It is higher than that. This tribunal wants to know all the facts.

Mr. President, I would not do myself the discredit nor would I reflect upon the intelligence nor the good intentions of this great body by suggesting that the public wish to know all the facts pertaining to the conduct of their high judicial officer. This is more than a mere petty criminal case.

I could follow with more to the same effect scattered through this record. I submit that in determining the great question in this case, as to what kind of a man this is who is on trial, the Senate ought to know, not only the mere naked fact as to whether his reputation is good or bad, but what manner of man he is, what kind of a man he is known to be to these gentlemen who have known him so well during the 28 long years he has been on the bench, and in order that the Senate may judge whether it is likely that he would have gone to see Mr. Brownell for the purpose of making Mr. Brownell think that if he granted him some sort of a favor he would decide cases in his favor before the great Commerce Court, or as to whether he would have gone to Mr. Richards on behalf of poor Warnke and ask him to give Mr. Warnke another hearing with the expectation that Mr. Richards would do that for Mr. Warnke with the understanding, implied or expressed, that he would get paid for it when some of the Reading Co. cases would come up in the Commerce Court.

On this ground, Mr. President, I submit that we ought to have more than the mere naked, formal question I have referred to. We do not ask that the witness go very far or take much time, but we want to show what the witnesses know of this man, so that the Senate may sit as nearly as possible in the same position they would be in if they were citizens of Scranton sitting in Scranton to try this case.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, counsel has wandered very far afield, it seems to me, in this proposition and is at-tempting to carry the Senate away from the real issue that is to be determined here. In the first two impeachment cases that he cites, tried in the Senate, the question involved the very issue that was to be determined. The charge in each of those cases was a usurpation of power. The conduct of Judge Chase on the bench as a judge and the method of his demeanor there were in issue, and the questions asked and the answers admitted by the Senate bear directly on the issue involved.

There is no such issue involved here. There will be no objection on the part of the managers to the proper questions that are admissible in every court of justice as to the character of a defendant. Everyone must concede that the question the counsel has now propounded to the witness is not such a ques-

Moreover, one of the charges in this case, perhaps several of them, relate to the Delaware & Lackawanna Railway. The witness, as it is already in evidence, is one of the attorneys of that corporation. He is asked now a question that under any circumstances in any court of justice would not be admissible. The attorney of one of the parties named in the indictment is asked now to state whether Judge Archbald is a good or a bad

Mr. President, if we start out in this direction there will be no end to this trial. If this question is proper, then it is proper to follow this man's court decisions from the time he was a judge of the State court in Pennsylvania, years and years ago, up to the present time. It will be proper to take every case and follow it from its inception to its ending, whether in that court or in a superior court. It would be absolutely a limitless range that would never end.

All courts, as far as I know, without any exception, have confined this kind of questions to the reputation of the man in the neighborhood where he resides pertaining to the particular

If we were allowed and if they are allowed to go into this question, more than a thousand witnesses could properly be examined on this question. As I said, it is leading the Senate away from the issue. It seems to me that counsel for the respondent, in his argument, is trying to take the Senate away from the issue that is here at stake.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to have the Reporter read the question to which objection has been made, so that it may appear just exactly what it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be read by the Reporter.

The Reporter read the question, as follows:

Q. Now, Maj. Warren, I want to ask you to tell us. from your long acquaintance with Judge Archbald and your observation of him as a judge, what were his principal characteristics as a judge, as to integrity, ability, and industry?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, just think of the ques-It is what is the witness's opinion as to his characteristics as a judge. There is no charge made here that on the bench he is abusive, as there were in the cases the counsel has cited us to. There is no charge made here that as a judge he is wild and abuses witnesses or attorneys, or that he takes any advantage in that respect of his judicial position. That is not Yet the witness, an attorney representing one of the corporations with whom some of the wrongdoings and misbehaviors are alleged to have been committed, is asked to state his opinion as to his integrity as a judge.

It seems to me, Mr. President, it is so plain on the face of it that it does not need argument and ought not to receive a moment's consideration.

I would be glad to have Manager Clayton say a few words on the subject. He has given some attention to this particular branch of the case.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, it is perhaps unnecessary for me to state the general rules governing the admission of character testimony, and perhaps it is also unnecessary for me to state the questions which have generally been propounded in such matters of inquiry and recognized as proper in places where character is put in issue.

I may say, Mr. President, in the beginning, that we have not controverted the good character of Judge Archbald. Perhaps if we had controverted that a larger range would be permissible for the respondent in reply to that controversy raised by the managers. But the managers have not raised that question.

So, Mr. President, I take it that the rules of evidence are to be applied by the Senate in this case, first, for the purpose of doing justice both to the managers who represent the accusation, the House of Representatives, or the people, if you please, or the Government of the United States, if you please, and of also doing justice to this respondent. Secondarily, and perhaps just as important, these rules are for the expeditious disposition of the cause. It is not to militate against the doing of justice in this case that we raise this question. We say that justice can be done within the rules which permit ordinary questions which are asked in ordinary cases about character and the answers thereto. There is enough latitude in that to do justice to both sides in this controversy, especially to the respondent, where the managers have not assailed his character by introducing evidence for that specific purpose.

Mr. President, the next reason to which I have adverted is for the dispatch of this case. Any rule looking to the speedy termination of this case ought to be enforced unless its relaxation would favor the doing of more ample justice to all parties concerned. In this case I take it that the Senate will consider the respondent as having gotten all he is entitled to when he proves by those who know him the fact that they know him, I the fact that they know his general reputation and that his general reputation and his character, predicated upon that general reputation, is good. We have not controverted that, and therefore it does not seem to me that there is any necessity here for the enlargement of the rule.

Mr. President, the cases referred to by the learned counsel for the respondent are not applicable here. Of course, we know that there are no two cases alike. I need not remind so good a lawyer as the one who now occupies the chair that there are rarely ever any cases exactly parallel. I have no doubt that the present occupant of the chair, as well as other good lawyers, are frequently wearied by the expression of the small-case lawyers who come into the courts and say that they have a case "on all fours" with the case pending.

That is, Mr. President, hardly ever true. The "all fours" lawyer and the "parallel" lawyer lose sight of the principles involved in the case. The question that a lawyer and a judge wants to know is, not so much what was said in Smith against Jones or Brown against Jenkins, but he wants to know the rea-There may be parity of reason, and that decision may be persuasive by reason of the parity of reasoning and logic enunciated in the particular case which is brought to the attention of the court; but after all, Mr. President, the question is the trial of the case at bar, the particular question at bar. So let us examine these cases to which the counsel has referred.

Take, first, the Belknap case. There is no parity of reasoning here, and if there were, Mr. President, I may say that that was a case decided by the Senate at one time, and counsel might as well invoke the verdict in that case as a precedent for acquittal here as to invoke any other ruling in that case for the guidance of the Senate here.

There is no reason here for such a claim. We have not charged that while actually sitting on the bench Judge Archbald was guilty of these several misbehaviors. We have charged misbehaviors when he was not sitting on the bench. The whole case is his misbehavior, aside from the discharge of his mere official duties, while actually sitting, to wit, dickering with parties litigant, or probable parties litigant, in the matter of acquiring culm dumps to make money, and so on through the list of charges. The only case which it could be said by any sort of stretch relates to his act as judge on the bench, as I remember the articles, is the appointment of the jury commissioner. It is not even charged that he did that while on the bench; it is not charged that he did that while he was judge of the Commerce Court; but during his incumbency in the office of district judge he appointed a railroad attorney to be jury commissioner.

Mr. President, in the case of Judge Chase, his demeanor on the bench was in issue. Therefore it was perhaps proper to inquire as to his general demeanor on the bench. That comes up to the rule of evidence as laid down in the horn books, Greenleaf and others, that the question of character must be responsive to the particular charge; and that rule invoked, I think, in some of the cases cited.

In this case there is no charge that Judge Archbald demeaned himself with ill-temper or that he was drunk while on the bench or that he was guilty of profanity while on the bench, as there was in the case of Judge Pickering and in the case of Judge Peck. I do not now recall whether the counsel referred to that as a case in point.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I cited from the Peck case.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. In that case the Chair knows that the accusation against Judge Peck was the imprisonment of a lawyer for contempt of court. Mr. President, I fail to see the parallel between that case and this case here. This case here is the conduct of the judge. Every one of the charges, with possibly the exception I have named, relates solely to what this judge did while not sitting as judge.

Mr. President, I do not think it necessary to detain the Sen-I insist that, inasmuch as his good character is not controverted, this range of examination sought here by the counsel is not permissible. If it be permissible, Mr. President, I respectfully suggest that it will be weil-nigh interminable. The Senate will have to end some time or other an examination so latitudinarian in its scope.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, so far as showing-Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, is not the discussion on this subject ended now? Is not any further debate out of order under the rule?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I certainly am surprised to hear that argument made from that side of this Chamber now. There has not been-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear counsel. Mr. Manager NORRIS. The managers are entitled to the closing, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the counsel for the respondent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, what has been said makes it necessary for me to remind the Senate just in a general way of what these charges are. Besides the charge that Judge Archbald entered into negotiations with railroad companies for the purpose of purchasing their coal property, or some of it, the charge is that he used his influence as a judgethat is the language of the articles-that, being a judge of the Commerce Court and having the cases of those railroad companies pending before him, he used his influence as a judge of that court to negotiate favorable arrangements with them.

As to the Boland note, you will remember that the charge there is that Judge Archbald allowed that note to be taken for discount to persons who had suits pending in his court for the purpose of having it negotiated, for the purpose of getting his judicial action in their favor.

The charge there is that when So as to the Rissinger note. Judge Archbald sat on the trial of those insurance company cases he had negotiations with Rissinger, and that immediately after the close of the trial he indorsed the note and got something for it, the implication being that he acted in that case in favor of Rissinger and was rewarded for it in that way.

So as to the Woodward appointment, which has already been referred to, which was clearly a judicial act.

Then remember, Mr. President, the Bruce case. There the charge is that the judge corruptly entered into negotiations with counsel who were on one side of the case after the case had been argued and while the court was considering its opinion—while he was engaged in writing the opinion.

Then, as to the raising of the purse, the charge is that he corruptly received a sum of money from a number of the members of the bar who had cases before him, meaning nothing more nor less than that he received that money with the understanding that those who gave it would benefit by his judicial action.

If we have not enough there Mr. President, here is the very opening statement made by Mr. Manager CLAYTON, found on page 111 of the record in this proceeding:

In short, Mr. President, he has attempted by various transactions to commercialize his potentiality as judge, and has not hesitated to use his official power and influence to drive bargains with those who had or had or would probably have litigation before his court. He has degraded his high office, has destroyed the confidence of the public in his judicial integrity.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. May I remind counsel that that was just a conclusion of the statement, not of the articles of impeachment at all, by way of argument or ornamentation to the manager's address to the Senate?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The learned manager forgets that is his opening statement to the Senate of what he was going to prove and claim in this trial-and not a quotation from the articles of impeachment—which he now seems to think it is his best policy to say that he has not any idea of proving or

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I wish the learned counsel for the respondent would accept the view of the law in this case that the manager holds. There would be very little trouble about reaching a conclusion as to the facts if he would assent to my law. I am glad to be quoted with approval by him, Mr. President.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would find it very difficult to assent to my friend's judgment of the law, because I would not know whether to take what he said then or what he says now.

Mr. President, the managers have entirely missed the point of the previous impeachment cases from which I have read. read from them for the purpose of showing that you are not limited to evidence of reputation. In each one of those cases the lawyer who testified about the judge was permitted to tell in one case by agreement of the managers and counsel after objection had been made, and in the other by a formal vote of the Senate-his experience with the judge on the trial of cases before him. Now we want to hear from the men who have practiced before Judge Archbald during 28 years what has been their experience as to his being a partial or an impartial, a fair-minded, an honorable, and an upright judge and man.

My friend says that this witness is a member of the bar who has represented some of the railroad companies. That goes to the weight of his evidence, if the managers think that the Senate will be affected by that; but we are to follow this, Mr. President, by a number of other witnesses as to whom no such imputation as that can be made or suggested by anybody; and if the evidence is admissible at all, it is admissible as to every witness who can testify to it. As to the witness's relations with the judge or with railroad companies, that may be argued when we get through as to the weight of the evidence.

Now, I submit, Mr. President, that, in view of the conclusion that may be arrived at in this case and as to which the learned managers have not seen fit to mention anything, and for the reasons formally adjudicated to be sufficient by the Senate in the Belknap case, we ought to be allowed to go into the question of the general characteristics of Judge Archbald, so far as they relate to matters which are under investigation here.

As to the length of time that will be taken, we would have been through, Mr. President, with all that we want to ask on this subject by this time if the learned managers had not made

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule on the question now, unless the managers desire to be heard further.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I do not care to be heard if the Chair is ready to rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will read the question in order that it may appear in connection with the ruling:

Q. Now, Maj. Warren, I want to ask you to tell us, from your long acquaintance with Judge Archbald and your observation of him as a judge, what were his principal characteristics as a judge as to integrity, ability, and industry?

The Chair thinks there is, of course, basis for the contention that rules should be liberal in practice in certain circumstances. Nevertheless, generally the rules of law must be applied. The Chair thinks that the rule generally as to proof of character is, first, that anyone who is accused of misconduct may put in issue his general character, irrespective of what the charge is, because general character always is involved in any question of violation of law or misbehavior. Further, he may put in evidence his character as to the particular quality or characteristic which will elucidate the particular charge. With that view, the Chair thinks it is perfectly competent for the counsel to prove the general reputation of the respondent, as to whether or not he bears a good character in the broadest sense of that term, and also that he may prove his general reputation as to the particular matter involved in issue.

Now, as the Chair understands, the particular matter involved here is a question of judicial integrity. So the Chair would not, if the Senate approves the opinion of the Chair, limit the counsel to proof of reputation for general good character, but would recognize the right of the respondent also to prove his general reputation for judicial integrity. But the Chair knows of no rule of law which permits a witness to give his individual opinion of the character of an accused. If there is any such case, the Chair has failed absolutely to learn of it in such experience as he has been fortunate enough to have.

This particular question is as to the opinion of the witness himself. If the counsel would limit his question to the witness's knowledge of the general character of the respondent for judicial integrity, the Chair would think that was competent; but this question not only asks the individual opinion of the witness, leaving aside the question of general reputation, but it goes farther and asks for the opinion of the witness, not only as to integrity, but as to ability and industry, none of which characteristics or features are involved, as the Chair understands, in any issue before the Senate at this time. The Chair is, therefore, obliged to sustain the objection to this particular question, but will recognize the right of the respondent to proceed along the lines indicated, with every disposition to be as liberal as the rule will possibly permit.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, Mr. President, I will take the matter up in detail and perhaps we will not have any further

Q (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Maj. Warren, are you acquainted with the general reputation of Judge Archbald in that community in which he has been a judge for the last 28 years, as to integrity?—A. I am, sir.

Q. And what is it?—A. Good. I should say, if I might be permitted to amplify that—

Mr. Manager NORRIS. No; Mr. President—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not want—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will suspend.
The Chair inquires what is the objection?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Under the ruling of the Chair, as I understand it, the witness has no right to go on and give his reasons. He has answered the question, and that is as far as he has a right to go on direct examination.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You say it is good. That Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I object to the witness making any explanation of what the word "good" means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks, while the witness can not make any explanation of it, he can state whether the reputation of the respondent is moderately good or very good.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Or extra good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Or excellent.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We do not object to an adverb being thrown in.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, particularly as to his judicial honor and integrity, what do you know of his reputation as to that?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Is not that what the witness has answered?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I asked him as to Judge Archbald's general reputation, that is, as a man. Now, I am asking the witness as to his reputation for integrity as a judge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The former question was as to his general reputation, and this one is as to his judicial integrity. Counsel can inquire as to each, and it makes no difference as to the order.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I want to ask you particularly as to what his reputation has been during all those years, and is still for integrity as a judge?

The Witness. Do I understand that I must limit myself to one noun or a verb?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

The Witness. I should like to say that it is that of a pains-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; stop, Mr. Witness. The witness will answer the question directly as to whether it is good or bad.

The WITNESS. Good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He can state how good if he

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I will ask you the question how good it is?-A. Of the highest kind; the best kind.

Q. Now, I ask you a question that may lead to some detail. You contributed to this purse?—A. I have already said that I

Q. That was in 1910?—A. I think in the spring of 1910; yes, sir.

Q. Did you try cases before Judge Archbald after that?—A. I tried two cases before him or was associated in a case before him when he was a member of the Commerce Court after that. I can not recall, but I think I tried a case in the district court in Scranton after that-I am quite sure I did when I come to think of it.

Q. I want to know whether, after you had made that contribution to him, you observed any evidence of partiality in his treatment of you?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I object to that question as immaterial and incompetent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This is another proposition. The charge is that Judge Archbald corruptly received the money from these lawyers, which could only mean that he favored them in the subsequent trial of cases in which they were counsel. To dispose of such a proposition as that, after it has been brought out that the judge knew who they were and wrote them letters before he came back home, can I not find out from the gentlemen who contributed to the purse whether, as a matter of fact, he exhibited any favor or partiality to them afterwards, so that we may know whether he received that money innocently or corruptly, as the charge is?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks, with the permission of the manager, unless there is a particular charge of the respondent having shown partiality to a particular lawyer or a particular client, that can not be put in issue. It is a general matter only. If there is any charge in the articles of impeachment that the respondent did corruptly show partiality or preference to any counsel or to any litigant, then, of course, that would be a matter to be proven by a specific denial.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. How could he receive it corruptly except on the understanding that the judge was to give favors for it when counsel came before him in the trial of cases?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, one way to show that he did not grant favors, and to show that that is not true, is to show that he did not receive it. I submit to counsel that that is the best way to show it, if such is a fact. I can not understand, Mr. President, why this witness should be allowed to state that after he had made that contribution he had received any different treatment than he had before, unless there is somewhere in some article an allegation that such had been the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has already ruled that it is not admissible.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Then, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania submits a question, which will be read to the witness by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

What was the result in the cases which you argued before Judge Archbald after your contribution to the fund?

Mr. WORTHINGTON and Mr. Manager CLAYTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel will proceed.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I object to that question being answered, unless I am allowed to pursue the inquiry which I had propounded to the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the manager rose to object, the Chair did not have opportunity to hear him.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The Chair has anticipated my purpose. The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair did not anticipate the manager. Does he desire to reply to the suggestion of counsel?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I understood the Chair to say that the manager probably had risen to object. If I was in error and perhaps I was—I may say, Mr. President, on my own responsibility that I did rise for the purpose of interposing objection to that question. It involves the same legal proposition, the way I view it, which was involved in the question awhile ago on which the Chair ruled. I think the Chair was correct; and for the same reason, without arguing it, I think this question is objectionable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the counsel for the respondent wish to be heard on the question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On consultation with my colleagues, withdraw my objection to the question being answered. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question is inadmissible on the same ground that the other question was ruled out.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Do you know Mr. Woodward, the jury commissioner who was in that position so long?—

ward, the jury commissioner who was in that position so long:—
A. I have known him for many years.
Q. Has there been any complaint, so far as you know—
Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I would respectfully ask that counsel ask his questions so that I can hear them. I can not hear his questions. He has his hand over on this side of his face, and I can not hear what he says.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will keep my hand away.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. What was the question?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was about to ask the witness whether he observed during the time Mr. Woodward was commissioner any unfairness or complaint of unfairness as to the missioner any unfairness or complaint of unfairness as to the juries which were drawn in that way under his administration?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I object to that as incompetent, im-material, and irrelevant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the objection, unless counsel desires to be heard.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What was the reputation of Judge Archbald generally as to—
Mr. Manager NORRIS. I object to that question as having already been gone into and answered.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, if the manager knows what the question was, he knows more than I do, because I had not completed it.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Under that confession, Mr. President, I think he ought to be precluded from asking any further ques-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel will proceed.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I want to ask you what generally was the reputation of Judge Archbald during the time he was a Federal judge there as to the fair and impartial administration of the duties of his office?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Objected to, as already having been answered.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That goes a little further, it seems to me, Mr. President, than what the witness has yet stated. That involves what all these charges relate to, the general fairness of his administration of the duties of his office. The witness has said that Judge Archbald's reputation for integrity is good, and there I had to stop. Now, a man might have a reputation for being a moral man, and yet it might be said that he did not properly or fairly administer the duties of his judicial office. The managers disclaim charging that he ever did anything in his judicial capacity that was not entirely right and proper, but at the same time all their charges relate to his judicial influence or his judicial action outside of court.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not care to take up the time of the Chair to argue over again a question which I am under the impression has been determined by the Chair and which the witness has answered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would say that the question should be limited to the matter of judicial integrity and not to the manner in which he dispatched business or attended to the business of his court.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well, Mr. President, that is all

I have to ask Maj. Warren.

Cross-examination: Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) How long have you lived in Scranton?—A. I was born there.

Q. You have known Judge Archbald all your life?—A. I have known him since I was about 10 years of age. I think perhaps I ought to say I have lived there 53 years. That is the length of my life. In other words, I am in my fifty-fourth year.
Q. You have lived there——A. I have lived there all my life; but I did not quite answer your question. I have lived there nearly 54 years.

Q. You are still living there?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Mr. Warren, did you hear any talk in and about Scranton among people who know Judge Archbald about his association with Edward J. Williams?-A. Well, I-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Go on.

The WITNESS. I am glad to answer it. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that counsel for the managers should be limited in the application of the rule in the same way that the rule is enforced on the re-

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Well, Mr. President, of course the question itself perhaps does not bear directly—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the question is not a The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the question is not a legal question. The proper question is simple. The counsel is limited in the inquiry as to the opportunity of this witness to know the general character and also as to the witness's sincerity in his testimony—his opportunity and his truthfulness. That is the limitation. Those are the only two lines of questions. tions that are admissible.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I do not know that I understand. I do not want to violate the injunction of the Chair, of course, and I will ask that the question be read, so that we may get the idea of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the rule of law is this: Proof of general character must depend upon the general reputation of the party. Then, the other side are limited to questions of the witness's opportunity to know the fact and his truthfulness in stating the fact.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Does the Chair mean to hold by that I am precluded from asking the witness as to specific acts that have developed in evidence or have not developed in evidence to which I want to call his attention and ask him if he has heard of them?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only in so far as it will elucidate the question of his general character.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Warren, have you heard any talk in the neighborhood where Judge Archbald resides in regard to his association with various persons in buying coal dumps and using his influence as a judge to dispose of them or to purchase them?-A. I have never heard in my life any talk in that community of Judge Archbald using his influence as a judge—the potentiality of his office—either to buy or sell culm dumps or any other thing.

Q. Have you heard any talk in that community about Judge Archbald being associated with Mr. Rissinger in a Honduras mining scheme at the time litigation was pending in his court to which Rissinger was a party?-A. I have read of the testimony that was taken before your Judiciary Committee as to that transaction. I think it is the transaction to which you

Q. Well, please answer my question. That is not an answer to my question. That is not a question.—A. Do you mean to say, have I heard it discussed?

Q. Yes.—A. As reflecting upon the judge?

Q. Whether it is reflecting or not; have you heard it discussed?—A. I happened to know of the discount of a note—

Q. That is not an answer to my question. Please answer the question .- A. Yes; I have. As director of the County Bank, of which I have been a director for 15 years, I remember a note being presented to our board for discount. I heard, therefore, of a discounted bill, Judge; but that is the only thing I ever heard about it. If that is what you mean—I am trying to answer you—I never heard of it in any other way than that.

Q. Have you heard any talk in Scranton as to Judge Archbald's connection with the Amity Coal Co.?—A. I have. I was counsel in the case. I imagine you have the book before you. I was counsel in the case against Judge Archbald. So, of course, I know of that. The firm of which I was a member brought suit for the live stock company. You have the re-

Q. You are familiar with what the supreme court said in that case?—A. I argued it in the supreme court and I am familiar, yes, with the two opinions. It was reargued and there were two decisions, or two opinions filed, I should say, by our supreme court.

Q. By Mr. Justice Williams?—A. Mr. Justice Williams; yes,

sir.

Q. You are familiar with both of them?-A. Quite so. I got them as soon as they were handed down.

Q. Now, Mr. Warren, did the facts as they developed in that case, as they are cited in these two opinions, have any effect on you or on your mind as to his reputation for general integrity and honesty in that community?—A. They did not, Judge. The supreme court, if the opinion is before you, took pains to say that there was nothing in the case to indicate

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is compelled to interpose. The witness is not permitted, under the rules, unless the Chair is in error, to discuss particular cases. The manager is justified in asking whether or not he heard of certain things as matters of general reputation. That is proper for the purpose of testing whether he has in good faith answered a question previously propounded to him; but in a particular instance, as to the effect it had upon the mind of the witness, that is not a legitimate question, in the opinion of the Chair. That would only be admissible to show the effect upon the general opinion of the community, as to whether or not he was correct in his general unlimited statement with respect to the general reputation of Judge Archbald.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the witness whether he heard any talk in the neighborhood about particular parts of this opinion, which I desire to read to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be legitimate. But the Chair understood the manager to ask the witness's opinion as to the effect upon his mind. The effects upon the community is a different thing.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the opinion is to be read, I object to reading excerpts and insist that the whole opinion should be

Mr. Manager NORRIS. In answer to that I will say we offer now, as part of the cross-examination of this witness, the two opinions rendered in that case by Mr. Justice Williams, of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection, understanding that it is as to its effect upon the general public. We understand that this is to be read, but as we understand the Chair, only for the purpose of showing its effect upon the general reputation of Judge Archbald for integrity as a man and as a

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very good.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think it bears directly on it. will not have the opinions read now but will have them printed for the information of the Senate, unless some one desires them read now, and all Senators can read them in the RECORD.

Opinion, Mr. Justice Williams:

The defendants are sued as partners. They claim the immunity from liability as individuals which the act of 1874 confers on persons associating themselves in a joint stock or limited partnership association, alleging that they have fully compiled with its provisions. This is the question on which the plaintiffs' right to recover depends. The court below held that the organization of the Amity Coal Co. (Ltd.) had been in full compliance with the provisions of the statute, and that the only remedy of the plaintiffs was by action against the association, and then against the stockholders severally for the amount unpaid upon their stock subscriptions. A compulsory nonsuit was accordingly entered against the plaintiffs which the court declined to take off, and this action of the court is the error assigned.

The act of 1874 provides that when persons "desire to form a partnership association for the purpose of conducting any lawful business" by subscribing and contributing capital thereto, which capital shall alone be liable for the debts of such association, they shall make and subscribe to a statement in writing, in which they shall set forth, among other things, the full names of the persons so associating themselves together; "the amount of capital stock of said association subscribed by each, the total amount of capital, and when and how to be paid." In section 2 it is provided that the members of the association until the joint property has first been exhausted, and then only to the extent to which they may be indebted upon their subscriptions to the capital stock. To the end that the subscribers may be protected and their liability kept within the prescribed limits, no executio to be affected, and after full hearing, fixing the amount due upon his subscription and awarding the writ. In order that this question may be disposed of correctly, the act requires every such association to keep a "subscription-list book" that may be produced in court, and that shall be "open to inspection by the creditors and members of the association at all reasonable times."

The Amity Coal Co. (Ltd.) was organized by three persons, viz. Stetler, Fuller, and Archbald, who subscribed and acknowledged the statement in due form. This statement set out the following facts for the information of the public: "The amount of the capital stock of said association is $22,600 payable in lawful money on the execution hereof." The persons subscribing to the stock and the amount set he said Robert W. Archbald subscribes for $8,000, and the said Robert W. Archbald subscribes for $8,000, and the said Robert W. Archbald subscribes for $8,000, and marketing of anthractle coal, together with all matters incident finerio." This statement followed the act of assembly, and as to its form was entirely regular, but the proofs show that not one dollar was paid by either of the subscribers to the stock. It was, nevertheless, recorded, and the Amity Coal Co. (Ltd.) entered upon its business career without a farthing in its treasury or an arricle of property in the world. This was not a compliance in good faith with the critique of the subscribers to the stock. It was, nevertheless, recorded, and the Amity Coal Co. (Ltd.) entered upon its business career without a farthing in its treasury or an arricle of property in the world. This was not a compliance in good faith with the critique of the subscriber of the subscriber of property in the world. This was not a compliance in good faith with the critique of the subscriber of property in the world. This was not a compliance in good faith with the critique in the provided for a capital of $25,000, which was made payable on the credit with a provided for a capital of $25,000, which was ma the create of a capital that is actually withheld. They are not entitled. In other words, the credit they obtain rests not upon a subscribed and contributed capital, but upon a fraudulent appearance of such capital in their statement.

We do not hold it necessary to a valid organization that the entire subscribed capital should be paid into the treasury before an association can begin business. The act of 1874 contemplates the possibility of unpaid balances and provides a method by which creditors may reach them; but we do hold that an association has no right to enter upon business until some part of the subscribed capital has been actually paid. The statement should show when and in what amounts the subscriptions are to be paid, and the subscription-list book should thereafter show the payment or the failure to pay the installments falling due after the recording of the statement, so that members and creditors may see at any time the exact situation of the association. These are the terms upon which the statute promises individual immunity from the debts of the concern, and they must be compiled with fairly and honestly. Where persons seek the benefits of an act of assembly they must take them upon the terms which the act prescribes or not at all. In Malony v. Bruce 194 Pa., 232) Paxson, judge, said: "If parties seek to have all the advantages of a partnership and yet limit their liability as to creditors, they must comply strictly with the act."

Under the limited-partnership act of 1836 the same rule was repeatedly held: Richardson v. Hong (38 Pa., 153), Guillou v. Peterson (89 Pa., 163). The recent case of the appeal of the Hite Natural Gas Co. (Ltd.) (118 Pa., 436) is very nearly in point. In the recorded statement Hite's subscription for $50,000 of the capital stock was stated to be paid by the transfer to the company of the right of way for the pipellne, etc., when in fact the right of way had not been procured. This was a false statement as to the manner in shich the association had been complied with ganized in disregard to the act of 1874, doing business without a capital and as a matter of speculative adventure. It was an empty shell, a sham, and Mr. Strong's position is the same as if he had bought into any other insolvent firm. He did not become liable for debts contracted before he became a member, but for debts contracted afterwards, he and his associates are liable as partners. Mr. Strong's honest payment for his interest can not cure the vice which infected this association from its organization or relieve him from the legal consequences of his connection with an insolvent firm.

Judgment reversed and venire facias de novo awarded.

On May 14, 1888, a reargument of the foregoing cause was ordered on motion of the defendants.

On May 14, 1888, a reargument of the foregoing cause was ordered on motion of the defendants.

Mr. Everett Warren and Mr. J. Vaughan Darling (with them Mr. Edward N. Willard and Mr. Charles H. Welles) for the plaintiffs in error.

Opinion, Mr. Justice William Strong; for the defendants in error.

Opinion, Mr. Justice William Strong; for the defendants in error.

Opinion, Mr. Justice Williams:

The persons composing a partnership may agree with each other to invest a certain fixed sum each in the common venture, and no more. Such an agreement may limit the interest of each in the property and profits of the firm, but it will not limit the liability of any for the firm debts. Each member will be liable individually for the entire indebtedness of the firm. The act of 1874 was passed to relieve against the risk and inconvenience attending general partnerships by providing a mode by which individuals might invest a fixed sum in a business enterprise without Hability to loss beyond the sum of the Chronoces by which this new organization is brought into business existence is plainly laid down in the statute. Three or more persons may agree to form such an association. They must put their agreement in writing, in the form not of a contract with each other, but of a certificate for the information of the public. This must be signed by every member of the association, and, as a further assurance of its truth, it must be acknowledged by them. It must set out, among other things, the names of the persons uniting in the enterprise and the amount subscribed by each member, and a has been prepared, signed, and acknowledged, and when the partnership in the certificate in the common business, but through and in the name and upon the credit of the joint-stock association. When the association is ready to be called into life by the organic act, the recording of the certificate, and acknowledged, and when the partners in the common business, but through and in the name and upon the credit of the joint-stock association. Henceforwa argument, has not persuaded us that we were in error in the views then expressed.

Turning now to the facts of this case, they seem to leave us no alternative under the salutary rule laid down. This certificate, when prepared, put the capital stock at $25,000. It gave the names of the subscribers and the amount of stock subscribed by each. In obedience to the statutory requirement to state when and how the subscribed stock was to be paid, it stated "to be paid on the execution hereof."

Now, the first thing to be done was to execute the certificate. After that was done, it was to be acknowledged as an assurance of its truth; then it was to be recorded as the certificate of those signing it, made to the public, that its provisions had been compiled with. The recording of the certificate was therefore a distinct affirmance that the capital to be paid on its execution had been paid and that the association was entitled to the credit which its capital should command. The fact was, however, that neither of the stockholders paid one cent on the execution of the certificate, nor at its acknowledgment, nor when it was recorded, nor yet when they began business in the name of the association.

It is useless to argue that such conduct is a compliance with the requirements of the fact as they appear upon this record. The case goes back for a new trial. If upon such trial, with attention directed to this point, a different showing is made and the facts necessary to a legal organization are made to appear, the case may be taken out from the operation of the rule; but, on the facts before us, we hold that the subscribers to the stock in this association, by reason of their disregard of the law under which they attempted to organize, acquired no rights under it, but became liable as general partners for all the dobts contracted in the name of the association. Nor do we see our way clear to relieve one who bought an interest in the concern months afterwards and honestly put his money into its business. Like one buying into an the organization and condition of the concern in which he was about

The order heretofore made reversing the judgment of the court below remains in full force.

Mr. Chief Justice Paxson and Mr. Justice Mitchell dissent.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Now, Mr. Warren, I will ask you if you heard any talk in the community in reference to this particular statement contained in Mr. Justice Williams's opinion, commencing at the bottom of page 157.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I certainly shall object to that—reading from a particular statement in a particular case.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We are going to print it all, and you can read it all then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the manager to inquire of the witness whether he heard any general talk in the community about it. That, I presume, is for the purpose of testing the former testimony as to the character of this respondent.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think it bears directly on this witness's statement that the respondent's reputation is good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Whether it establishes what the witness has previously testified to or controverts it.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Or tends to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And for that purpose only. It is not evidence as to the truth of what is therein stated. The manager is authorized to propound that question for the purpose of ascertaining whether that was a matter of common knowledge and comment in the community.

Mr. Manager NORRIS (reading):

The Amity Coal Co. (Ltd.) was organized by three persons, viz, Stetler, Fuller, and Archbald, who subscribed and acknowledged the statement in due form. This statement set out the following facts for the information of the public: "The amount of the capital stock of said association is $25,000, payable in lawful money on the execution hereof."

Then the justice, in commenting upon that, concludes quite a lengthy discussion by saying:

To enter upon business with the credit which the possession of a paid-up capital of $25,000 would give the association, when in fact nothing had been paid, either in money or property, was an evasion of the law and a fraud upon the public.

Did you hear any discussion among the people of Scranton as to that particular part of the opinion of the supreme court?—A. I heard a discussion with reference to it among some of the members of the bar. I can not recall that I ever heard it spoken of generally in the community. I heard dis-cussion, that it was thought that Judge Archbald had a mistaken conception. Those articles, you will recall, were found way back in 1881 or 1882. If the case is before you, I think you will find that it has been 25 years since the case was decided. I may be mistaken, but I think it was in 1887 or 1888.

Q. Well, it was during the time you have known him about which you have testified as to his reputation?—A. Permit me to finish saying what I heard discussed.

Q. I do not care for that .- A. Will you not be fair enough to let me finish?

Q. I am willing you should do that, but you were not doing -A. Let me finish one sentence, please. I was trying to say that I heard it discussed. It was when Judge Archbald was a practicing lawyer that he drew those articles, and I remember discussion among some of the lawyers that he had not properly prepared the articles; that he had been mistaken in his conception of the statute of 1874, under which they were framed.

Q. You will not answer my question. I asked you whether you heard any discussion about this particular language of the opinion which I have read. I did not ask you whether you had heard discussion about the organization of the company.—A. Did I not say that I had heard discussion among some of our lawyers, but that I did not think I had in the community generally?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. If that is as far as you know, that is where you ought to have stopped.

The Witness. I beg your pardon. I wanted to say what the discussion was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is as far as the witness should go. The Chair thinks all the narration of the witness should be excluded from the record.

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) You are a member of what firm?—A. Warren, Knapp & O'Malley.

Q. Your firm is attorney for the Lackawanna Railroad?—A.
We are not the local attorneys for the Lackawanna Railroad, but we represent them in most of the important cases in our county. They have their own local law office there, with Mr. Reese in charge. He has been a witness here, I think. He is their local counsel and he has a staff of assistants.

Q. You are acquainted with Mr. Jenney?—A. Very well. He is the general counsel of the company in New York.

Q. You are aware that he testified in this proceeding that your firm were the local attorneys of this company?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are taking up a great deal of time in recounting the testimony of other witnesses.

The WITNESS. Not at all. I am not aware of that, although he may have said it.

Q. What was the truth about it?-A. I just tried to say that they had their local law department there, of which D. R. Reese is in charge as general attorney for Pennsylvania, located at Scranton. He has two assistants there. A Mr. Oliver and a gentleman whose name has gone from me for the moment, associated as the legal department for the company; but in the trial of cases in our county I have appeared in most, but not all, of their important cases for the last 10 years. Prior to the organization of the local law department, say, about 10 years ago, we were the local counsel.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Redirect examination: Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I think you have not stated what, if any, effect that opinion or the extracts from it which were read had upon the general reputation and standing of Judge Archbald in the community as a man of integrity and as an honest judge.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mincompetent and immaterial. Mr. President, I object to that as

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understood the Chair to rule that that was the only purpose for which it was to be referred to; and it seems to me that is so-

Mr. Manager NORRIS. What effect it would have is not for the witness to determine, it seems to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. General opinion is made up of the aggregate of individual opinions. It is competent for counsel to show, if he can, anything which would go to show it was not the universal opinion, but the opinion of the witness himself would not be competent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am not asking for his opinion. am asking him what he observed as to the effect of that opinion upon the reputation of Judge Archbald as an honest judge and as an honest man.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Well, Mr. President, if that is competent, the same question could be propounded about every particular item that would go to make it up. Now, that is not for a witness to determine, as I understand-as to just how much

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness has testified without qualification that Judge Archbald's character was of the very best and has not qualified that statement. That is as far as it is necessary for him to go.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. It is understood that at this point in the proceedings

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May Mr. Warren be finally discharged?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Just a moment. I forgot one thing I wanted to ask on cross-examination.

Recross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Mr. Warren, you were a contributor to this fund?—A. Yes; I said that.

Q. How much did you contribute?—A. My recollection is $25.

To whom did you contribute it?-A. As I remember it, I sent it to Mr. Searle, who, I believe, is now Judge Searle, but who at that time was assistant district attorney at Scranton.

Q. Did you send anybody's else contribution besides your own?-A. Come to think, I think our contribution was by a firm check. I remember now; I think it was a firm check.

Q. Have you not the Searles mixed; did you not make that contribution to the Searle who was clerk of the court?-A. You mean send it to him?

Q. Either send it or give it to him?—A. I did not send it at all. My recollection is that Mr. Knapp, or some one of our office force, was phoned to by, my recollection is, Judge Searle, not E. R. Searle, the clerk, and that some one, our messenger boy or some one, took it over. That is my best recollection.

Q. You knew, did you not, that Mr. Searle was collecting the contributions in Scranton and that he lived there?—A. I know that he had been asked by us to do the work of phoning around. I do not know the extent he did it; no.

Q. Did he turn any money over to you?-A. Not a cent; no, sir.

Q. You do not remember whether your contribution was turned over to him or to Judge Searle?-A. I will not say positively, but my best recollection is that it was sent over to the man who is now Judge Searle. In other words-

Q. Did you get an acknowledgment of it from anyone?—A. Yes, sir. That is, I got a letter from Judge Archbald. My impression is now it was written on the steamer—I am not sure about that-some time afterwards. That is the only acknowledgment I got.

Q. When you contributed the money you understood it was to be a cash purse to be given the judge?—A. Oh, quite so; yes, sir.

Q. You had no idea it was a contribution for the purpose of defraying the expenses of a dinner?—A. That was the first talk between Mr. Sprout, a lawyer, and myself. There were others, but I remember Mr. Sprout. It was thought we could not very conveniently get a very large proportion of our bar to go to New York, and then it was thought it would be a good idea to put it in the form of a purse. But it was never for a moment supposed that the names of the contributors would reach the judge. It was affirmatively said by some, "Now, we do not want him to know who are the contributors," because we had a realization of his sense of the proprieties.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. This is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. The witness may be finally discharged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may be finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF GEORGE GRAY.

George Gray, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) What is your profession?—A. My profession is that of a lawyer.

Q. You are now occupying what official position under the United States?—A. Circuit court judge of the United States for the third judicial circuit.

Q. You are the president judge of the circuit court of appeals of that circuit?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?-A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. I have known him since—I do not know the date when he was appointed district judge, whenever that was.

Q. That was in 1901, the evidence shows .- A. Shortly after that—I do not know how long—he was assigned, either generally or specially, to sit on the bench of the court of appeals in the absence of the circuit judge. I met him then, and I have met him at intervals since when he has been assigned to similar duty.

Q. Do you know other people who know him?-A. I do.

Q. Will you tell us, please, what is his general reputation for honesty and integrity?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I think the question ought to be limited to some locality.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. And ought to be brought within the knowledge of the witness, too. The witness has not said that he knows the respondent's reputation.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think that the witness has already said that he knows his general reputation.

The Witness. No.

Mr. SIMPSON. I beg your pardon. I was intending to ask him that. I will put it directly.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Do you know his general reputation for honesty and integrity?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, I submit that the question ought to state where. His reputation in San Francisco might depend on an entirely different thing from his reputation in the community where he lives

Mr. SIMPSON. This is a very, very little world of ours, after all, as Mr. Manager Norris knows.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Frame the question as you wish to put it.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) I will put the question this way: Do you know his general reputation for integrity and honesty in the circuit covered by the third judicial circuit?—A. I never heard it discussed. I never heard any aspersion on it.

Q. Will you please tell us what is his reputation for integrity and partiality as a judge, if you know?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I object to that as incompetent. The witness has already disclosed that he does not know.

Mr. SIMPSON. He has not disclosed that. I understood him to say that he knows.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. He said he has never heard it discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks, however, that the question transcends the limitation. The witness is asked the question as to his impartiality. The Chair thinks it ought to be limited as to his reputation for integrity as a judge.

Mr. SIMPSON. I will withdraw that word. I thought the Chair had allowed that question—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Will you tell us, please, what is his general reputation as a judge for integrity?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. He has not yet said he knew. Counsel has not qualified him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question ought to be preceded, of course, by the question whether he knows his reputation.

Mr. SIMPSON. I do not mind so preceding it, but the witness has already testified that he sat with Judge Archbald on the bench a number of times.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Judge, do you know his reputation for integrity as a judge?-A. I know he has a reputation of being a judge of integrity.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. If the Chair please, I do not wish to transcend the rule as laid down by the Chair, but I desire, if permissible-and I rise for the purpose of inquiry before I propound a question—to ask Judge Gray several questions which, of course, relate to the conduct of Judge Archbald in certain matters. I desire to ask him if a judge were guilty of those things it would be in keeping or in consonance with judicial integrity

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would not recognize the propriety of those inquiries.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Very well, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) Judge Gray, how often have you heard Judge Archbald's character discussed by any--A. I could not tell you, Mr. Manager.

Q. Did you ever hear his character discussed at all before the inception of these impeachment proceedings?-A. I never heard his general character discussed before the commencement of these impeachment proceedings.

Q. Did you ever hear his general character for integrity as judge discussed before these impeachment proceedings?

I have heard his character as a judge discussed or spoken of. Q. Will you be kind enough to tell us by whom and where?-

A. No; I can not, Mr. Manager; I can not. Q. What was said?-A. I have heard him spoken of as a good judge.

Q. You do not recall now who you heard say that, or when or where he said it?—A. No; I can not.

Q. Or the reason that led to that declaration?—A. I have never heard his general character discussed.

Q. At all?—A. At all.
Q. At any time?—A. At any time. I do not think an honest man generally has his character discussed.
Q. Did you ever hear, in any talk about his character, anything said about his dealings with people for the acquisition of coal dumps, and the like of that?

You was proportionally and the property of the strouble.

WORTHINGTON. You mean before this trouble Mr.

came up?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Yes.

The WITNESS. Never.

Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) Of course, I assume that everybody who reads the newspapers has heard something about it since the inception of this case. Did you ever hear, when you heard his character mentioned, anything said about the case of Hill, Keizer & Co. against S. N. Stetler?

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I think that is within the ruling of the President. The witness has already said that he never heard his character discussed at all.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I am doing it for the purpose of refreshing the witness's mind and drawing his attention to a particular matter of public notoriety, and asking the witness if he had heard that matter mentioned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager will proceed.
Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) This case is reported in the Pennsylvania State Reports, volume 127, the title of which I have just read you. Did you ever hear any mention of his character and a discussion of that case in regard to it?-A. I can not say, Mr. Manager, that I did. I do not know that case by name. I ought to say, perhaps, that at the time Judge Archbald was appointed to the Commerce Court I did hear some one speak of a case in which he had been animadverted on by a judge of one of the courts of Pennsylvania—the supreme court or some other court. I never saw the case, but the person who spoke of it said that it had done great injustice to Judge Archbald; that it was entirely undeserving.

Q. Who was the person you have just referred to?-A. Judge Buffington.

Q. Who is Judge Buffington?—A. A circuit judge of the third judicial circuit.

Q. Of the State or country?-A. He is of Pennsylvania, sir. I must say that was no conversation about it. It was just an allusion to the case, and Judge Buffington expressed himself as I have just stated and seemed to be familiar with the facts of

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Now, Mr. President, may I propound to the witness a further question and read the statement which Mr. Manager Norris read to the other witness?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would ask whether it goes to the question of reputation?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is the purpose. [To the witness:] This is from the opinion in the case, and I desire to direct your attention to it so that it may refresh your memory as to whether or not you heard Judge Buffington refer to this

The Amity Coal Co. (Ltd.) was organized by three persons, viz, Stetler, Fuller, and Archbald, who subscribed and acknowledged the statement in due form. This statement set out the following facts for the information of the public: "The amount of the capital stock of said association is $25,000, payable in lawful money on the execution hereof." The persons subscribing to the stock and the amount subscribed by each was stated as follows: "The said Samuel N. Steller subscribes for $8,000, said Edward L. Fuller subscribes for $8,000, and the said Robert W. Archbald subscribes for $0,000."

Then the court goes on:

Then the court goes ou:

The fair import of the language of the statement that the subscribed capital was payable "on the execution hereof" is that it was to be paid down, and the subsequent recording of the statement is an assertion that the subscribers have performed their promise and paid their subscriptions into the treasury. To enter upon business with the credit which the possession of a paid-up capital of $25,000 would give the association, when in fact nothing had been paid, either in money or property, was an evasion of the law and a fraud upon the public.

Did Judge Buffington direct your attention to that language used by the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania?—A. I never saw that case or heard what you have just read, Mr. Manager. I only assume that it must have been that case to which he referred. He spoke of it as having been used by some one in aspersion of his character.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I ask the manager whether in justice and fairness he ought not to read the next sentence and not stop where he did?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We have had the whole opinion printed in the record, but I have no objection to reading it all except that it would take time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think the next sentence qualifying what has just been read ought to be read before the Senate in the same connection. Let me read it, if you will not.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Very well; I will read the whole opinion.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Only the next sentence that qualified what you have just read.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I read as follows:

To enter upon business with the credit which the possession of a paid-up capital of $25,000 would give the association, when in fact nothing had been paid, either in money or property, was an evasion of the law and a fraud upon the public.

In saying this we do not impute an intention to defraud or reflect upon the motives of the gentlemen by whom the Amity Coal Co. was organized.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is what I wanted read.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Of course very naturally the Supreme Court wanted to qualify what it said.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I object to argument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has grave doubt of the propriety of reading extracts from that case except so far as it may be intended to show what was generally known to the

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is the fact, and I merely desire to know of the witness, and I read it solely for the purpose of knowing, whether Judge Buffington, who was a judge in Pennsylvania, had directed the attention of the witness to that case or if anything was said about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the witness's own opinion is not a matter in controversy.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I am not asking for the witness's opinion, but he has referred to a conversation he had with Judge Buffington, and I am merely asking him, on cross-examination, if Judge Buffington said anything about that particular matter. I think it is entirely a proper question. What did I understand the witness to say?

The WITNESS. I never read that case, and, of course, not the language that has just been read by the manager, nor did I ever hear it read. I heard only just what I have said, that Judge Buffington spoke of that case as having been brought up by some one when Judge Archbald was appointed to the Commerce Court: and he said to me that he knew all the facts in the case, and that in his opinion there was nothing in it. That is the only time I ever heard any allusion to what I presume to be the case the manager has referred to.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, we are willing that the witness shall be excused.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One minute. Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Did I understand, Judge Gray, that this conversation between you and Judge Buffington was on a matter in relation to this or some case that was brought up as an objection to Judge Archbald before he was appointed to the Commerce Court?-A. Yes.

Q. And it resulted in the defeat of his appointment?-A. No. Mr. SIMPSON. I think that is all. The witness may be finally excused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is excused.

TESTIMONY OF J. B. M'PHERSON. J. B. McPherson appeared, and having been duly sworn was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You are circuit judge of the United States?--A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what circuit?-A. Third circuit.

Q. Located in Pennsylvania, in the city of Philadelphia?-Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?—A. Yes; I have known Judge Archbald for about 20 years at least.

Q. Do you know him socially as well as a judge?-A. I do. Q. Can you tell us, please, in very brief language, how well you have known him socially?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair that is not a proper question.

Mr. SIMPSON. It is simply to lead up to show the extent of his acquaintance with the judge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel should ask the wit-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel should ask the witness if he knows his general reputation.

Mr. SIMPSON. But I have to lead up to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I suggest that the question be put without any leading at all.

Mr. SIMPSON. Well, the manager may not know there are two senses of the phrase "lead to."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will propound the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will propound the question in proper form.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Do you know other people who know him?—A. To some extent.

Q. How long have you known other people who knew him?-About as long as I have known him myself.

Q. Will you please tell us what his general reputation is for integrity?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. First, does the witness know his general reputation?

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Do you know his general reputation for integrity?-A. I know it in the sense that I know about it as I know about the reputation of many other people. I have never heard it questioned.

Q. Have you sat with him as a judge?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I object to that as immaterial. I think the witness has answered the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the purport of the question?

Mr. Manager SIMPSON. It is simply to lead up to his general reputation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Can not the question be propounded without the counsel leading up to it?

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) What is his general reputation for integrity as a judge?—A. I make the same answer that I made to the other question. I never heard it questioned.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the managers). Cross-examine.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is excused.

TESTIMONY OF D. NEWLIN FELL.

D. Newlin Fell appeared.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Now, I want to inquire of counsel if this witness is to be examined along the same line.

Mr. SIMPSON. This witness and a number of other witnesses to follow are to be examined along the same line.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, this will make the fourth witness on this line. I wish to call the attention of the President and of the Senate to the fact that the managers will not offer any testimony on this subject, except what we have offered on the cross-examination of the first two witnesses, and therefore we feel that a limit ought to be placed upon the number of witnesses that can be used by the respondent for this particular purpose. We ask that that limit be fixed to four wit-I think that is the usual number everywhere. nesses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In this case the Chair would not take the responsibility of fixing it unless the Senate indicates a purpose to that effect. The respondent will go on.

Mr. SIMPSON. I can assure the Chair we will not infringe any fair rule.

D. Newlin Fell was sworn, and examined as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You are Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania ?- A. I am.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?-A. I do.

Q. How long have you known him?-A. Some 30 years. Q. Do you know other people who know him?-A. I do.

Q. Do you know what his general reputation for integrity, is?-A. I do.

Q. What is it?—A. Very good. I never heard it questioned. Mr. SIMPSON (to the managers). Cross-examine, Mr. Manager NORRIS. No questions. Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. I thank you, Judge.

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES E. RICE.

Charles E. Rice appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You are president judge of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you known him?—A. More than 35 years.

Q. Do you know other people who know him?-A. Very well. Q. Do you know what his general reputation for integrity is?—A. I think I do.

Q. What is it?-A. Good.

Q. How near to him have you lived during this period?-A. I live in the adjoining county.

Q. How far away-how many miles?-A. Eighteen or nine-

Q. Do you know his general reputation for integrity as a judge?—A. I do. Q. What is it?—A. Good.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the managers). Cross-examine.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I take it that these witnesses as to reputation may be considered as discharged when they leave the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witnesses will be finally discharged unless otherwise specified.

TESTIMONY OF M. J. HOBAN.

M. J. Hoban appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) What is your profession, please?—
A. I am bishop of the Catholic Church.
Q. Where?—A. In Scranton.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?-A. I have known him for 16 years.

Q. Do you know other people who know him?-A. Several;

yes, sir.
Q. What do you mean by "several"?—A. I have no doubt all the prominent people of Scranton know him.

Q. Do you know his general reputation for integrity?—A. He has a reputation for integrity in Scranton.

Q. What is his reputation?—A. His reputation is good.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the managers). Cross-examine.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.
Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. We are much obliged to you. You will be discharged.

TESTIMONY OF W. W. SCRANTON.

W. W. Scranton appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) State your name, please .- A. W. W. Scranton.

Q. Where do you reside?-A. I live in Scranton.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?-A. Yes; I have known him about 55 years.

Q. Do you know other people who know him?-A. Oh, yes. Q. Do you know what his general reputation for integrity is?—A. I think so.

Q. Well, you tell us, please, what it is .-- A. His reputation for integrity is good. I think it is as good as possible.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the managers). Cross-examine.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. You may be discharged.

TESTIMONY OF ALONZO T. SEARLE.

Alonzo T. Searle appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) You are one of the judges of the State of Pennsylvania?—A. I am.

Q. Of what county?-A. The twenty-second district, Wayne County.

Q. Are you any relation to Edward R. W. Searle?-A. I am

Q. You were one of the contributors to the purse that was given to Judge Archbald when he sailed for Europe some years A. I was.

Q. Will you tell us, please, what your connection with that matter was?—A. Two or three days before Judge Archbald sailed I received a phone message from the clerk of the court stating that the judge was to sail on a certain day and if convenient that he would like to have me come down to New York and see the judge off. It was convenient, and I went down to New York. I met the clerk of the court at the Hotel Marlborough the evening before the judge sailed. He then told me that some of the judge's friends and attorneys had raised a purse to be given to him on that trip. Then I went to my own hotel. The next morning I went over to the Hotel Marlborough and Mr. Searle and I went down to the boat. The money that Mr. Searle had the next morning was in a package all done up. What was in the package, whether $1 or $500, I do not know, only as Mr. Searle said. I did not know what was in the package. He asked me if I would hand it to Judge Archbald and make a few remarks. I said I would not make a few remarks, but we wrote upon it, either he or I, I do not know who: "Hon. R. W. Archbald; sailing orders; not to be opened until 24 hours at sea." This I handed Judge Archbald.

Q. When you handed it to him and until the ship left the wharf was, so far as you know, the package still sealed up?-

A. It surely was.

Q. Did you know that there was included in that package the names of the subscribers to that fund?—A. I did not. I would say I noticed Maj. Warren testified I was at that time would say I noticed Maj. Warren testined I was at that time assistant United States attorney. I was judge at that time.

Q. Did Judge Archbald say anything to you when you handed it to him, that you recall?—A. I think he said, "What does this mean?" and I said, "A good sailor never questions his orders."

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Judge, you heard Maj. Warren's testimony in regard to his contribution?—A. Yes. Q. Was he mistaken about it?—A. He certainly was.

Q. You did not get any contribution from Maj. Warren?—A. Not from anybody, and I never heard of the matter until I met the clerk of the court at the Hotel Marlborough the night before.

Q. The only person with whom you had any conversation, either directly or indirectly, was Mr. Searle, the clerk of the judge's court?-A. It was.

Q. You did not know how much money there was in the envelope?-A. I did not.

Q. You did not make any contribution yourself, did you?-A. I did.

Q. Did you give that to the clerk?—A. I gave a check to the clerk that night, because I knew nothing about the matter, and I gave him a check.

Q. At whose request?-A. I do not think he asked me for money. I think I said I would be glad to contribute. I do not think he asked for any money.

Q. He did not suggest that you should?-A. I do not think

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.
Mr. SIMPSON (to the witness). You may be discharged.
The Witness. May I be discharged?
Mr. Manager NORRIS. Yes, sir.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN VON BERGEN.

John Von Bergen appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Mr. Von Bergen, you reside in Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What official position do you hold at the present time?-A. At present I am mayor of Scranton.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with Judge Archbald?—A. Well, since I was quite a small boy—perhaps 25 years. Q. Are you accuainted with the speech of the people of that community?-A. Fairly well; yes. Q. You are acquainted with people who know Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know his reputation in that community?-A. I know it in so far as it can be judged by the speech of the people whom I have met.

Q. What, from the speech of the people, is his reputation for honesty and integrity?—A. Ask the question again, please.
Q. What, from the speech of the people in that community, is his reputation for honesty and integrity?—A. I would say it was good.

Mr. MARTIN (to the managers). Cross-examine.
The Witness. I want to say that I never heard his reputation for integrity under question until this matter came up. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be excused.

Mr. MARTIN. That is all.

TESTIMONY OF SAMUEL J. M. M'CARRELL,

Samuel J. M. McCarrell appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Where do you reside, Judge McCarrell?—A. Harrisburg, Pa.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. I am.

Q. How long have you been acquainted with Judge Archbald?—A. For 15 or 20 years.

Q. Are you acquainted with other people who know Judge Archbald?—A. I am.

Q. Are you acquainted with his reputation?—A. I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel has not propounded the question in proper shape. The question is if the witness knows his general reputation, and then—

Mr. MARTIN. I will see if I get the meaning of the Chair.
[To the witness.] What is his reputation for honesty and integrity, if you know?

The WITNESS. Good.

Q. What was your answer, sir?-A. Good. I never heard it questioned by anyone.

Q. What is his reputation for honesty and integrity as a judge, if you know ?- A. Good. I never heard it questioned by

Mr. MARTIN (to the managers). Cross-examine.

The Witness. I may say that— Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Mr. MARTIN. What were you about to say? The Witness. I was about to say—

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I think that is

W. D. RUSSELL. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, while we are waiting for the next witness, I ask that the witness W. D. Russell, who was subprenaed on behalf of the managers, may be finally discharged at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

TESTIMONY FROM JOHN M. GARMAN.

John M. Garman appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Where do you reside?-A. Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Q. How far is that from Scranton?-A. Eighteen miles.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. Very well. Q. How long have you known him?-A. About 30 to 32 years.

Q. Are you acquainted with the speech of the people in the community in which he has lived and moved with reference to his honesty and integrity?-A. I am.

Q. What, from the speech of the people, is his reputation for honesty and integrity?-A. Good.

O. What, from the speech of the people in that community, is his reputation for judicial honesty and integrity?-A. Good. Mr. MARTIN (to the managers). Cross-examine.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be excused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is finally excused. TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM A. STONE.

William A. Stone appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Where is your place of residence?-A. Pittsburgh, Pa.

Q. You were at one time governor of the State of Pennsylvania?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald?-A. I do.

Q. How long have you known Judge Archbald?—A. I have known him at least 21 years. I do not know but that I have known him a little longer, but at least 21 years.

Q. Do you know other people who know Judge Archbald?-

A. Yes, sir; a great many people.

Q. What, from the speech of those people who know him, is his reputation for honesty and integrity?-A. Good.

Mr. MARTIN (to the managers). Have you any questions? Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be excused. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is finally excused. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I should like to be heard briefly.

Mr. President, the managers have offered no character witnesses anywhere in these proceedings; it is not their purpose to offer any character witnesses. Ten character witnesses have been examined. The rule adopted, or the practice, I may say, to be more accurate, in all the courts of justice, so far as I know, is that the court has the discretionary power to limit the number of witnesses as to character. I take it that that power is an inseparable incident of the court to regulate its proceedings and for the purpose, among others, of bringing the trial to an end.

In so far as I know, all courts permit a reasonable number of witnesses to be examined on character; but where the testimony of the character of the party is not controverted the court has always, after a reasonable number of witnesses have been examined, held that no more should be examined on that par-ticular matter. Some of the courts of the Union hold that four character witnesses are sufficient where the testimony of those witnesses is not controverted. We have another instance. The Supreme Court of Illinois is permitted to prescribe rules, and among the rules that they have prescribed is that there can be only eight character witnesses examined where the question of character is not controverted. That rule of the Supreme Court of Illinois has the force and effect of a statute there. That is the most liberal rule that I can now call to mind on the subject obtaining in any of the courts.

So, Mr. President, I respectfully submit to you and to the Senate that after these gentlemen have examined 10 witnesses on character and when the testimony of those character witnesses is not disputed, is not controverted, and when the managers tell the Senate it will not be controverted, it seems to me that the further examination of character witnesses might well be dispensed with. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes, of course, that the practice is such as the manager has indicated, and the necessity of it is apparent. Otherwise the time of a court might be indefinitely taken up through the introduction of innumerable witnesses. At the same time, the Chair recognizes that in this case the character of the respondent is necessarily in issue, and on account of the gravity of the case and the peculiar position which the Presiding Officer holds, simply as the mouthpiece of the Senate, the Chair does not feel authorized to take the responsibility of shutting off the respondent in the proof which he seeks to make upon this line. The Senate has full control over the matter whenever it sees proper to exer-

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, not desiring to discuss the question as to which the Chair has indicated his ruling, I desire to respectfully submit to him another reason. This evidence as to character is not only not controverted, but will not be controverted by the managers; but the evidence is merely cumulative, and the courts have always held that there was a right to limit cumulative testimony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair assumes that counsel for the respondent will not exceed proper limits in this regard. In the absence of direction from the Senate, the Chair will not interfere with counsel in their proper presentation of their defense in this particular according to their judgment of the best way to do it.

JAMES H. TORREY SWORN.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I submit the order which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri presents an order in which he asks the concurrence of the Senate. The order will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the number of character witnesses shall be limited

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I raise the question of a quorum. There is no quorum present.

Mr. SIMPSON. We will limit, if I may

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel will suspend. Senator from New Hampshire has made the point of order that there is no quorum present. Under the rule the Secretary will proceed to call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Cullom du Pont Gallinger Guggenheim Hitchcock Johnson, Me. Johnston, Ala. Smith, S. C. Smoot Stephenson Ashurst O'Gorman Oliver Overman Page Perkins Perky Pomerene Reed Richardson Root Simmons Smith, Ariz. Smith, Ga. Smith, Md. Smith, Mich. O'Gorman Bacon Bailey Stephenson Stone Sutherland Swanson Thornton Tillman Borah Bourne Brandegee Bristow Bryan Chamberlain Chilton Jones Kenyon La Follette Lodge McCumber Martin, Va. Townsend Warren Wetmore Works Clapp Clark, Wyo. Clarke, Ark. Crane Crawford Myers Newlands

I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Mr. BRYAN. FLETCHER] is absent from the Senate Chamber on business of the Senate

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the call of the Senate 57 Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] presents an order, which will be read to the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the number of character witnesses shall be limited

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, if it will save any time we are perfectly willing to limit ourselves to 15 character witnesses without any order of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, without;

objection.

Mr. MARTIN. In view of the adoption of the order to limit the number of character witnesses, we should like to withdraw Mr. Torrey, who has just been sworn, inasmuch as he was to testify as to another matter. We desire now that Henry Belin, jr., may be called.

TESTIMONY OF HENRY BELIN, JR.

Henry Belin, jr., having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Mr. Belin, where do you reside?-A. Scranton.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?-A. About 35 years. Q. Are you acquainted with other people who know Judge Archbald ?-A. Yes.

Q. From the speech of those people who know him, what is his reputation for honesty and integrity?-A. Perfectly good.

Mr. MARTIN. Do the managers desire to examine this witness?

Mr. Manager WEBB. I do not care to ask him any questions.

Mr. MARTIN. Then he may be discharged.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be discharged. TESTIMONY OF W. L. CONNELL.

W. L. Connell, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Mr. Connell, where do you live?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. How long have you lived there?-A. I have lived there all my life-50 years.

Q. During that time have you been acquainted with Judge Archbald?—A. I have known Judge Archbald practically all my

Q. Are you acquainted with other people there who know him?--A. I am.

Q. What, from the speech of those people who know him, is his reputation for honesty and integrity?-A. It is very high.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it desired by the managers to cross-examine the witness?

Mr. Manager WEBB. We have no questions, Mr. President. Mr. MARTIN. The witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be discharged. TESTIMONY OF E. B. STURGES.

E. B. Sturges, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Mr. Sturges, do you live in Scranton?-A. Yes, sir; I make that my headquarters.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?—A. I am. Q. How long have you been acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. Over 40 years. Q. Are you acquainted with other people who know him?-A.

I am. Q. What is your business, Mr. Sturges?—A. By profession I am a lawyer. I practiced law in Scranton for about 25 years. My health gave out. As some one said, I wanted to get honest, and I went into other business.

Q. What, from the speech of people who know Judge Archbald in that community, is his reputation for honesty and integrity?—A. I do not think you could find a man who knows Judge Archbald well that would not—

Mr. Manager WEBB (to the witness). Just answer the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will suspend.
Mr. Manager'WEBB. I insist on the question being answered categorically, according to the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will please respond to the question directly without commenting.

The Witness. Will you allow me to make an apology? The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; proceed with your testimony

The WITNESS. His reputation could not be better, in my judgment.

Mr. MARTIN. Is it desired by the managers to cross-examine the witness?

Mr. Manager WEBB. We have no questions, Mr. President. Mr. MARTIN. The witness may be discharged.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be discharged. TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH O'BRIEN.

Joseph O'Brien, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Mr. O'Brien, you live in Scranton?-A. I do.

Q. What is your profession?—A. Practicing law.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. I am.

Q. For how many years have you been acquainted with Judge Archbald?-A. For 30 years.

Q. Are you acquainted with other people in that community who know Judge Archbald?—A. I am. Q. What, from the speech of those people who know Judge Archbald, is his reputation in the community for honesty and ttegrity?—A. The very best. Mr. MARTIN. You may cross-examine, gentlemen. integrity?-

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Where did you say you reside?—A. In the city of Scranton, sir.

Q. Are you a member of a firm of attorneys there?-A. A member of the firm of O'Brien & Kelly.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Mr. MARTIN. The witness may be discharged.

TESTIMONY OF A. LEO WEIL,

A. Leo Weil, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. MARTIN.) Where do you live, Mr. Weil?-A. In Pittsburgh.

Q. You know Judge Archbald?-A. I do.

Q. How long have you known Judge Archbald?-A. I have known him over 10 years.

Q. Do you know other people who know him?-A. I do.

Q. What, from the speech of the people who know him, is his reputation for honesty and integrity?—A. Excellent.

Mr. MARTIN. You may cross-examine, gentlemen.

Cross-examination:

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I did not hear the name of this witness.

Mr. MARTIN. A. Leo Weil. Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Where do you reside?—A. Pittsburgh.

Q. Are you acquainted with the reputation of Judge Archbald in Scranton?-A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what his reputation is in Pittsburgh?—A. I do.

Q. Have you heard his reputation discussed by anybody in Pittsburgh?—A. I have.
Q. By whom?—A. I can not recall any names, but when Judge Archbald came to Pittsburgh to hold court the bar and those connected with the court discussed his character as a judge.

Q. Was there any member of the bar there who knew or professed to know anything about his reputation for honesty?-They professed to know because they declared his reputation was of the highest.

Q. Can you tell why there was any occasion for the discussion in Pittsburgh of his reputation for honesty?-A. Yes, sir; I can.

Q. Had there anything arisen in which his reputation as an honest man was in dispute?—A. When a judge from another district comes to a city like Pittsburgh to hold a Federal court we naturally discuss what kind of a man he is before whom we are to try our cases.

Q. Exactly; but how do you find out anything that is said about his honesty by men who necessarily were not acquainted with him?-A. There were undoubtedly some there who were acquainted with him.

Q. There were some?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Do you know who they were?—A. I do not recall their names at this time.

Q. Had you heard anyone who was acquainted with him talk about his reputation when he came there to hold court?had, because the first time he came there to try a case I had a most important case to try, and I was naturally anxious to know the kind of a man before whom it was to be tried.

Q. And you looked up his reputation for honesty in Pittsburgh at that time?—A. No; but I paid attention to what members of the bar said his reputation was.

Q. How often did he come there to hold court?—A. Oh, I can not say—a number of times.

Q. Was he there long at any time?—A. Sometimes for several weeks.

Q. That was not in his district, was it?—A. No; he was in the middle district, and Pittsburgh is in the western district.

Q. Was that when he was Federal judge or State judge?—A. Federal judge.

Q. You never heard of him until he came there to hold court, did you?-A. Oh, I had heard his name simply, but nothing more.

Q. Was the reputation which you heard discussed connected with the times and the incidents when he was there holding Federal court?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all. Mr. MARTIN. That is all, Mr. Weil.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, Mr. Saums was on the stand when we adjourned last night, and I obtained from him some of his papers which we wanted to use. I handed them to Mr. Manager Sterling, so that he might have them overnight, as he desired to examine them. We can not proceed with the examination without the papers.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, Mr. Manager Sterling has been here all afternoon, and is in the corridor now, I think.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Suppose, then, in order to save time, that we have Mr. Torrey called back and examine Mr. Saums afterwards.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES H. TORREY.

James H. Torrey, having been previously sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Torrey, give your full name, please.—A. James H. Torrey.

Q. And your residence.—A. Scranton.

Q. And your business.—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. Member of what firm?—A. Welles & Torrey.

Q. How long have you been practicing law in that town, Mr. Torrey?-A. Thirty-six years.

Q. And you have been with Mr. Welles how long?-A. Since 1898.

Q. Is your practice there of a general character—in the city courts, in the Federal courts, and so on ?-A. It is; yes, sir.

Q. Did you at any time represent Mr. Conn, who is an officer of the Laurel line, as it is called?-A. We are regularly retained by that line; yes, sir.

Q. By the corporation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the company that has a little line running from Wilkes-Barre to Scranton?—A. Yes, sir; the Laurel line.

Q. There have been some questions asked here of Mr. Conn as to how he found out that I had a certain contract. I will show you the paper, and perhaps you can throw some light on that subject. I show you United States Senate Exhibit No. 22.

The Witness (after examining the paper). I recognize the paper; yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think I should state, Mr. President, in order that the Senate may know what we are talking about, that that is the contract which it has been testified was drawn up by Judge Archbald when it was expected to make the sale to Conn, in which he recites that it was between him and Williams on the one hand and Conn's company on the other; and there were some pencil interlineations in that paper, about which we had some testimony.

O. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Now, Mr. Torrey, will you tell me whether you were consulted by Mr. Conn in reference to that proposed purchase?—A. We were; yes, sir.

Q. And what did you do about it?—A. I think either Judge

Archbald or Mr. Conn came to me, in the first instance, saying that they had agreed upon the terms embodied in this contract, subject to the examination of the title, and requested that our firm examine the title. I was especially busy at that time, and turned it over to Mr. Welles, who made the examination of title and found that there were defects in it. After he had reported that—I do not know just when it was—Judge Archbald came to me to inquire what our report was and what could be done about it. I told him that one of three things could be done, and only those—either we must get a warranty conveyance from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. of the dump, or, regarding it as personal property the title to which passed upon delivery, we would take the lease of it at the royalty mentioned on this contract, paying for it as we got it; or, if it was to be a down payment, that we must have some indemnity. He could not comply with any one of those three suggestions. The Hillside Co. would not give any warranty of any title whatever in the dump; they would simply sell their interest. They had to have the down payment in order to pay the purchase money, and so they could not let us pay for it as we got it, and Judge Archbald said they were not in a position to give us indemnity, and that ended it.

Q. Then you advised Conn what?-A. Then we advised him not to sign the agreement.

Q. In that connection, did anything come to your notice about the claim of the Everhart heirs?-A. I believe that was the principal reason why Mr. Welles refused to pass the title.

Q. Do you know it to be a fact that your partner refused to pass that title to Conn because of the outstanding interest of the Everhart heirs?—A. I do; yes, sir.

Q. Now, in reference to the history of that paper, do you know in whose handwriting the pencil interlineations there are?—A. I would not know myself; no, sir.

Q. You only know from hearsay?-A. I only know from report.

Q. Did you receive that paper from anybody with the request that you trace it back and see in whose handwriting the pencil memoranda were?-A. When you were in Scranton preparing this case shortly before it began-

Q. When I was in Scranton?-A. Yes, sir; when you were in Scranton, Mr. Worthington, you showed the paper to me, and asked me if I knew in whose handwriting it was. I told you it was not in the handwriting of any member of our firm.

Q. You say "handwriting"; you mean the pencil interlineations?—A. The pencil interlineations; yes, sir. I said if you would give me time I thought I could find out. I sent it to Judge Knapp's office, of the firm of Warren, Knapp & O'Malley, to see if it was in the handwriting of anyone there. I thought possibly it might be in Judge Knapp's handwriting, though I did not think it was. I then sent my youngest son, a member of the firm, to Mr. Conn's office to ascertain if it was in the handwriting of anyone there, knowing that it had been in his possession. Mr. Conn was out of town, but his private secretary told him-

Mr. Manager DAVIS. Mr. President, I submit that this is clearly incompetent. The witness may identify the handwriting, if he knows it, and, of course, if he does not, what he learned from other people is not competent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The honorable manager directed a long question to Mr. Conn as to how the paper found its way into Mr. Worthington's possession. Just what he meant I do not know, but counsel seemed to think it was important and wanted to know whether Mr. Conn was in collusion with Judge Archbald's counsel in the matter.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. If this examination is simply to relieve the feelings of counsel in the matter, I am willing to do that at once and to state that it was not asked because of any presumed impropriety on the part of counsel, but simply in an endeavor to get Mr. Conn to state the history of the document; and he further stated, if it is necessary to relieve counsel's feelings, that these interlineations were in his handwriting.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am not concerned now about the feelings of the managers or in whose handwriting it was, but there was a very protracted examination of Mr. Conn on this point, apparently on the line that there was something wrong point, apparently on the line that there was something wrong in his knowing that I had the paper, but I showed it to him as he testified, just before he went on the stand.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Do you say that you sent this paper to Mr. Conn's office by your son and partner?—A. Yes; and the report came back that his private secretary—Mr. Manager DAVIS. I object.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not care what the report was.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) But did you send it with the

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) But did you send it with the information that I wanted to know whose handwriting it was on the paper?—A. Exactly; yes, sir.

Q. You spoke about Judge Archbald coming there, and Judge Archbald's name is used as one of the contracting parties there?-A. It is.

Q. I should like to know whether there was any suggestion that Judge Archbald's connection with the proposed purchase from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and Robertson & Law and the sale to Conn was a matter that was to be kept quiet or concealed in any way?-A. Not at all. He frankly said that he was interested with Mr. Williams.

Q. Was that known generally in your office?-A. It was,

Q. To how many people?—A. Well, to at least three.

Q. Were you one of the contributors to the purse which was presented to Judge Archbald when he was about to sail for Europe in the spring of 1910?—A. I was.

Q. I wish you would tell your connection with that.—A. Mr. Searle, the clerk of the court, called at my office and said that such a purse was being contemplated and some of the lawyers had subscribed to it, and asked if we desired to do so; and I think after consulting with my partner, Mr. Welles, I drew a firm check, or had it drawn, and gave it to him.

Q. Did you understand it was a presentation of a sum of money which was to be made to Judge Archbald?—A. I did;

yes, sir.

Q. You were told about the circumstances under which it was to be given?—A. I do not think so.

Q. You had no communication with Judge Archbald on the subject?-A. Not at all.

Q. Did you know that it was thought best to conceal it from him until he was about to sail?—A. I did not know anything about that. I assumed—and I am not quite sure I did not say to Mr. Searle—that it would be wiser not to let Judge Archbald know the names of the contributors; and I certainly assumed that he would not know.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You may cross-examine.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) What was the amount of your contribution, Mr. Torrey?—A. If I recollect aright, it was $25.
Mr. Manager DAVIS. We have no further questions.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all. The witness may be discharged. Please call Mr. Welles and finish up this phase.

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES HOPKINS WELLES.

Charles Hopkins Welles, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Do you reside in Scranton?-A. I do.

Q. How long have you lived in that burg?—A. Since 1861. Q. What is your business?—A. I am a lawyer.

Q. You are a partner, I believe, of Mr. Torrey, who has just left the stand?—A. I am.
Q. And have been for how many years?—A. Twelve or fifteen.

Q. Are you acquainted with Judge Archbald, the respondent here?-A. I am.

Q. And you have known him how long?-A. All his life, I think.

Q. Well, or only incidentally?-A. Very well.

Q. Do you remember anything about the submission to your firm by Mr. Conn. of the Laurel line, of a proposed contract in reference to the Katydid culm dump?-A. I do.

Q. What did you have to do with that, Mr. Welles?-A. It was given to me to look up the question of the title to the property.

Q. Given to you by whom?-A. By Mr. Conn as representing, I believe, the Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley Railroad Co.

Q. The so-called Laurel line?—A. The so-called Laurel line. Q. Up there they called it the Laurel line for short?-A. Yes.

Q. Did you investigate the title?-A. I did. And reported to Mr. Conn?-A. I did.

Q. What was your conclusion so communicated to him?—A.

That there was no title that they could sell.

Q. What was the trouble, Mr. Welles?—A. As soon as it came into my hands I went to Judge Knapp's office to see if I could get the lease under which this culm dump was produced. found in Judge Knapp's office Judge Archbald, Mr. Beyea, the real estate agent of the Pennsylvania Coal Co., and I asked for the lease. I was told by Judge Knapp that the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. owned one half of this property in fee; that the other undivided half was owned by others. I asked them there under what authority; if the Hillside Coal & Iron Co, had any lease of the property; and they smiled and said they had a letter. I wanted to see the letter, and they said that they had just been calling up Mr. W. A. May, the general superintendent, and the letter could not be found. I asked them from whom the letter came, and they said it came from Mr. Darling-E. P. Darlingway back in 1882 or 1883, I think it was—somewhere in the early eighties—and it was simply a letter that authorized the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. to mine on payment of a certain royalty; I do not remember the amount. I asked them if they could not furnish me a copy of this letter, and they said they could not. I said I could not pass the title on such a record as that. Before I communicated that to Mr. Conn—

Q. Judge Archbald was there all the time, I understand?—A.

Judge Archbald was there all this time. Before I communicated that to Mr. Conn I had a call from Mr. John M. Robertson. He said that Robertson & Law owned the culm dump and that they could give a good title to it. I said I begged to differ with him, and I asked him this question: "Did you not relinquish this property several years ago?" He said yes; they had. said, "How can you claim, then, to be in possession of that dump?" He said, "We have on several occasions gone there and taken away a wagonload of culm." I said, "As long as and taken away a wagonload of culm." I said, "As long as you have withdrawn from the property, I can not understand how you can make any claim to it." Then a man by the name of E. J. Williams came in. He said, "We have got good title to that property." I said, "I beg to differ with you; I do not think you have any title at all." I communicated these facts to Mr. Conn, and Conn said that somebody representing a portion of this mydivided helf theorem when the letter of Mr. tion of this undivided half, through whom the letter of Mr. Darling came, claimed to be the owners of it and would not consent to its being sold, and that ended all of the negotiations with reference to it.

Q. If I understand you, you found nobody had the title?—A.

I said to Mr. Beyen, in Judge Archbald's presence—
Q. Mr. Beyen was an officer of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?—
A. He was the real estate agent of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. I said to him, "If you will allow the Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley Railroad Co. to take the culm away and pay for it as they take it, my clients will consent to take it under those circumstances." He said, "No; we will sell our interest in it, and that is all we will sell." I said, "Will you give an agreement came under our general charge.

that we can remove all of that culm?" He said no; that they would give no agreement; that all they would do would be to sell what interest they had in it. This culm dump had been produced by Robertson & Law on a corner of the property that could not be reached by the mining operations of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and I believe it was all mined out; that there was nothing left, and this was the only thing that remained, and it was known as the Katydid dump.

Q. The upshot of it was that you advised Mr. Conn what?-

A. That he could not safely purchase it.

Q. Did he afterwards consult with you further about it, or was that the final conclusion?-A. Several times we consulted about it, and it was thought that the interests might be harmonized, and he get the title; but it could not be brought about.

Q. Who were the other persons who had the other interests? I think you have not mentioned them.—A. The Everhart heirs.

Q. The Everhart heirs?—A. The Everhart heirs had a certain portion, and some family that lived near Birdsboro, not far from Reading, owned the other undivided interests in it. never got so far that I looked up the title at all as to the ownership of the land from which the coal was produced.

Q. What suggestion was made by anybody, if any was made, with respect to the fact that Judge Archbald was interested in this matter, and that his dealing with you in regard to it was something that should be kept quiet?—A. Never anything of the kind occurred.

Q. As a matter of fact how many people about your office and Judge Knapp's office knew it, to your knowledge?—A. There were five in our firm. We all knew it.

Q. How was it in Judge Knapp's office?—A. Judge Knapp knew of it and Mr. Beyen, of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., knew of it.

Q. By the way, do you know about the condition of Mr. Beyea's health now?—A. I do not. I know that he was very ill at Atlantic City. I think it was said to be paralysis; but I am not certain about that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) When you were instructed to investigate this title you went first to the office of Mr. Knapp, as I understand?—A. I had nothing from which I could get any reference to the title, and I went to Judge Knapp knowing he was the attorney of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. He was on the second floor above

Q. And in his office, at that interview, you found Mr. Beyea, of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and Judge Archbald?—A. And Judge Archbald.

Q. And you discussed this matter in this conversation you have narrated?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it occurred in the presence of those three gentlemen?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You found that the original paper from which the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. derived its rights could not be found?-A. To the undivided half that was in the Everharts and this other family; the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. owned half of it in fee and the other half was owned by the others.

Q. I say you could not find the original document?-A. I could not find anything which showed they had any right to mine it at all, except their undivided half.

Q. And you found their statement as to their possession unsatisfactory to you?-A. Yes.

Q. And on those two grounds you refused to advise the purchase of the property?-A. Yes.

Q. And that is as far as you went in the way of the examination of the title?—A. Yes, sir. It was admitted that the Hill-side Coal & Iron Co. only owned half of it.

Q. But held the other half under this paper which could not be produced?—A. Under this letter, they said. It was a very remarkable thing, in my mind.

Q. They told you, did they not, that in accordance with that letter they had paid royalty upon the operation for a great many years?—A. No.

Q. Royalties had been paid and received by virtue of that paper?—A. I do not know.

Q. What was the exact date of this conference?—A. Sometime, I think, early in this year. I went through my records to see if I could find any communications with Mr. Conn. We always keep carbon copies of our correspondence. I could not find anything. I think all my communications with Mr. Conn were verbal in my office.

Q. You say in the month of January?-A. I think it was a little later than January. As I say, I have no way of ascer-We made no charges, because we are general counsel for the Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley Railroad Co., and this

Q. Can you say whether it occurred before or after the 1st of March?-A. I could not fix it more definitely than I have done.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. We have nothing further.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Can you say really that it did not occur in November or December, 1911?-A. I can not I thought at first that it was in December, but I have nothing to refresh my memory from that would fix the date.

Q. If I understand you about the letter concerning which Mr. Manager Davis asked you, you said it was a remarkable letter and that it could not be produced .- A. No; I said that they should mine coal under a letter written by an attorney and not by the owner of the property.

Q. Was that letter produced?—A. No, sir.

Q. They could not find the letter?-A. They could not find the letter or give me a copy of it.

- Q. When you say the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. had a one-half interest in the land, was it the land that the coal was mined -A. Yes, sir.
- Q. (Continuing.) Or on which it was placed, or both?-A. Both.

Q. And the other one-half was outstanding?-A. The other half was outstanding.

- Q. And Robertson & Law were claiming to own it by virtue of having made the dump?-A. They were claiming that they made the dump and that they had been in possession of it, and that they could sell it and give a good title. I differed with them.
- Q. I think you differed with Mr. Williams about the title, to.—A. I believe I did; yes. I told him that I did not think he knew much about the law in reference to those things.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all. The WITNESS. May I be excused?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You can be finally discharged, Mr. Welles.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Yes. Mr. WORTHINGTON. While we are on this let us call Judge Knapp.

TESTIMONY OF HENRY A. KNAPP.

Henry A. Knapp, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Judge Knapp, your full name is Henry A. Knapp?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And you live in Scranton?—A. Yes; I live in Scranton.

Q. You are a member of the bar?-A. I am.

Q. How long have you been practicing that profession?-A. About 37 years-between 37 and 38 years.

Q. Of what firm are you a member?-A. Warren, Knapp &

O'Malley.

Q. How long has that firm been in existence, if you remember?—A. In that form the firm has been in existence only about two or three years, since Judge Willard died. Prior to his death the firm was Willard, Warren & Knapp, and in that way it had been in existence something over 20 years.

Q. In 1911 was your firm so unfortunate as to represent any railroad companies in that region?-A. Oh, yes; we did some business for what is called the Lackawanna, which is the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad, although, as Maj. Warren has said, they have their own legal department there; but still we do some of their business. We also do some business for the Erie Railroad Co. and sometimes we do some business for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.

Q. Do you remember anything that took place with reference to the examination of the title or inquiries about the title to the Katydid dump, when it was expected that a sale might be made to Mr. Conn's company, the Laurel line?—A. Yes, sir. I remember Capt. May speaking to me about the matter, but I do not think there was any real examination made of the title beyond what Capt. May explained to us as to the manner in which this dump had been formed by the operation of the coal company and by Robertson & Law. I do not think we made any examination of the title such as you would make-to examine the records-but we simply took the statement of Capt. May and tried to form some conclusion as to the ownership of the culm pile.

Q. Are you able to reach any conclusion now?-A. Well, I thought then, and I still think, that it was a matter which was involved in a good deal of doubt.

The truth of the matter is that when that culm pile was formed such things were not considered worth very much, and nobody paid very much attention to the ownership of it; but I should say that Robertson & Law certainly had an interest. It is probable that the Hillside had an interest, so far at least as the royalty was concerned, on the small sizes of coal. And whether or not the Everhart heirs and the E. & G. Brooke Land Co. had an interest would be a matter about which lawyers might differ, I think.

Q. Very well. Is it still an open question?-A. I regard it as quite so.

Q. Is there anything certain about the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.'s interest in it except that it certainly would have the royalty which it had been receiving?—A. No; I think Robertson & Law might very well claim that they had the entire right to the dump, only paying royalties upon such sizes as under their arrangement with the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. they had agreed to pay royalties upon. But, of course, that would mean washing it out, you know, and they had no intention of washing it out, because they did not care to go to the expense necessary to put up the appliances for that purpose.

Q. Do you remember, in connection with this title, Judge Archbald being at your office or being in communication with him about it?-A. I remember his being there once on the matter; yes.

Q. Do you remember who was present?-A. I remember that Mr. Conn was present and Mr. Welles and Judge Archbald. Whether anybody else was present I do not remember, but I do not think there was. I think it was confined to the four besides myself.

Q. Is that the only time, so far as you recollect, that you came into immediate contact with Judge Archbald about that matter?-A. I do not recall that at any other time I ever said a word to him or he to me in relation to the matter. I do not think so.

Q. On that occasion did he come in by the front door or slip in some back way?-A. Oh, he came in the front door, as he always does.

Q. Was there any sort of an attempt to conceal the fact that he was interested in this matter?—A. None whatever. Q. And was trying to get this title fixed up?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. How many people in your office knew all about it?-A. Why, everybody that had—well, I do not know about that. I think Maj. Warren knew about it at the time; he had a certain amount of familiarity with it; and I know I drew some papers which would make the stenographers somewhat knowing about it-although I do not know that his name was in the paper-but I drew the contract of sale. But certainly there was no attempt at concealment or anything of that kind.

Q. Do you recall Capt. May consulting you in reference to any written communications that had reached him as to this Katydid dump?—A. I remember that Capt. May said to me after, as I supposed they had practically agreed upon a sale, that the Everhart heirs were giving him notice, or had given him notice, or that he had received notices from several of them, and that they all raised very strong opposition to his doing any such thing; and I remember his taking the matter up with me in consultation for advice on the subject.

Q. What advice did you give him?-A. I told him that I did not think his company, the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., could afford to get into a controversy with the Everhart heirs, and that if they objected to his selling the dump I thought he had better not sell it. I can give the reason why I told him that.

Q. That is what I want to know. You understood that the company was proposing to convey only its interest in the Katydid dump?—A. That is true, and if the whole thing was confined to that one dump there was no necessity whatever of taking any notice of any notices by the Everhart heirs. But the difficulty was that the Hillside was mining coal from the same property, and they were cleaning coal from the same property by some kind of a washery, and their tenure, or their agreement, with the Everhart heirs and with the E. & G. Brooke Land Co., the other owners of the property, was very indefinite. I did not regard that the Hillside had a very good contract with these people, you understand. It was nothing but an old letter, written a great many years ago, giving no term, and might be terminated at any time. At any rate, they might put up the claim that they could terminate it at any time. For that reason it seemed to me to be very unwise on the part of the Hillside to get into any controversy with them over this culm dump.

Q. Do you remember whether at that time Capt. May told you that he had sent out a form of a contract to be executed? A. Well, I know that he got a form of contract, because I drew it.

Q. You drew it yourself?—A. Yes.
Q. Was this conversation in which you advised him not to sell after you drew the contract?—A. Yes.
Q. Can you fix the time at all?—A. I think it was early in April; I should say about the 10th or 11th.

Q. Was it before or after the fact that these charges against Judge Archbald were to be investigated came out in the Scranton newspaper?-A. It was about 10 days or 2 weeks before, or something like that.

Q. I want particularly to ask you whether in the advice you gave about that matter you were governed at all by anything you had heard or heard rumored about Judge Archbald?—A. I had not heard Not the slightest. I had not heard anything. a thing at that time.

Q. Was there any reason, except what you have stated, that there was danger that your client might get into trouble with the Everhart heirs?-A. No reason except what I have stated.

Q. How did the value of this other property to which the Everhart heirs had some claim and which the Hillside Co. was operating under some arrangement, compare with the value of the Katydid dump?—A. Vastly in excess.

Q. You know Mr. Beyea, the real estate agent of the Hillside?-A. I know him very well.

Q. Do you know his condition at the present time?-A. Yes, I know that he is in a very precarious condition of health. He was seized with some kind of mental trouble in New York some few weeks ago and was moved to a hospital in Philadelphia, where he was attended to by his brother, who is a physician. I saw a letter which he recently wrote to Mr. Beyea, in which he said he thought if Mr. Beyea could be kept quiet for two or three months he might get well, but it would be absolutely impossible for him to do any business in that time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager DAVIS.) I understood you to say, Judge Knapp, that in your opinion Robertson & Law had the right to wash this dump and take the coal from it, paying royalty to the Hillside?—A. I should think so. It is usually covered, you understand, by a written contract. Here there was no contract, either between the Everharts and the Hillside or between the Hillside and Robertson & Law; so that the matter was not covered. But usually the operator who takes out the coal, the result of which operation is the making of a culm pile, is entitled to the sizes of coal in the culm pile which are smaller than the royalty sizes; that is, they are smaller than those upon which a royalty has been reserved. I think Robertson & Law would have been entitled, but the difficulty was their washery or something or other burned down, and they kind of left the place. There was a good deal of talk for a time about their having abandoned it. Of course, if they had abandoned it they would have lost all interest in it; but then the Hillside never set up a claim they had actually abandoned it. They were perfectly willing they should proceed in it if it could be settled and some money got out of it.

Q. Of course, if Robertson & Law had that right, their assignee would have the same right, with the consent of the Hill-side Co.?—A. Oh, yes; if they had a right there an assignee would have the right.

Q. You knew, of course, the facts about the status of that title before you drew the contract between these parties?-A.

I believe I did.

Q. You knew at the inception of the negotiations everything you knew when the negotiations ended?-A. Well, I imagine I did, although I do not know that I can recall whether I learned anything during the time the negotiations were under way or whether I did not; but all I knew I learned from Capt. May, who asked me to do this business for his company.

Q. And the contract which you drew only provided for the sale of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. of its right, title, and interest in the property?-A. That is my recollection.

Q. You knew, of course, that such a contract could not affect the title of the Everhart heirs, if any title they had?-A. Yes.

Q. Therefore there was no just ground of protest on their part against any transaction of that kind?—A. While perhaps the contract could not affect their rights, yet the situation might be such as to call for their interference. I will explain that this way: If somebody had gone to work taking away that culm under this contract, for instance, if it had been turned over to the Laurel line, or whoever purchased it, and they had gone to work to take it away, the Everharts would have then been put to a lawsuit. They would have had to get out an injunction in court or to have done something about it. It was always, I believe, the claim and hope of the Everharts that all the parties would be united, and with some division of the purchase money, so that they would be recognized as part owners in that dump and get their money without any lawsuit.

Q. They would have been put to a lawsuit, which, I gather from you, there would have been no foundation for, in your judgment.—A. I am not so sure about that. They were owners of an interest in the land from which this culm pile had been

Q. You have already expressed your opinion that the producers or makers of this culm pile owned it without reference to the ownership of the land on which it rested .-- A. That is true. If they are mining coal under a coal lease, and get a lease in this way, that the operator shall get all the coal, has been decided that under such a lease the operator is entitled to the small sizes of coal upon which no royalty is reserved. But the Hillside Co. did not even have that from the Everharts. The E. & G. Brooke Land Co. simply had a letter a great many years old, in which it was stated that they might mine the coal and pay a certain royalty to the coal owners. Now, that letter I never had seen, nor a copy of it. It was simply a matter of information that such a letter had been written by Mr. Darling, who was a prominent lawyer in Wilkes-Barre a great many years ago. His son was on the stand yesterday. He has been dead some years. Mr. E. P. Darling, when an attorney for the E. & G. Brooke Land Co. and the Everhart heirs, had written a letter to the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. stating that they might mine this coal and pay a certain royalty to those interests. You understand that as long as they took those royalties month by month it closed up the past, but it did not open out the future.

Q. You knew in all the years the company had been mining there never had been any dispute about the terms on which they had been doing it. You knew the contents of that letter, whether in existence or not, and that it was perfectly understood between the lessors on the one hand and the company on the other, did you not?—A. I am not so sure. I have never seen the letter or a copy of it. If I could have seen the letter perhaps I could have come to a little more definite conclusion as to the matter.

Q. Is there any phase of this matter on which you are sure?-A. You can not say that I ought to be sure of a letter I never saw or of which I have never seen a copy. I am only stating what I believe to be the fact.

Q. Did you ever draw an option or contract for sale from the company to E. J. Williams?--A. My recollection is that the one

I did draw was to E. J. Williams.

Q. When was that drawn?—A. I can not fix the time exactly.

I should say it was early this year.

Q. It was the 10th of last April, was it not?—A. I presume it was about that time. I would not say for sure. I think it was about that time

Q. That paper was drawn for the purpose of empowering Williams to dispose of the Hillside interest in this property, was it not?-A. No; I did not so regard it. I should rather regard it as a contract of sale to Williams by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. An assignable contract, of course?—A. Well, I believe so.

I have not seen it since. I can not state. Q. You knew at that time that Judge Archbald was a party in interest, I suppose?—A. As I have said, I knew he was interested in the matter some way, but how I did not know. The only way I knew he was interested in it was because he called at my office on a day when Mr. Welles and Mr. Conn, of the Laurel Line, were there. The nature of his interest I did not know.

Mr. Manager DAVIS. That is all.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON, presenting paper.) I will ask you to look at this paper, U. S. S. Exhibit No. 5 in this case, and tell me whether that is the contract about which you have been testifying and which you drew for Capt. May?—A. (Examining.) I believe this is it. I have not read it through, but certainly it has every appearance of it. I believe this is the one. It is the one. I recognize it.

In the questions you have been asked by Mr. Manager Davis, as I understood your answers, you have been referring to the Katydid dump and the title to it, the ownership of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to ask you what you have to say about the interests of the Everharts and the danger you feared as to the other more important, more valuable

Mr. Manager DAVIS. I object to that. Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what ground?

Mr. Manager DAVIS. On the ground that it has all been gone over in chief.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Perhaps it was. I did not know it was the manager's recollection of the examination in chief.
The Witness. Is that all?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Judge Knapp. The witness may be discharged. It is possible he may have to come back. TESTIMONY OF L. A. WATRES.

L. A. Watres appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Watres, you are a member of the bar?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long since you have been in active practice?-A. About 15 years. I have been practicing but very little in 15

O. Do you remember the purse that was given to Judge Archbald on his sailing to Europe some years ago?-A. I do.

Q. Were you one of the contributors to that purse?-A. I

O. Will you tell us, please, the circumstances under which your contribution was asked for and received ?- A. Mr. E. R. W. Searle, who was at that time the clerk of the court, the district court, called upon me to solicit a contribution to the fund. After some hesitation I told him that if it was a fact that the names of the contributors were not to be given to the judge I would very gladly subscribe, and I did subscribe. He told me that the matter would be attended to. I presumed it would be. I gave him my check.

Q. Had you been a personal friend of Judge Archbald's? A. For 30 years and over. I have known him for over 40 years. I lived in the same community with him for over 40

Q. Do you represent any railroad or other companies?-A. No, sir; I do not think so at the present time.

Mr. SIMPSON (to the mahagers). Cross-examine, gentle-

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) You reside at Scranton, Mr. Watres?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are a practicing attorney?-A. I have not been in active practice for about 15 years.

Q. Did anyone else talk to you about making a contribution to this fund except the clerk, Searle?-A. No one but Mr. Searle.

Q. He was clerk of Judge Archbald's court at that time?—A.

He was the clerk of that court; yes, sir.
Q. Did you hear any talk in Scranton about it by any other persons?-A. I did not.

Q. You did not know of any meeting of attorneys whatever in regard to it?-A. I did not.

- You did not hear of any meeting where they discussed the advisability of getting up a dinner, and finally abandoned it because they could not get the fellows together?—A. I think Mr. Searle spoke of it in a casual way at the time. I do not recall what was said.
- Q. All you know about it is what Mr. Searle told you?-A. That is all. He is the only one I ever talked to about it. Q. What was the amount of your contribution?-A. $50.
- Q. Did he tell you when he solicited the contribution that it was to be given to the judge as a purse in cash?-A. I believe he did; yes, sir.
- Q. Did you get any acknowledgment of your contribution? A. I received from the judge a letter from Europe, I do not recall just where, a few weeks after he landed there. The letter was giving a description of his trip and mentioning the purse, and he seemed to be quite embarrassed in that letter.

Q. Have you that letter ?-A. I have not; no, sir.

- Q. Have you made any effort to get it?-A. No, sir. If I recall it aright, that letter was not preserved.
- O. It was not preserved?-A. I believe not, as I recall it. As I do with many such letters, I threw it in the wastebasket as of no consequence to file.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think that is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. The witness may be discharged, Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be discharged. TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM J. FITZGERALD.

William J. Fitzgerald appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Fitzgerald, you are a member of the bar?-A. I am.

Q. Of what firm?-A. O'Brien & Kelly.

Q. Do you remember the case of Peale against the Marian

Q. What connection had O'Brien & Kelly with that case?—A. We were of counsel for the plaintiff.

What connection had you with it personally?-A. I personally assisted in the trial of the case.

Q. Will you look at this book [presenting book] which I hand you and tell us, please, what that is?—A. (Examining.) That is a printed copy of the record as prepared by the appellant in the circuit court of appeals, in the case of the Marian Coal Co., appellant, versus John W. Peale, appellee, in the third circuit, being an appeal from the case of Peale versus the Marian Coal Co. before the middle district of Pennsylvania.

Q. I call your attention in this book to the order which is made by Judge Archbald on January 27, 1911, on page 44. you present when that order was made?-A. I was.

Will you state the circumstances leading up to the making of the order and what occurred at the time it was made?-A.

Prior to that date-

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the attorney what the object of this evidence is. I do not want to object to it if it is proper, but I do not see its relevancy or materiality.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Boland, when upon the witness stand, testified that-I will not say the principal objection, but the first objection which he made and which caused him to feel his enmity toward Judge Archbald was the requirement to go to New York made by Judge Archbald. This is the particular order to which he refers. I am referring simply to that.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, if I am not mistaken. that evidence was brought out on cross-examination. It is immaterial evidence, and I do not believe that counsel ought to be allowed to controvert it.

Mr. SIMPSON. I will not say that the point was not brought out in cross-examination; that is to say, voluntarily stated by Mr. Boland; but in point of fact, the connection of this case was the act of the managers then, and it is referred to by the managers in the second article of impeachment.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. But the reference to the order was only for the purpose of connecting the dates or something of that kind. I think all those are in the RECORD, and there is no dispute about them. As far as the order that was made, that is not in controversy here. We have no contention in regard to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair remembers there is no issue raised in the articles of impeachment as to the improper conduct of Judge Archbald in that particular case. the Chair recollects correctly, the counsel for the respondent endeavored to show by Mr. Boland that he was prejudiced against Judge Archbald, and that there was, in fact, a conspiracy on his part to institute proceedings against Judge Arch-No issue was raised by the managers as to any connection with that case, and the Chair does not think that this evidence would elucidate any issue raised in this case.

Mr. SIMPSON. The allegation, if the Chair please, in the articles of impeachment is that Judge Archbald was sitting as a judge in the district court and acted in this particular matter while sitting as a judge in the district court, and at the same time had caused or consented to the presentation to Mr. Boland of a note for $500 to be discounted while he was sitting as a judge in relation to this particular matter.

When Mr. Boland was examined in chief he was asked about this particular case. He did not go, as I recall, in fairness to the managers, into any details in relation to that matter, but he was asked about the particular case, and when in crossexamination his attention was called to the particular case then he made the remark which I referred to awhile ago.

Now, the thought on behalf of the respondent is that we are justified in showing the facts in relation to the matter about which Mr. Boland had built up his complaint, namely, that the fact as he stated it was not so; that there was no such order made as he said was made, but on the contrary that this identical order, the one he referred to, was entirely different and distinct from that which he said it was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the managers had offered evidence on that subject and the respondent had objected to it, the Chair would certainly have ruled it out. Now, if counsel bring in what is irrelevant testimony, the Chair does not think that it is competent for them to proceed further with the elaboration of that matter. If the fact indicated by the question were established by the evidence it would not affect the case in any manner, because there is no charge in the articles of impeachment of any improper conduct of Judge Archbald in that particular case, as the Chair recollects.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I want to offer this evidence in an entirely different light. I was endeavoring, from the statements made by Mr. Boland, to show that he was biased and prejudiced against Judge Archbald. The Chair ruled that I could not do that by asking him, but that I must prove that as an independent fact when the time came for us to introduce our testimony.

William P. Boland has testified here that because of what Judge Archbald did when this order about which we are now asking this witness was made he made up his mind that Judge Archbald was dishonest, and that he proceeded from that time to watch him to try to prove that that was so. Now, we propose to prove by this witness Boland's prejudice and bias against Judge Archbald. It is competent, without any reference to what the articles of impeachment say, because he is a witness in this case, to show that, so far from it being the fact that Judge Archbald at that time did anything as to which the witness could properly reach any conclusion that he was not honest, in everything he did he was perfectly fair and just and did all that William P. Boland's counsel wanted him to do, and that instead, as Mr. Boland claimed, of cutting off Boland from taking testimony or getting at the facts he wanted, he was given every opportunity that his counsel asked.

It will show, therefore, in the strongest light that William P. Boland is prejudiced against Judge Archbald, and that no word that he says should weigh against Judge Archbald a feather's weight when we find the absolute lack of foundation there is for the kind of statements William P. Boland is making and has made.

This whole proceeding, according to William P. Boland and what we know of this case so far as we have gone, grows out of the fact that William P. Boland says that in what Judge Archbald did when that order was made he showed to William Boland that he was not honest. Let me remind the Chair what happened on cross-examination when I was asking questions of Mr. Boland. I read from page 459 of the record:

tions of Mr. Boland. I read from page 450 of the record:

Mr. Worthington. I do not wish to be persistent about it, but certainly I have a right at some time or other to show that this witness has a deadly bias and prejudice, an unreasonable bias, as I think, against Judge Archbald.

The President pro tempore. There is no question about the counsel's right in the matter.

Mr. Worthington. The President holds that I can not do it on cross-examination, and the question is how it may come up later.

The President pro tempore. The Chair does not rule on that, but the Chair rules that the counsel can not do it by the infraction of another rule. The counsel can cross-examine the witness in any way that may disclose that fact without going into subjects matter relating to this case which were not brought out in the direct examination. Counsel are not concluded by that. There are two ways in which counsel can reach all that is wanted. One is by proving the same by other parties and the other by introducing the witness as his own.

Now, I want to prove by other parties what it was thus ruled

Now, I want to prove by other parties what it was thus ruled I could not prove out of the mouth of William P. Boland himself. And I want to make this the starting point in proving that everything William P. Bolaud says Judge Archbald did that was wrong is a falsehood, and to show that he can not stand here for one minute on the theory that he is testifying as an impartial witness, as he pretended to be, against the judge, but is his deadly enemy. Certainly his testimony is here, put in here by the managers, and Senators ought to know all they can know that will tend to show that he is biased and prejudiced in the highest possible degree against Judge Archbald, so that they may consider whether his evidence is worth anything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that this evidence is admissible. Issue can not be raised upon a matter which is not in issue at all. The same latitude now sought would open the case to an interminable investigation as applied to other features of the case.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think, sir, under the ruling of the Chair, there is no other question that we wish to ask this witness, and he may therefore be discharged.

I desire, sir, not for the purpose of having it printed in the record, but for the purpose of use hereafter in the argument, to offer this transcript [producing a volume], which completes the record as offered in evidence on behalf of the managers. Their's was only a part-

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Will you let us see that, please? Mr. SIMPSON. Certainly. It is the official transcript of the record. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. In what case?

Mr. SIMPSON. The Peale case. Mr. Manager NORRIS. We object to that, Mr. President, as being immaterial. This is the record in the Peale case?

Mr. SIMPSON. It is the record in the Peale case.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. The case of the Marian Coal Co.

against Peale?

Mr. SIMPSON. The case of Peale against The Marian Coal Co.—the record of the circuit court of appeals on appeal.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Everything that is of any materiality that would be shown by that is already in evidence, such as dates, and so forth, but the record of that case, Mr. President, is certainly not material in this case; it has not anything what-ever to do with it that I can see. Besides, it is a record of I do not know how many pages.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. About a thousand pages.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Of printed matter,

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. To be accurate, I can give the number of pages-1,034, I think it is.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. In addition, it is objectionable for other reasons. It is objectionable because it would unnecessarily encumber the record.

Mr. SIMPSON. I did not ask to have it printed at all. Mr. Manager NORRIS. Then how do you expect it to be considered?

Mr. SIMPSON. The same as the evidence you offered which was left with the Secretary but not to be printed-in exactly the same way and in no other way.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I desire to call attention to what this is. The title of it is:

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third District. Marian Coal Co., appellant, v. John W. Peale, appellee. Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

The following is a transcript of the record of the above case appealed from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

This case was not in the Commerce Court at all. We insist that it is not proper evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are counsel prepared to show in what way this case has any bearing upon the case the Senate is now investigating?

Mr. SIMPSON. The managers have offered in evidence here, sir, a portion of the docket entries in this particular case; it is only a portion of the docket entries which they have offered. This record shows the remainder of the docket entries and the matter to which the docket entries relate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire if the docket entries in this case have been put in evidence?

Mr. SIMPSON. A portion of them have been by the mana-

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I think that some of them have,

I may say

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks, if that is the case, and only a part of the entries have been introduced, that the suggestion of counsel is a reasonable one; that the matter shall be subject to use just as were the other voluminous documents which were offered by the managers-not to go into the record, but with permission to use them in argument.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all I wish, sir.
Mr. Manager NORRIS. I have not examined the document, but I presume it contains all the evidence that was taken in that case.

Mr. SIMPSON. If you are going to argue from the evidence, you are going to do more than I am. I am simply offering this as a complete record.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I want to fix it so that you can not. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggestion of the Chair is to apply the same limitations as were applied to the voluminous documents presented by the managers-simply that the document may be referred to by counsel in argument without being incorporated in the record.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We think it is not admissible to go into a discussion of the evidence in that case here.

Mr. SIMPSON. We will not do so, Mr. Manager CLAYTON.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We will claim the right, Mr. President, to restrict the use of that document in the argument and in the trial of the case.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, in fairness to the managers, we ought to know something of the use to which this record is to be put. Here is a document of over a thousand pages, and, by virtue of its admission, counsel can use any part of it they may desire. We have not examined it; it would take us a week to do so if we took the time to do it, and we ought to know or have some indication as to what they are going to use it for and what particular parts they expect to use, in order that we may, if we see fit, call for evidence in rebuttal of it or in explanation of it. It would be unreasonable for us. with the information we have now, to be compelled to go through this large volume of documentary evidence and to see what evidence we might be called upon to offer in rebuttal at our peril.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair only gave that direction because of the fact that the managers had been allowed similar liberty as to four or five different books that were presented, as the Chair recollects.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I am not aware of that. Mr. WORTHINGTON. There were introduced in evidence a pile of briefs and other documents in a case before the Interstate Commerce Commission—the lighterage case—a pile of printed matter about that high [indicating], without the slightest suggestion to us as to what use the managers were going to make of it.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That was confined to the printing on the outside of the briefs.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It was not confined to the printing on the outside of the briefs; but they produced all of the documents, and they were all admitted in evidence, not to be printed but to be used as occasion might require. I may say the great

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I think that counsel— Mr. WORTHINGTON. The great bulk of this record here is made up of the evidence in the case. Of course we are not going to refer to that in any way, and that narrows it down to a few pages which show the proceedings in the case. Those proceedings are very material in this trial. They figure in a great many ways. That was the case which was pending when the $500 note which has been referred to was presented to Boland for discount; that is the case as to which Mr. Boland has testified that he thought Judge Archbald was dishonest because of certain orders that he made in it; that is the case as to which Judge Witmer delivered a final opinion upon the merits in the summer of 1911, and as to which Mr. Boland charges that a decree or judgment was brought about by the Interposition of Judge Archbald under the command of Mr. Loomis.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Now, Mr. President, I want to object to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel and the managers will proceed one at a time in order.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. I want to object, Mr. President, to the statement which counsel is making and which he has made a great many times in regard to what that evidence shows.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You deny that William P. Boland— Mr. Manager NORRIS. We deny distinctly that we brought it out. It was all brought out on cross-examination. Counsel have set up here a straw man of their own, and are now proceeding to knock it down. We did not bring it out; we are not responsible for it; we have never denied that Mr. Boland was a prejudiced witness and had a bias against Judge Archbald. I think he admitted it himself; at least we have never controverted it; and we do not want to be put to the trouble now, at our peril, of overlooking to answer a whole lot of evidence in another case which we have never examined, which has never been called to our attention, and as to which, even now, in over a thousand pages it is not suggested what part counsel expect to use either in argument or in quotations to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If counsel will indicate the parts which they desire to use, the Chair will then pass upon the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well, we will do that later.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. So it is not admitted in evidence at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not under the statement of the managers.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. May we not have an understanding that by the meeting of the court to-morrow counsel will indicate what parts of it they desire to introduce and take the matter

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel will indicate at their convenience the parts which they wish to introduce, and they will have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think we can do that by the time we again meet to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it can be passed on tomorrow

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is satisfactory.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair only gave the direction which he indicated because of the fact that similar books had been presented in a similar way and there had been no objection made on the other side; but objection now being made, counsel will have to indicate the portions they wish to introduce.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may be complete I wish to ask now for the final discharge of the following witnesses, who were summoned with a charge of the following withesses, who were summoned with a view of giving evidence as to reputation and character, but whom, under the rule in which we have acquiesced, we can not examine: Henry M. Edwards, E. C. Newcomb, Frederick W. Fleitz, and W. W. Watson, all of Scranton; Joseph C. Fraley, of Philadelphia; and Henry C. Niles, Harold M. McClure, Charles M. Clement, and W. J. Schaffer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witnesses named, summoned on the part of the respondent will be finally discharged.

moned on the part of the respondent, will be finally discharged.

CHARLES B. SQUIRE.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, the witness Charles B. Squire, for whom an attachment was issued the other day, is now in attendance upon the sessions of the Senate sitting in the trial of this case. After a personal conversation with him, I have every reason to believe that the following are the facts in the case, as he has stated them to me: That his mother, who is, I believe he says, of the advanced age of 87 years, very ill; that he thought his presence was necessary there, which detained him a day or two; that as soon as her condition permitted he had bought his ticket and was in the act of starting to Washington to obey the subpœna when the officer stepped into his office and served the attachment upon him. Those facts being true-and I have no reason to doubt them, and after talking to the witness I believe they are true-I therefore ask that the order of attachment be vacated, but I do not wish the witness discharged at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the statement made, without objection, the order of attachment will be vacated, but the witness will remain in attendance.

TESTIMONY OF JOHN P. KELLY.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask that John P. Kelly be called. John P. Kelly, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Are you a practicing attorney?-A.

Q. Of what bar?-A. Lackawanna County, Pa.

Q. And what is the name of the firm?-A. O'Brien & Kelly.

Q. You know Judge Archbald?—A. Very well. Q. How long have you known him?—A. About 30 years.

Q. Were you one of the contributors to the purse which was given to him at the time he sailed for Europe some years ago?-A. I was

Q. Will you please tell us the circumstances under which your contribution was made?-A. Well, as I remember, Mr. E. R. W. Searle, the clerk of the court, spoke to me about it. He said that Judge Archbald was going to take a trip to Europe and that some of his friends were getting up a present or testimonial or purse, or something of that kind—I have for-gotten the exact language—and he wanted to know if I wanted to be in it, and I told him I certainly did. We talked it over a little while, about the kind of present he was to get. He spoke about his getting a present of money, and I expressed my idea that that was all right, or words to that effect, and I gave Mr. Searle our firm check for $50. I spoke to Mr. O'Brien about it, but I do not remember whether I spoke to him about it before or since, but the check covered both our contributions.

Q. Will you tell us whether or not you knew that the names of the contributors were to be disclosed to Judge Archbald?-A. Well, I am not clear about that, but my recollection is that they were not. I am not at all clear about it. It did not make very much of an impression upon my mind.

Q. You were on the bench for a while with Judge Archbald?-A. Yes; for about a year.

Mr. SIMPSON. Cross-examine, gentlemen.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) Did you talk with anybody else about it except Mr. Searle, the clerk of the court?—A. I do not remember talking to anybody else, except my partners, Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Fitzgerald. I think I spoke to Mr. Fitzgerald about it afterwards.

Q. They were your partners?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was not anybody else who suggested any contribution except the clerk, was there?-A. Not to me; not that I have any recollection of.

Q. You did not know of anybody else making any such suggestion, did you?-A. I have no recollection of anyone else.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the witness may be discharged. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is finally dis-

TESTIMONY OF FRANK R. SHATTUCK.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask that Frank R. Shattuck be called. Frank R. Shattuck, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Shattuck, you are a member of the bar?-A. I am, in Philadelphia.

Q. Were you counsel in the various suits brought by the Old Plymouth Coal Co. against various insurance companies?—A. I represented all the defendants.

Q. Did you take any part in the trial in the one case that was tried?—A. The cases in the United States court were tried as one. I tried for the defendant and Mr. Lenahan for the plaintiff.

Q. How many cases, roughly speaking, were there altogether?—A. I think there were 13 suits brought in the Lackawanna court, and I removed 6, involving over $2,000, to the United States court.

Q. Now, will you tell us, please, in as brief a way as you possibly can, the circumstances attending that trial?-A. The trial had proceeded three or four days until the afternoon of a Friday—I think it was the 19th of November—when Mr. Lenahan, who sat within 3 or 4 feet of me, made the suggestion that if I would make him an offer they might be able to settle,

I told him I never made offers for insurance companies, but if he would submit one I would see what I could do.

He then proposed to take the face amount of the policies, without interest-that was $27,000-and there was something over $2,000 of interest. My first offer was $20,000. He then came to $25,000, and then I agreed to split the difference, at $22,500. A remark was made by him, to the effect, "I suppose you would go $500 more to help to pay counsel fees." I said: "Yes; $500 does not make much difference where there is so much involved." So I offered $23,000. Mr. Lenahan said he was only the trial lawyer; that the real attorney was a gentleman named Reynolds, and that they were very stubborn, and he could not do much with them, but he suggested that we wait over until morning and they might be able to arrive at a settlement.

The next morning I recall was Saturday morning, and the plaintiff's side were quite late coming in. They were, I think, in an outside room debating this thing. But when they came in Mr. Lenahan stated they would take $23,000. Mr. Reynolds, who was there then, said, "What security have we that the amount will be paid?" I told him that in Philadelphia they generally took my word for that. He said that he was afraid of the financial responsibility of some one. So I made the suggestion that I would give him confessions of judgment, my understanding being that they were to be merely security; that if I did not pay in 15 days he would enter up the judgments. As a matter of fact, the total amount was paid, but, contrary to my understanding, he entered up the judgments. We afterwards had some acrimonious correspondence about the costs

Mr. SIMPSON. Never mind that. The Witness, This is merely important as showing that they were not satisfied afterwards with the settlement.

Q. Who removed the cases from the county court to the United States court?-A. I did.

Q. You were the counsel for the defendant insurance company?—A. Yes, sir; I removed all cases involving over $2,000. There were six.

Q. Will you tell us please whether during that time there was any favor shown to the plaintiff by Judge Archbald?
Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to the question.

wholly immaterial whether there was any favor shown or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear from counsel for the respondent on that objection.

Mr. SIMPSON. I am a little in difficulty how to present it As I understand the article of impeachment, it is claimed that Judge Archbald while acting with Mr. Rissinger, who was a party in interest, as shown by the managers, in the Old Plymouth Coal Co., undertook to sit as judge while interested in this particular matter, thereby, I assume, undertaking to show that there was some partiality or prejudice or some-thing on Judge Archbald's part in behalf of the plaintiff in this case. If the managers disclaim that, of course this ques-tion goes out; I do not want to ask it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will counsel for the respondent point to the particular allegations in the article to which he refers?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have it here. Article 7 says:

That the said coal company was principally owned and entirely controlled by one W. W. Rissinger, which fact was well known to said Robert W. Archbald; that on or about November 1, 1908, and while said suit was pending, the said Robert W. Archbald and the said W. W. Rissinger wrongfully and corruptly agreed together to purchase stock in a gold-mining scheme in Honduras, Central America, for the purpose of speculation and profit.

Just what "wrongfully" and "corruptly" entering into a speculation means, of course, we have to speculate about. Then it goes on:

That in order to secure the money with which to purchase said stock, the said Rissinger executed his promissory note in the sum of $2,500, payable to Robert W. Archbald and Sophia J. Hutchison, which said note was indorsed then and there by the said Robert W. Archbald, for the purpose of having same discounted for cash; that one of the attorneys for said Rissinger in the trial of said suit was one John T. Lenahan; that on the 23d day of November, 1908, said suit came on for trial before said Robert W. Archbald, judge presiding, and a jury, and after the plaintiff's evidence was presented the defendant insurance company demurred to the sufficiency of said evidence and moved for a nonsult, and after extended argument by attorneys for both plaintiff and defendant the said Robert W. Archbald ruled against the defendant and in favor of the plaintiff, and thereupon the defendant proceeded to introduce evidence before the conclusion of which the jury was dismissed and a consent judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $2,500, to be discharged upon the payment of $2,129.63 if paid within 15 days from November 23, 1908, and on the same day judgments were entered in a number of other like suits against different insurance companies, which resulted in the recovery of about $28,000 by the Old Plymouth Coal Co.; that before the expiration of said Robert W. Archbald, presented said note to the said John T. Lenahan for discount, which was refused and which was later discounted by a bank and has never been paid.

All of which acts on the part of the said Robert W. Archbald were improper, unbecoming, and constituted misbehavior in his said office as judge, and render him guilty of a misdemeanor.

We have been wondering in our camp ever since this proceeding opened just what they meant by that and what there was corrupt or wrongful that they intend to charge; and the only thing we can find that they could allege is that because of the relations which they say existed between Rissinger and Judge Archbald he manifested some favoritism in the trial of that case. If it does not mean that, it ought to be pitched out of the court.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I think I can make it clear to the gentleman what there is wrong about it. It will be observed that we do not charge in that count that Judge Archbald extended any favors to the plaintiff in that case, and we are not saying now that he extended any favors to him; but we say this: While Rissinger or his company was a plaintiff in Judge Archbald's court in a number of cases—and it seems from this witness that there were six of them-Judge Archbald entered into a partnership with W. W. Rissinger, and that Judge Archbald got 84 shares of stock in this gold-mining scheme, and that the negotiations were going on while this case was pending in his court; that they began the latter part of September, according to Russell, who was here from New York yesterday; that Mr. Rissinger brought Russell down from New York to talk to Judge Archbald about a transaction; and while those cases were pending in his court before him this man Rissinger negotiated this deal, by which Judge Archbald got 84 shares of stock, which was delivered to him; soon after these cases were terminated, without paying one cent for the stock.

That may not look bad to counsel on the other side, but it does to me, and that is the charge in this count. We have not alleged that Judge Archbald extended the plaintiff any favors and we are not going to try to prove that he extended the plaintiff any favor.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Or that he agreed to?

Mr. Manager STERLING. It is wholly immaterial whether he extended him any favors or not in this case.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Or whether he agreed to? Mr. Manager STERLING. Well, it is pretty hard always for the prosecution to prove the intent; but we will draw our inference; and we believe, and we say now, and we will argue to the Senate when the time comes, that there was an understanding. Why, these men are gentlemen; they do not have to say, "Here, these cases are before you, now you help me along in these cases and we will give you some stock." Gentlemen understand each other.

That is what we say about it, and what we will argue in this case. It looks bad to the managers for a party to a lawsuit, and without knowledge now on the part of the defendant—this gentleman will not say that he had any knowledge of these negotiations going on between the plaintiff and Judge Archbald-to have these transactions with Judge Archbald by which he, without paying anything, gets an interest in this gold-mining scheme.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It seems to me that nothing can more clearly demonstrate the necessity of this evidence than what the honorable manager has said. He said there was an implied understanding between them-being gentlemen, he said, they need not say so-that the plaintiff would be favored. Now, what stronger piece of circumstantial evidence could we offer tending to show that there was no such agreement between them, implied or expressed, than that in the case Judge Archbald acted as an honest and upright judge and favored neither side. In fact Mr. Lanahan, who was one of Rissinger's counsel in the case, testified, as you will remember, that he was called down by the judge when he was examining a witness because he was too sharp about it. And we want to follow that up with the testimony of this gentleman, who was one of the counsel, as to the conduct of Judge Archbald during the trial, so that the Senate may be able to determine whether there is anything in the inference the managers seek to draw from the negotiations about that stock, and that as a matter of fact it was understood between Rissinger and the judge that the judge understood between Rissinger and the judge that the judge would favor him in his suit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask to have the question read exactly as it was propounded.

The Reporter read as follows:

Q. Will you tell us, please, whether during that time there was any favor shown to the plaintiff by Judge Archbaid?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We make the further objection that it would be purely a matter of opinion on the part of the gentleman whether there were any favors extended or not. It is not a matter of fact, but a matter of opinion whether there were any favors rendered or not.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That can be fixed up by changing the form of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to see how that issue could very well be tried out by a question of that kind. If the issue is a legitimate one, the only way it could be determined would be by taking up the trial and going through it step by step to show whether the judge decided each point properly and whether in any case he decided corruptly. The Chair does not think general testimony as to whether the conduct of the case was or was not fair is sufficiently definite or could be made certain. It is not the subject matter of testimony. The Chair, however, will state this: As the Chair understands the issue made by the pleadings, it is that a certain agreement alleged to have been made between the respondent and a litigant in his court was an improper agreement to be made between a judge and a litigant regardless of what may have happened afterwards. I understand that to be the claim.

And regardless of whether or not Mr. Manager STERLING.

it influenced the court's decision.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If that is all they claim-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And there is no allegation that there was a corrupt decision made by the judge in this case. If there was, of course the evidence would be admissible and a good deal more on the same line.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The manager has just said that he was going to argue to the Senate, from the evidence as now in, that Rissinger and the judge understood each other; that without anything being said he was to be favored. Now, if it is necessary in behalf of Judge Archbald to go through every step in the trial and show what questions arose and how he decided them, I submit that even if it should take a week or a month it ought to be done, and they ought not to be allowed to go to the Senate and convict Judge Archbald of that implied agreement without having the benefit of what he did and what rulings he made while the trial went on. As a matter of fact, it will take only a few minutes to show what he did, and then the Senate will be able to conclude from what he did if he had a corrupt intention in his mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is competent for counsel to show anything that was done, and that the question as to any particular act that was done is competent; but the general question as to whether or not the judge was fair or unfair on the trial is, in the opinion of the Chair, too indefinite. It is asking the witness to testify to a conclusion.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Shattuck, in the seventh article of impeachment in this case it is averred that there was a motion made for nonsuit, and after extended argument by the at-torneys for both the plaintiff and the defendant the said Judge Archbald ruled against the defendant and in favor of the plaintiff. Will you tell us, please, exactly what was done in that regard?—A. The suit was brought to recover on insurance policies for the amount covering a washery building and the machinery therein. The washery building had been a breaker belonging to some railroad company, the Delaware & Hudson or the Delaware & Lackawanna, I forget which. The evidence was that they had given to the Rissingers the use of it; that was that they had given to the Rissingers the use of it; that thereupon the Rissingers incorporated this company, and the Rissingers had testified that after they got the old breaker from time to time they put in new boards—the old jackknife proposition, really, as to whether it was the same building or a new building. I made a motion in the usual way for a non-suit on the ground that the evidence had disclosed the fact that the building was not completely and entirely repaired or rebuilt and therefore was the old building.

Judge Archbald denied the motion for a nonsuit on the ground that if the jury believed that the building which was burned was the old building the verdict must be for the de-fendant; but that the question was one entirely for the jury; that he would not pass on it.

I should say there was only one real legal proposition that came up in that case and that proposition Judge Archbald decided for the defendant. It was whether an insurance policy covering two items written for a single premium was an entire contract; and he ruled that it was; and therefore that if the Rissingers could not recover the policies were void under the building item; also that they were barred from recovering on the machinery item. Their claim had been some $18,000 on building and $14,000 on machinery. He ruled they could not recover for the machinery if they could not for the building.

Q. What part, if any, did Judge Archbald take in the negotiations for and leading up to the compromise?—A. He had nothing whatever to do with it. It was entirely between Mr. Lenahan and me.

Mr. SIMPSON. You may cross-examine, gentlemen. Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Mr. SIMPSON. The witness may be discharged, Mr. President.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would like to examine Miss Mary Boland this afternoon, if possible. Her examination will be B very short. She is very anxious to get away, and I have just a single question I wish to ask her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It lacks three minutes of the time for adjournment. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to ex tend the time long enough to examine this witness?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will not ask that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the

Mr. ROOT. I move that the Senate sitting for the consideration of the articles of impeachment adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the managers on the part of the House, the respondent, and his counsel withdrew.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 18, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, December 17, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer

Father of faith and hope and love, we wait upon Thee for the bread of heaven, the water of life, the light that makes bright the dark, smooths the rough way, and inspires to good thoughts and noble deeds, that we may contribute somewhat to the public weal and be reckoned among the benefactors of mankind, thus leaving our footprints along life's way for the inspiration of those who shall come after us. So may the peace that passeth understanding be ours and glory and honor and praise be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois to withhold that suggestion for the present until a few minor matters can be disposed of.

Mr. MANN. I will withhold it for the present,

THE LATE SENATOR RAYNER.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest that I have been recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois made the suggestion that there was no quorum, and at the request of the Chair reserved it, as the Chair asked him to do so until two or three formal matters that will take no time can be disposed of. After that the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas. The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, February 2, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. ISIDOR RAYNER, late a Senator from the State of Maryland.

The order was agreed to.

VIEWS OF MINORITY ON OUTAGE BILL.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to file minority views on the outage bill, reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], a member of the Ways and Means Committee, asks leave to file views of minority on the outage bill. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my point that no quorum is present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move, Mr. Speaker, a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present, and the gentleman from New York moves a call of the House. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the doors were closed, the Clerk called the roll, bers faile to their names:

CHANGE OF REFERENCE-LINCOLN MEMORIAL.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully invite the attention of the Chair to what I conceive to have been an improper reference of Senate concurrent resolution 32, respecting the Lincoln memorial. On Friday, December 13, the Speaker referred this concurrent resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, and cited as an authority for doing so clause 2 of Rule XXIV.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the liberty of suggesting that he did not cite any authority at all, according to his recollection

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

It seems to me, from what the gentleman Mr. BORLAND. from Texas has already stated, that his purpose is to ask a correction of an erroneous reference, or a reference which is claimed to be erroneous, on a matter referred to the Committee on Appropriations by the Speaker. The rule points out how that change of reference may be made, and among other things it is required that it shall be made immediately after the reading of the Journal. I was present in the Chamber and I saw the gentleman from Texas rise, and I understood that the Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. That part of the gentleman's point of order will be overruled, because if there is any trouble about it the Chair is responsible for it.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that the Chair agreed to recognize the gentleman from Texas after certain preliminary business was transacted, but, strictly speaking, the intervention of the motion in regard to the late Senator Rayner would have been intervening business. I do not intend to raise that point of order because the gentleman wishes to raise the question of change of reference, but I do raise this point, that it must be done in accordance with the rules of the House by a motion or by unanimous consent and without debate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is all true. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas can ask unanimous consent.

Mr. BORLAND. But that does not give the gentleman any right to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for Mr. SLAYDEN. the privilege of making a brief statement in reference to the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement. Is there objection?
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to object.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Missouri object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, a motion to correct a reference would be in order at any time, would it not?

The SPEAKER. Yes; by direction of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. By the direction of the committee claiming jurisdiction

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, to be perfectly frank there has not been any formal direction by the committee, although every member of the committee is cognizant of my purpose to do this thing, and is not only willing to have it done but is desirous.

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the chair ruled last summer, after a good deal of debate, after examining the las an amendment in the third degree.

authorities, that the sanction of the committee had to be had. The Chair so ruled in a matter which was raised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hefilm].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw any point of order on the formal action of the committee represented by the gentleman from Texas. We do not make any point upon that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Missouri can not withdraw the point of order so as to bind the Speaker or the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman on the committee that he withdraw his motion. Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman has not yet made any motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that Rule XXIV ought to be strictly enforced.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, then I shall make no motion at this time, but will endeavor to get the formal direction of

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman the first thing after the reading of the Journal on Thursday morning next.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3175, the immigration bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, pending that, parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The rules of the House state that an amendment in the Committee of the Whole can only be debated for 10 minutes. Ordinarily that difficulty is obviated by moving to strike out the last word from the amendment proposed, but in the case of this bill such a motion would appear to be an amendment in the third degree. Unless some agreement is made before we go into the Committee of the Whole, it seems to me that we are making it impossible to debate any amendment for more than 10 minutes. My parliamentary inquiry is as to the Chair's view of the situation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees with the gentleman that if the rule about five minutes' debate was strictly enforced that there would be five minutes' debate on each side and no more, but in the 18 years that the Chair has been here it is only on very rare occasions that that rule has been enforced. The Chair has seen it done two or three times. The Chair knows he en-deavored to get five minutes himself once and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] objected on the ground that time was too precious.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The Chair remembers that is usually obviated by moving to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The situation is this, that the House inserted a substitute to take the place of the Senate bill. Now, in a parliamentary sense that is an amendment. Then somebody—the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], for instance-offers an amendment to the substitute. That apparently exhausts the range of the amendment. Now, nobody the Chair knows of ever considered striking out the last word a bona fide amendment. Of course, we all understand what it is;

it is simply a way to contravene the general rule.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There will be no objection to striking out the last word on this side. We are anxious to have a little bit of discussion on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands, but the gentleman from Massachusetts is trying to find out apparently what would happen if somebody raises a point of order against an amendment to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Precisely.

Mr. MANN. I apprehend the gentleman from Massachusetts knows what will happen; the Chair will be compelled to hold the motion to strike out an amendment which was offered to an amendment was an amendment in the third degree and hence not admissible

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman was going to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will permit, the minority leader raised this point with me in discussion the other day, and I entirely agreed with him as to the construction of the rules.

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about the construction being right.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. In that event, before we go into the Committee of the Whole, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the pro forma amendment shall not be considered Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to object to that. I do not think it would be good practice. When you get into the Committee of the Whole the committee itself can give unanimous consent to any man speaking, and that is all that is necessary.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Ah, but, Mr. Speaker-Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the vote to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may be extended 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by each side. Allusions were made which I think call on me for reply, and I would like to have some little time, and therefore I submit this request.

The SPEAKER. Now, who is to control this 30 minutes?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. To be controlled as it was controlled before.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Gold-

FOGLE] asks unanimous consent-

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the regular order has been demanded by the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. MANN. The gentleman has submitted a request since then.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understand the gentleman from Alabama is willing I shall submit this request.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection and the gentleman from Massachusetts demands the regular order, and the regular order is, Will the House go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3175) entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, with Mr. HAY in the chair.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is entitled to 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] to 20 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before taking advantage of the 15 minutes I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] whether we could not come to an agreement that there should be an extension of time for general debate, say half an hour on each side?

Mr. BURNETT. Not unless we can come to an agreement that there should be a close of debate within a reasonable time and this bill voted on this afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] that that can not be agreed to in committee. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard in a matter of parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The effect of the demand for the regular order as made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] was to prevent my making the request in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the extension of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] desire to take the floor?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to take advantage of even the 15 minutes in which I have a right to speak to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] if he will not agree, without regard to the parliamentary status, to an extension of time of 30 minutes on a side?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that that can not be done in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The committee is proceeding under a rule, and it is impossible for the committee to change that rule even by unanimous consent.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman— Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I still want to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert], chairman of the committee, whether he proposes to conclude his general debate in one speech?

Mr. BURNETT. No; I will yield five minutes now to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Adair], and then afterwards will conclude in one speech.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman take that five minutes now?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. much time remains for general debate on the respective sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Bur-NETT] is entitled to 30 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] to 15 minutes. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I believe the subject of immigration is one of the most important questions before the American people to-day. I shall vote for this bill, and in doing so I feel that I am casting a vote in the interest of American citizenship and in the interest of American institutions. I have listened with great interest and pleasure, and I might say with much profit, to the very able and eloquent discussion of this subject by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath]. While I agree with much they have said upon this subject, I do not yet fully understand how they can justify their opposition to this meritorious bill. I am willing to concede that the marvelous growth and development of the two great cities to which they have referred—New York and Chicago—are largely due to the enterprise, the ability, the capacity, and the progressiveness of many citizens of foreign birth. I am proud of their achievements in both business and professional life. Their loyalty to our country and their devotion to our flag have attracted the attention and won the admiration of all our people. But I do not see how they can oppose this measure. That there are undesirable citizens in every country in the world no one will deny.

We have many of them in the United States, American-born citizens, who contribute but little, if anything, to our country's welfare, and what right have we to unload our undesirable citizens upon any other country, or what right have other nations to unload their undesirable citizens upon us?

You can not make me believe that the dumping of 250,000 illiterates upon our shores annually will not lower the standard of American citizenship and the standard of American living. If this be not true, then our boasted system of schools in this country is a failure, and we are annually wasting millions of dollars of the people's money in their maintenance. You can not tell me that bringing into this country 250,000 illiterates each year and throwing them in direct contact and direct competition with American labor will not reduce the wages of American workmen and the standard of their living. I can see no reason why any Member should oppose this legislation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAIR. I can not yield. I have only five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana declines to

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill is not only in the interest of all American citizens, both of native and foreign birth, but I also believe it is in the interest of illiterate foreigners who expect at some time in the future to make this country their home. It will have a tendency to stimulate and develop a better system of schools the world over and will result in causing thousands of foreigners who desire to become American citizens to prepare themselves for admission.

The bill under consideration reads as follows:

[H. R. 22527, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

A bill to further restrict the admission of aliens into the United States.

A bill to further restrict the admission of aliens into the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That after four months from the approval of this act in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit: All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or the language or dialect of some other country, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted or any citizen of the United States may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not: and such relatives shall be permitted to land.

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read or not the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with copies of uniform slips, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plain type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

Sec. 3. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of this act, to wit: (a) All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit through the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

SEC. 4. That an alien refused admission to the United States under the provisions of this act shall be sent back to the country whence he came in the manner provided by section 19 of "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February 20, 1907.

It will be seen that the main purpose of the bill is to exclude from the United States alien immigrants over 16 years of age who are unable to read their own language or dialect. In order that there might be no doubt about the Hebrew and Yiddish being considered as either a language or dialect, they are expressly embraced in the bill.

From the requirement of the illiteracy test in the bill, there are several exceptions which the committee thought wise to make. We believe that those who are fleeing from religious persecution should find a city of refuge on our shores. Hence the provision excepting immigrants of that class from the test Hence where they are otherwise admissible.

Out of regard for marital and other close family ties and the duties and obligations arising therefrom, as well as high moral considerations, the committee thought proper to make the other exceptions embraced in the bill.

A bill in its main features similar to this was considered by the House on February 20, 1907. The House felt that before action of that nature should be taken there ought to be careful investigation of the question, both in this country and in Europe. An amendment was offered by those opposed to the illiteracy test, providing for a commission for that purpose, and it was adopted.

The commission, after nearly four years of investigation and study of the question both in this country and in Europe, made its report to Congress more than a year ago. There were nine members of that commission, and they were unanimous in the following statement:

The commission as a whole recommends restriction as demanded by economic, moral, and social considerations, furnishes in its report reasons for such restrictions, and points out methods by which Congress can attain the desired result if its judgment coincides with that of the Eight out of the nine, after citing various methods of restriction, concurred in the following report:

A majority of the commission favor the reading and writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

It is certainly interesting, and I believe important, to know some of the reasons which led the commission up to these conclusions, and I will make a few extracts from the "Brief statement of conclusions and recommendations of the commission." On page 25 of this statement they say:

The proportion of the more serious crimes of homicide, blackmail, and robbery, as well as the least serious offenses, is greater among the foreign born. The disproportion in this regard is due principally to the prevalence of homicides and other crimes of personal violence among Italians and to the violation of city ordinances previously

It is certain that southern and eastern European immigrants have almost completely monopolized unskilled labor activities in many of the more important industries. This phase of the industrial situation was made the most important and exhaustive feature of the commission's investigation, and the results show that while the competition of these immigrants has had little, if any, effect on the highly skilled trades, nevertheless, through lack of industrial progress and by reason of large and constant reenforcement from abroad, it has kept conditions in the semiskilled and unskilled occupations from advancing.

Several elements peculiar to the new immigrants contributed to this result. They came from countries where low economic conditions prevailed and where conditions of labor were bad. They were content to accept wages and conditions which the native Americans and immigrants of the older class had come to regard as unsatisfactory. They were not, as a rule, engaged at lower wages than had been paid to the older workmen for the same class of labor, but their presence in constantly increasing numbers prevented progress among the older wage-earning class, and as a result that class of employees was gradually replaced. An instance of this displacement is shown in the experience in the bituminous coal mines of western Pennsylvania. This section of the bituminous field was the one first entered by the new immigrants, and large numbers of the middle West. Later these fields were also invaded by the new immigrants, and large numbers of the old workers again migrated to the mines of the Southwest, where they still predominate. The effect of the new immigration is clearly shown in the western Pennsylvania fields, where the average wage of the bituminous coal worker is 42 cents a day below the average wage of the bituminous coal worker is 42 cents a day below the average wage of the bituminous coal worker is 42 cents a day below the average wage of the bituminous coal worker is 42 cents a day ter to successfully compete with them. They usually live in cooperative groups and crowd together. Consequently, they are able to save a great part of their earnings, much of which is sent or carried abroad. Moreover, there is a strong tendency on the part of these unaccompanied men to return to their native countries after a few years of labor here. These groups have little contact with American life, learn little of American institutions, and aside from the wages earned profit little by their stay in this country. During their early years in the United States they usually rely for assistance and advice on some member of their race, frequently a saloon keeper or grocer, and almost always a steamship ticket agent and "immigrant banker," who, because of superior intelligence and better knowledge of American ways, commands their confidence. After a longer residence they usually become more self-reliant, but their progress toward assimilation is generally slow. Immigrant families in the industrial centers are more permanent and usually exhibit a stronger tendency toward advancement, although, in most cases, it is a long time before they even approach the ordinary standard of the American or the older immigrant families in the same grade of occupation. This description, of course, is not universally true, but it fairly represents a great part of the recent immigrant population in the United States. Their numbers are so great and the influx is so continuous that even with the remarkable expansion of industry during the past few years there has been created an oversupply of unskilled labor, and in some of the industries this is reflected in a curtailed number of working days and a consequent yearly income among the unskilled workers which is very much less than is indicated by the daily wage rates paid; and while it may not have lowered in a marked degree the American standard of living, it has introduced a lower standard which has become prevalent in the unskilled industry at large.

On pages 33 and 34 they say:

ASSIMILATION OF IMMIGRANTS.

ASSIMILATION OF IMMIGRANTS.

It is difficult to define and still more difficult to correctly measure the tendency of newer immigrant races toward Americanization, or assimilation into the body of the American people. If, however, the tendency to acquire citizenship, to learn the English language, and to abandon native customs and standards of living may be considered as factors, it is found that many of the more recent immigrants are backward in this regard, while some others have made excellent progress. The absence of family life, which is so conspicuous among many southern and eastern Europeans in the United States, is undoubtedly the influence which most effectively retards assimilation. The great majority of some seffectively retards assimilation. The great majority of some wives and families are in their native country. It is a common practice for men of this class in industrial communities to live in boarding or rooming groups, and as they are also usually associated with each other in their work they do not come in contact with Americans, and consequently have little or no incentive to learn the English language, become acquainted with American institutions, or adopt American standards.

On page 37 they say:

As a result of the investigation the commission is unanimously of the opinion that in framing legislation emphasis should be laid upon the following principles:

1. While the American people, as in the past, welcome the oppressed of other lands, care should be taken that immigration be such both in quality and quantity as not to make too difficult the process of assimilation.

2. Since the existing law and further special legislation recommended in this report deal with the physically and morally unfit, further general legislation concerning the admission of aliens should be based primarily upon economic or business considerations touching the prosperity and economic well-being of our people.

3. The measure of the rational, healthy development of a country is not the extent of its investment of capital, its output of products, or its exports and imports, unless there is a corresponding economic opportunity afforded to the citizen dependent upon employment for his material, mental, and moral development.

4. The development of business may be brought about by means which lower the standard of living of the wage earners. A slow expansion of industry which would permit the adaptation and assimilation of the incoming labor supply is preferable to a very rapid industrial expansion which results in the immigration of laborers of low standards and efficiency, who imperit the American standard of wages and conditions of employment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill is in the interest of America.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill is in the interest of America. I believe it is in the interest of American institutions. I also believe it is in the interest of the illiterate foreigner who may in the future desire to make this country his home, and I believe it will help make the American home the most magnificent product of American civilization, and believing this, I shall give it my hearty and enthusiastic support. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

[Mr. LANGLEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Estopinal]. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Es-

TOPINAL] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley] in the debate on this bill on Saturday, where he cited figures purporting to show illiteracy in Louisiana as compared with illiteracy in the State of New York. His figures were both incorrect and misleading.

Mr. Chairman, he stated the illiteracy to be 38.5, whereas it is but 29. The figures 38.5 were probably correct according to the census which was taken in June, 1900, more than 12 years ago; but, by these later figures, from the census of 1910, it is seen that illiteracy has been reduced 25 per cent since the census of 1900. I wish to show how this illiteracy is divided, as between the whites and the negroes; for it is known that Louisiana has a large black population, with illiteracy running very much higher than with the white population. The percentage of illiteracy in the negro population in 1900 was 61.1. In 1910 it had fallen to 48.4. The percentage of illiteracy in the native whites in 1900 was 20.04. In 1910 it was 15. Contrary to the figures submitted by the gentleman from Massachusetts, showing a smaller illiteracy percentage in foreign-born whites on the Atlantic coast—or, rather, at New York-than of the native born, the percentage of illiteracy in the foreign born in Louisiana is higher than in nativeborn whites, being 24 in the foreign born as against 15 in the native whites.

Since illiteracy in youth nearly always means illiteracy through life, it is an exceptionally good showing for a State to reduce its percentage of illiteracy one-fourth within 10 years. I am glad to say that we are spending more money in Louisiana and are getting more results during this decade than during any other decade of her existence; and, doubtless, when the next census is taken, the illiteracy among the native whites in Louisiana will be considerably less than 10 per cent.

There are topographical peculiarities in Louisiana which are largely responsible for the comparatively large illiteracy among the whites-deep bayous, large rivers, and coast lines of great extent and isolation.

While the matter of Black Hand outrages is doubtless one that should be considered in connection with immigration, there is no reason that the United States should deny any honest man the right to come to these shores, seeking a home, simply because he has not had the opportunity to acquire an education from books. I would very strongly draw the line against doubtful or criminal immigration, enforcing, with pressing diligence, the capable laws we now have and supplementing these with others if needed. But if a man has two good strong arms, and is honest, he has the making of a good citizen and is needed in the development of this country. To deny him this opportunity would be an act of uncharity at variance with the traditions of our country.

Having been raised in a State where we have had to face the problem of extensive illiteracy among the negroes, and among whites proportionately large as compared to the illiteracy of the whites throughout the entire country, I have found that it is not the illiterate man that is the criminal. The illiterate man is usually a common laborer or fisherman, generally living in isolated communities; but he is nearly always a peaceable citizen, and while living meagerly he lives honestly, and is ambitious for his children to receive the education which circumstances denied to him.

But, Mr. Chairman, let us examine where the tide flows back to our forefathers. Let us see something of the illiteracy conditions among those who laid the first foundation of our institutions, banished the Indians, conquered the forests, and, finally, whose descendants, the still closer progenitors of gentlemen here who are now seeking to deny to others these same rights and opportunities of becoming citizens, gained for us our liberties and established us as a Nation on a broad and lasting foundation.

A bulletin of the United States Bureau of Education dealing with the Dutch schools of New Netherlands and colonial New York, by Prof. William Heard Kilpatrick, contains the figures from which I quote. It says:

The showing of the American Dutch in the matter of illiteracy is better than found in some other colonies. In Albany, of 360 men's names examined, covering the years 1654-1675, 21 per cent made their marks. Of 274 men's signatures at Flatbush, covering a longer period, 19 per cent made their marks.

Of the German immigrants in Pennsylvania, it is shown that in an examination of 11,823 names 26 per cent made their

The historian Bruce, who compiled the Institutional History of Virginia in the seventeenth century, shows that of 2,165 male adults who signed jury lists 46 per cent made their marks, and of 12,445 male adults who signed deeds and depositions 40 per cent made their marks.

In the case of women among the Dutch at Flatbush, of 55 persons whose names were secured 32, or 56 per cent, made their Thirty-three Albany names among women gave 55 per cent illiteracy. Another case of 46 women showed an illiteracy of 66 per cent. Thus, putting all the Dutch women together, we get a percentage of illiteracy of 60 per cent. Prof. Bruce, the historian mentioned, found in Virginia in 3,066 women signers of deeds and depositions an illiteracy of 75 per cent. In Suffolk County (Boston), Mass., of the deed signers but 11 per cent of the men failed to sign their names; but among the women illiteracy was 58 per cent in some names secured about 1650 and 38 per cent among some collected near the close of the seventeenth century.

It must be recalled that in most of these instances names were taken from signatures to deeds and conveyances, which indicate a property-holding class. Literacy, of course, rules higher in that class than those taken promiscuously from all grades of population; therefore if our glory has descended in large part from those who could not even sign their names, it is evident that there is no great menace to our admitting men and women of honesty and physical strength who are thus similarly hampered.

Mr. Chairman, here is a simple statement in this bulletin of Prof. Kilpatrick's which contains a moral of much force:

A further significant result appeared from our study of illiteracy, namely, that the male Dutch inhabitants of Flatbush made continuous improvement in this respect, the percentage of illiteracy decreasing gradually from 40 per cent in 1675 to about 5 per cent in 1738.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a decrease from 40 to 6 per cent in the course of a little more than 50 years, and as the discussion of this bill seemed to point in its application to the backward Latin and other southern and western European races, I maintain that if the Dutch at that early period of this country, when education was nothing like as well developed in science and practical application as it is to-day, could reduce their illiteracy from 40 to 6 per cent in a little over 60 years, it holds no menace to this country to admit honest people lacking literacy in books yet otherwise competent for citizenship. The history of these people and the present advance of these countries is ample guaranty of their capacity for progress with us.

I can readily understand the apparent demand for this restrictive legislation which has arisen from our failure to properly distribute the immigrants who have come to our shores. There are millions with us to-day, crowded in tenements in industrial centers, and working in occupations entirely foreign to their experience, for they were raised as peasants, as farmers, and in the range of opportunities which this country gives they ought to still be farmers with us, and remain so. The solution of this problem lies not in denying the illiterate and honest immigrant an entrance to these shores, but in seeing that he has the opportunity to gain a home under the best conditions for his own prosperity and the prosperity of our country.

Mr. Chairman, I protest against any measure that will prevent a sound and honest man from seeking to better himself in finding a new home, protection, and prosperity under the benefi-cent folds of Old Glory. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr.

Kahn] is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am just as anxious as any other Member of this House to keep from our shores the criminals, the vicious, and the physically and mentally defective; I would exclude these classes as much as any gentleman who favors this bill. But I do not believe that the illiteracy test will have the effect of keeping out undesirable immigrants.

The member of the mafia, the member of the camorra society, the black hander, the anarchist, and the dynamiter can invariably read and write.

This matter of the restriction of immigration is not a new subject, and the present agitation is but a recrudescence of antiforeign agitation that has occurred periodically from the very beginning of our Government. On Saturday the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] called the attention of the committee to the fact that Benjamin Franklin, in 1753, had deprecated the great influx of Germans into Pennsylvania. A few years later, in 1776, the same Benjamin Franklin was a member of that committee of five that reported the Declaration of Independence to the Continental Congress, and one of the leading causes of complaint against the King of England named in that Declaration of Independence was that-

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States, for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners, refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither, and raising the condition of new appropriations of land.

It is a strange thing, Mr. Chairman, to see gentlemen upon this floor who are descendants of some of those Pennsylvania Germans—and their ancestors made mighty good citizens—inveighing against the immigration that is coming to these United States to-day and insisting upon the passage of this law for a literacy test.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. I have only a few minutes. I desire not to yield just at present, I may later on.

The cry against the immigrant has made itself heard in nearly every period of the existence of the Republic. the managers of the Society for the Promotion of Patriotism in the city of New York made their second annual report, quote a few sentences from that document:

An almost innumerable population beyond the ocean is out of emoyment. * * * This country is the resort of vast numbers of ployment.

these needy and wretched beings. * * * They are frequently found destitute in our streets; they seek employment at our doors; they are found in our almshouses and in our hospitals; they are found at the bar of our criminal tribunals, in our bridewell, our penitentiary, and our State prison, and we lament to say that they are too often led by want, by vice, and by habit to form a phalanx of plunder and depredations, rendering our city more liable to increase of crimes and our houses of correction more crowded with convicts and felons.

That language did not refer to the immigrants from eastern and southeastern Europe, against whom the present bill is said to be aimed. That language referred to the immigrants from Ireland, from Germany, from France, from Scandinavia, from those countries that sent that class of immigrants whom the gentlemen who are in favor of this bill say was a splendid im-I agree that it was a splendid immigration; but migration. the quotation that I have just read might have been written to-day against the immigration that is sought to be prevented under the terms of this bill. The language used to-day against the immigrants from eastern and southeastern Europe is not stronger in its terms of condemnation.

Later on the cutcry against the Irish and the Germans grew louder. The churches of the Irish were desecrated. Their children were subjected to petty persecution in the public schools. The Germans were publicly denounced. Their newspapers were mobbed, their Turner halls were wrecked. And yet gentlemen who profess to see something awful in the immigration from eastern and southeastern Europe claim that there was no opposition to the immigrants from northern and western Europe.

In 1853 this feeling against foreign immigrants had grown so acute that the Know-Nothing Party was organized. directed expressly against foreign immigrants. In the elections of 1854 it was very successful, and elected a large number of Members of Congress. In 1856 it had grown strong enough to put up a candidate for the Presidency, Millard Fillmore, but he only carried the electoral vote of one State—Maryland.

It may interest some of the Members of the House to know how far this doctrine of Know-Nothingism was carried at that period. Let me call their attention to the picture, the mural decoration on the extreme right of this Chamber. It is by Brumidi, whose frescoes are such a prominent feature of the decorative work in the Capitol Building. It represents a scene at Washington's headquarters at Yorktown. The date is said to be October 17, 1781. Lord Cornwallis has just sent a flag of truce and has requested the cessation of hostilities for 24 hours that commissioners might be appointed to settle upon terms of surrender. Washington, believing it to be but a subterfuge to await reenforcements from New York, grants Cornwallis an armistice of only two hours. This was coupled with a stipulation that at the end of that time he must transmit, in writing, definite proposals.

The painting is a fresco. While it is not the best of Brumidi's work in this Capitol, it may be interesting to note the fact that the artist, incensed at the attacks that were made upon for-eigners during that exciting period, signed the painting "C. Brumidi, Artist, Citizen of the U. S.," so as to emphasize his citizenship and his patriotism.

I merely cite this incident to show how bitterly the patriotic foreigners of the Know-Nothing period resented the petty, narrow, unpatriotic, un-American attacks that were made upon them at that time.

As late as 1898 one of the trades-unions of New York protested against the Swedes and the Danes on the ground that interfered very much with the keeping up of the wages in our trade. That is the principal thing we find fault with.

Now those Swedes and Danes were not immigrants from eastern or southeastern Europe. They were immigrants from northern Europe, and yet they were found fault with as late as 1898. It is a surprising thing that many of the advocates of the pending legislation are themselves of foreign birth; many of them, if they be of native birth, can not go back farther than one generation to foreign parentage.

The educational test, in my judgment, is no test at all. Nancy Hanks, the mother of Abraham Lincoln, was an illiterate. Andrew Johnson, who became President of the United States, was an illiterate until after his marriage. Many of the colonists who settled Virginia and the other colonies were illiterates; they could not read nor write, and yet to-day their descendants are proud of their ancestry, as they have a right to be. [Applause.]

Education is a matter of opportunity; it is also a matter of The Russian Government positively refuses environment.

higher education to many of its citizens.

It is a surprising thing to me that many of the Members of this House who favor this legislation come from rural districts. and the statistics of the Bureau of the Census for 1910 show absolutely that there is 10.2 per cent of illiteracy in the rural districts in this country as against 5.1 per cent of illiteracy in the urban centers of the country. It is evident that these illiterate emigrants, so much objected to by Members who represent rural constituencies, usually settle in the urban centers and do not locate in the rural communities.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Cantrill], in speaking for his side on Saturday, said that the 10.7 per cent of illiterates among the native whites of the State of Kentucky, to which I had referred, were found largely in the eastern section of that State, and that that was the Republican section. I did not attempt to bring politics into this question, but the gentleman from Kentucky called to the attention of the House that it was the Republican section of Kentucky that is illiterate. Well, Kentucky has been under Democratic domination for many years, and I daresay that if the Democrats had furnished proper schools in the eastern section of Kentucky, there would have been less illiteracy in that State than there is to-day.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KAHN. I have only a short time, but I will yield for a question.

Mr. LANGLEY. We have good schools in the mountains of eastern Kentucky, just as good as they have in the western or any other part of the State, and just as high a standard of education, too. My colleague, Mr. Cantrill, is entirely mistaken when he says that most of the illiteracy of the State is there, or that politics has anything to do with it. His defense of Kentucky and the says that most of the illiteracy of the State is there, or that politics has anything to do with it. His defense of Kentucky and the says that most of the s tucky would have been much more appreciated if he had omitted that statement.

Mr. KAHN. I am glad to hear the gentleman's statement. the matter of schools Kentucky has not given education to 27.6 per cent of the negro laborers in her corn fields and her cotton

But it can be said that Alabama has no Republican section whatever. Alabama is the home of the distinguished author of the pending bill, Mr. Burnett. In that State the illiteracy among the native white population of native parentage is 10.1 per cent according to the census of 1910, while the illiteracy per cent according to the census of 1910, while the interacy among the native whites of foreign or mixed parentage in that State is only 2.3 per cent. But in Alabama the illiteracy among the negroes in 1910 is 40.1 per cent. The State of Georgia has no Republican district, but the illiteracy among the native whites of native parentage in that State in 1910 was 8 per cent, as against 1.6 per cent among the native whites of foreign or mixed parentage. The illiteracy among the negro laborers of Georgia in that year was 36.5 per cent.

The illiteracy in Tennessee among the native whites of native parentage in 1910 was 9.9 per cent. The illiteracy among native whites of foreign or mixed parentage in that State in 1910 was only 1.8 per cent, while the illiteracy among the negro laborers of that State was 27.3 per cent.

I mention these figures because distinguished gentlemen from those States have arisen on this floor in advocacy of the illiteracy test. It seems to me that one could well exclaim, "Physician, heal thyself!" to any of these gentlemen. Among the negro laborers of the South in the year 1910, 33½ per cent were illiterate. They are the men who do the rough, unskilled work that no one else can or will do in that section of the country.

Many of the illiterate whites who come to these shores under our present immigration laws are the unskilled laborers who work in our mines and who lay railroad tracks across the prairies and the plains under the burning rays of the summer sun in the Northern States. The American will not do it, and the second generation of the foreign immigrant will not de it. It is this foreign element, this illiterate foreign element, that does this class of work not alone in our own country, but in Germany, in England, and in the progressive industrial nations of the world.

Comment has been made upon this floor that many of these arrivals from eastern and southeastern Europe are assisted immigrants; that the agents of steamship companies, by holding out inducements for bettering the conditions of these people, persuade them to come to our shores. To me that is rather a sign of ambition on the part of the man who makes up his mind to come here by reason of such solicitation. If he did not feel that he could better his condition in life, the arguments that are submitted to him would fall upon deaf ears. If he had no ambition to better himself, he would spurn the offer of the agents and would continue his humdrum existence in the land of his nativity. But he desires to seek to free himself from the prison of his mean estate. He wants to buy his ransom from "those twin jailers of the daring heart, Low Birth and Iron Fortune." And so he comes to this land of freedom and Iron Fortune." And so he comes to this land of freedom and of opportunity; and hundreds of thousands of his countrymen succeed in their efforts to better their condition in life and make good citizens of the Republic.

Mr. Chairman, in 1910 12.7 per cent among the foreign-born whites were illiterate. The illiterates among the native whites of native-born parentage in the United States were 3.7 per cent of our population, while the percentage of illiteracy among the native whites of foreign or mixed parentage was only 1.1 per cent. These figures show that the immigrants seek education for their children. They recognize, if they be illiterate, that they are seriously handicapped in the struggle for existence by reason of their educational disadvantages, and they determine that their children shall not suffer by reason of similar handicaps. And so they promptly send them to our schools to be educated. They learn to know and to love our institutions. They have repeatedly demonstrated their readiness to die for the flag when the country has called them to the colors of the Republic.

Mr. Chairman, the bill that is now under consideration will not accomplish the purpose of keeping out the really undesirable immigrant. For that reason I shall vote against it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is the time exhausted on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. It is; the gentleman from California used 13 minutes

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Pennsylvania consumed all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time on that side is exhausted.

Mr. BURNETT. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 145 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state at the outset that on account of the shortness of the time which I have left I shall decline to yield to anyone. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield. Gentlemen, especially the gentleman from Pennsylvania, have referred to the fact that this bill does not keep out the Black Hand. This bill does not enlarge or liberalize the law against the We have laws now by which it is sought to Black Hand. keep out that class of immigrants, and if they are not sufficient the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has been on the Committee on Immigration for a long time, could certainly have introduced and had reported some bill for that purpose if he had wanted to strengthen that law. That is always the dodge that is taken when the literacy test is up—that it does not keep out the Black Hand.

Well, Mr. Chairman, it does keep out those who are the pliant victims and easy dupes of the Black Hand. If this bill had been the law, it would have kept out many of those who last winter at Lawrence were following the banners on which was inscribed the motto "No God, no master." Those are the kind of people that follow Black Hand and anarchist leaders so easily, and it would have kept out in New York the motley horde that last summer were trampling the American flag under foot while they were following the lead of men who hate the Stars and Stripes because it is the emblem of law and order. Ninety-two per cent of those people in Lawrence who defied the law were foreigners, and eighty-odd per cent of that 92 per cent were from the southern and eastern sections of Europe.

Gentlemen have referred to the message of President Cleveland vetoing a bill of similar character-much less liberal, however, than this. At that time the records show that during the year 1897, when the veto message was signed, the total immigra-tion to this country was only 230,832, while in 1911 it was 878,000, and the south Italians and Polish were 241,000 alone, or 11,000 more than came from all nationalities during the year The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Lobeck], in explanation of the fact that so few came that year, remarked that times were so hard then that there was no work for them to do and people were not coming here. That is one trouble with these birds of passage. Whenever the bow of prosperity spans our country they come in hordes for the purpose of crowding out our laborers and beating down American standards and wages and living, and as soon as adversity comes to our country they fold their tents like the Arabs and as silently steal away, and sometimes steal everything else they can lay their hands on. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the alien insane that are filling the asylums of New York and other sections of the country are among this class of people.

Mr. MURRAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BURNETT. No. I have stated that I would not yield, and the gentleman must have understood that. In regard to the insane aliens, the New York Times on March 28, 1912, said:

The Times is informed by Secretary McGarr, of the State Commission in Lunacy, that of the 31,432 insane patients under treatment in the 14 State hospitals on February 10 last, 13,163, or 41.9 per cent, were aliens. Foreign-born patients have increased since the Federal census of December 31, 1903, by 1,552, or 13.4 per cent. In the two State hospitals for the criminal insane there were 1,230 patients on February 10, of whom nearly 44.4 per cent were of alien birth; the Federal census of 1910 showed a percentage of aliens to total population in this State of 1910 showed a percentage of aliens to total population in this state of 29.9 per cent.

The prevalence of insanity among immigrants is evidently much greater than among the native born. Of the 5,700 patients admitted to the civil hospitals for the year ending September 30, 1911, 2,737, or 48 per cent, were aliens, and 1,481, or 26 per cent, were of alien parentage, while only 1,224, less than 26 per cent, were of native stock. Of the whole number, the nativity of but 218, which is 3.8 per cent, was not ascertainable. Insanity among the foreign peoples of this city occurs in a still larger percentage of cases. Of the first admissions to the hospitals 2,006 out of 3,221 residents of the city were of foreign birth; that is 64.1 per cent, although the foreign-born population is but 40.4 per cent of the whole.

Mr. SHERLEY. How many of those were illiterate?

Mr. SHERLEY. How many of those were illiterate? Mr. BURNETT. Many of them; as the records of the New York Board of Lunacy shows that a large per cent of them came from those countries that are sending most of the illiterates.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Cur-LEY] has referred to the Junior Order of American Mechanics being A. P. A. The gentleman would not yield to some gentleman who wanted to ask him a question, because he thought it would not add to the sum of human knowledge. I notice that the gentleman has eliminated from the RECORD some of the harsh things he said in regard to that order. Perhaps he thought those remarks would not add to the sum of human knowledge. I just want to read a little extract.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BURNETT. I do not yield. I have stated that time and time again.

Mr. CURLEY. The gentleman is not afraid to yield on that, is be?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, may I have order? Mr. John Weitzel, the national councilor of the Junior Order, said before our Immigration Committee at one time:

I desire to call the committee's attention to the friendly feeling existing between three conventions of Catholics, Juniors, and Daughters of America, which happened to meet in Canton, Ohio, September, 1906.

The Junior Order is not an antireligionist society; it is no more anti-Catholic than the Knights of Pythias, Elks, Odd Fellows, or the American Federation of Labor for that matter, every one of which have members of the Catholic faith and favor the enactment of more restrictive immigration laws. The Junior Order is a patriotic, fraternal, benevolent, and beneficiary organization, dating back almost a century. It cares for its sick, buries its dead, looks after their widows and orphans, provides insurance, stands for compulsory education, believes in freedom of conscience and liberty of worship, advocates good naturalization laws and the judicious restriction of undesirable immigration. Its motto, "Virtue, liberty, and patriotism," appeals to the very highest sentiment and to the very best in man.

I am an honorary member of that organization. Could the gentleman, or anyone else, find any A. P. A. matter in the enunciation of these doctrines? I know that there is nothing that is sectarian or that is opposed to any particular nationality in it. That is not the only organization that has declared for this bill. Certainly the gentleman would not say that the 3,000,000 members of the American Federation of Labor were A. P. A.'s. Certainly he would not say that the Grange and the Farmers' National Congress of the North and the members of the Farmers' Union of the South are A. P. A.'s. Certainly he would not say that John Mitchell and Mr. Gompers and Mr. Morrison are Certainly he would not say that Charles P. Neill, A. P. A.'s. a member of our commission, who agreed with us in every one of these propositions, himself a splendid Catholic, is an A. P. A. Certainly no one would say that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], a man by whose friendship I am honored on the floor of this House, who earnestly favors this bill, is an The gentleman would not say that Vice President Marshall, in the splendid speeches he made throughout the country during the last campaign, decrying the influx of foreign pauper labor, was an A. P. A., and that the Legislatures of Vermont, Ohio, Virginia, Tennessee, West Virginia, and 14 or 15 other States of the Union were composed of members of the A. P. A.

But, Mr. Chairman, the unkindest cut of all was when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley] spoke of the lynching bees that he wanted to hold the South responsible for. Here is his language:

I have sat here and listened to the talk about the Black Hand. Wby, Mr. Chairman, I can not distinguish any difference in the disregard to established law between a lynching bee in the South and the operation of the Black Hand in New York. If the Black Hand of New York is bad, its evil does not exceed the evil of the lynching bees in the South.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, these lynching bees are not confined to my section of the country, but they occur North and South whenever a black brute outrages a white woman; yet the gentleman says that he can see no difference between them. Mr. Chairman, the Black Hand is an organization composed of men banded together for the purpose of loot or for the purpose of revenge, with a stiletto in one hand and dynamite in the other, to strike down human beings. The other is a protest and an effort to avenge, either North or South, the attacks of black brutes on white mothers, daughters, and wives of my country. Yet the gentleman says he can see no difference between the I believe, Mr. Chairman, that he did not represent that splendid Celtic race from which he sprang when he made the statement, nor did he represent the sentiment of the splendid citizenship of the city of Boston, whose commission he holds. I am opposed to mob law anywhere, but there is no comparison between the Black Hand and those who strike to avenge the desecration of the chastity of white women.

Gentlemen have told us that Nancy Hanks would have been kept out and other very distinguished and celebrated people would have been kept out by the illiteracy test. They would not have been, because those people were every one of them Americans. And the American boy-my boy and your boywhether he be in Kentucky or Alabama, has to live here 21 years before he can vote to make the laws or make the lawmakers of this country, and yet an alien may come here and after a few years can file declaration papers and become a citizen to put the lawmakers and laws upon the people of this whole country. Gentlemen talk about un-Americanism, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] referred to the fact that some of us come from sections of the country where there are but few of these immigrants and therefore know nothing about them. By this same token, Mr. Chairman, I might say the gentleman himself certainly knows nothing of Americans, on account of the fact that he has seldom come in contact with American people by whom the rest of us are surrounded. Some gentlemen have de-nounced principles as un-American here to-day when on account of the citizenship of their particular districts about all they learn of Americans and Americanism is when they associate with the Members of the American House of Representatives in this Congress assembled. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think—

How unfortunate that is. Mr. MANN.

Mr. BURNETT. I think so myself; but especially is it fortunate that the scales may sometimes fall from their eyes by association with Americans, so they can learn something outside of the environments that surround them. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the difference of the ideas that these illiterate and irresponsible birds of passage have of our land and its conditions and those of our native-born and our northwestern European citizens, I can not more forcefully express it than by reading an extract from a speech made in the Senate on this subject by the former great Democratic leader of this House, JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS. He said:

John Sharp Williams. He said:

It is true that education is not all gotten from books. Nor is culture. The most perfect gentleman I ever knew in my life could not write a word, except to sign his name. I frequently said he was also one of the wisest men from a citizenship standpoint I ever knew. He was. But when you come to the consideration of the knowledge that men have as to how to govern a country, there is a school far superior to the schools wherein instruction is given from the books. The old immigrants who came to us came principally from England and Ireland and Scotland and Wales, Switzerland, and countries of that sort—Scandinavians and Germans—and although some of the Scandinavians and most of the Germans never had a republican form of government, nor even a free representative government, in the sense in which we speak of it in England and here, they were the people of all Europe who possessed in the highest degree, and do now, personal liberty, and cherish it.

If you were to take an illiterate man who came from Norway, England, Scotland, or Ireland, he would not necessarily be an ignorant man, because he has attended this great school of the common people in free countries. What is that school? In our own country it is the school of jury service; it is the school of public discussion of political and social matters, where all matters can be and are discussed. It is the school of talking about and participating in elections, where men learn from one another.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nye] has spoken elo-

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nye] has spoken eloquently of a character test, and yet he has never introduced a bill to establish such a test, nor has any other gentleman. Should he try to frame such a test, its futility would become evident in every line he would write. On this point I again quote from the great speech of Senator Williams, in which he says:

from the great speech of Senator Williams, in which he says:

If I had any way of determining how much better one man was than another, how much more nearly honest one man was than another, how much truer and more loyal to principle one man was than another, how much more unselfish one man was than another, how much more courageous one man was than another—if I had any way of ascertaining all that, I should gladly write it into a statute and let the literacy and all other tests go to the winds.

But what foolishness it is to talk to lawmakers about writing a character test in words and letters into a statute. How shall it be done?
I can write a physical test, that the man must not be diseased; I can write a political test, a social test, that he must not be an anarchist, that he must not be an enemy of organized government; I can write an intellectual test, that he must be able to read and write in some language, so that he is not shut off from communication with current printed thought; but I can not write a character test. There is nobody but God who can look into a man's heart and tell what his character is.

acter is.

I might be able to write a reputation test, if I could bring over the man's whole neighborhood in order to have them bear witness to what his reputation was. But all of us are standing demonstrations of the fact that reputation and character do not always go together.

I have heard much about this thing of admitting or refusing to admit men "on their character" and not on their information. If any man is wise enough to tell me how to prescribe a character test, then, in my opinion, he is a wiser man—mere man—than ever lived on the surface of this earth. "The outward and visible signs of an inward and spiritual grace" or of character is a thing I flety any legislator to write into a statute, and when you go beyond that and want to write "the inward and spiritual grace" or character itself, there is nobody in the world who can write it except God, and He has been too merciful to mankind thus far to do it.

Gentlemen will search in vain for a better test to keep out those who know nothing of the genius of our institutions, who know nothing of the flag of country and the Constitution of our fathers.

After groping in darkness in the futile search for such a test the fair-minded student of justice and truth will be forced, as our commission was forced, to turn to the test embraced in this bill.

I want immigrants to come to our hospitable shores; but I want those who, in the language of our beloved President elect, come voluntarily to become citizens and to build up our material prosperity and support our free institutions and not those induced by the agents of steamship companies to fill their coffers, and to breed anarchy and crime.

The people who will be kept out by this bill are mainly those who care nothing for America or Americans only so far as they may fill their wallets with American gold and return it and themselves to the lands whence they came.

To show how little they appreciate the blessings of American citizenship, I call your attention to what the records show as to how many ever become naturalized citizens. Prof. Jenks, a member of the Immigration Commission, makes the following statement from records which he has compiled:

The lack of political or civic interest of southern and eastern Europeans is shown by the following percentages of fully naturalized representatives of some of the principal races with a residence of 10 years or longer; Croatians, 28.6 per cent; South Italians, 34 per cent; Magyars, 26.9 per cent; Russians, 33.6 per cent; Slovaks, 25.3 per cent.

In contrast with these he shows that-more than three-fourths of the Bohemian and Moravian, Danish, German, Irish, Norwegian, Swedish, Scotch, and Welsh races who have been in the United States 10 years or longer have been fully naturalized. Can we look on this comparison with other than fear for the perpetuity of our cherished institutions?

Sad indeed is the story told by the reports of the insane asylums of the States where the low and illiterate hordes are being dumped. Only yesterday the press brought the news that the governor of New York is about to call a meeting of representatives from 15 States to adopt some method by which Congress can be compelled to make provision for the insane that are filling their asylums. This is contemplated in all serious-Think of the injustice of forcing the people of Indiana and of Mississippi to be taxed to care for the insane to whom New York City wants to open wide its gates.

Think of the gentleman from Massachusetts taunting my people of the South with the illiteracy which we are struggling to overcome and yet asking that the illiterates in Alabama and Kentucky be taxed to maintain the insane aliens to whom he wants the gates of Boston to be opened wide.

I quote the following from page 22, Report of New York Board of Aliens, for the year ending September 30, 1911:

Board of Aliens, for the year ending September 30, 1911:

For the first few years after the commencement of that remarkable migration of the races of southern and eastern Europe to this country—to which Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Russia have contributed nearly 500,000 persons a year—it is noted that the increase of patients of those nationalities in the State hospitals was gradual. By 1905, however, it was possible to predict that when the effects of the "new immigration" commenced to be felt the "old immigration"—of Germans, Irish, and Scandinavians—would be outdone in the numbers of insane added to the foreign-born population of our State hospitals. Today that prediction is fulfilled, and during the year more than 55 per cent of the aliens deported by the United States Immigration Scryice were natives of those three countries.

On Decomberg 17, 1912, the New York American printed the

On December 17, 1912, the New York American printed the following:

IMMIGRANTS BLAMED FOR INSANITY INCREASE.

The chief cause of the increase in insanity in New York State is the admission of immigrants who are insane when admitted or who become insane soon after admission, usually from causes exiting prior to admission. There has been little, if any, increase in insanity in the native population during recent years.

CHARLES D. WAGNER, M. D.,

Superintendent, Binghamton state Hospital.

In a letter to me, written December 18, 1912, Dr. George B. Campbell, medical examiner of the State Hospital Commission of the State of New York, referring to the great increase of insane patients among new immigrants, says:

It is shown by the State hospital commission's report that this increase dates back to about 1903. This is the time that the new immigration from southern and eastern Europe commenced.

The New York Sun of May 26, 1912, said that a conference between representatives of the steamship companies and the insane hospital would result in sending to Europe in the coming year 2,000 alien insane from that State. This is to be done at the expense of the State. How much better for the State had these people been kept out in the first instance, and this bill would have kept a great part of them out.

With such official statements before us, can anyone doubt that something must be done?

Gentlemen have referred in this debate to the achievements of great Italians, Greeks, and other foreigners in the fields of literature, art, oratory, and on the martial field. But they forget that the South Italians of to-day are not descendants of those who followed Caesar's triumphant eagles, but they are descendants of the foreign slaves who came to Rome chained to the chariot wheels of his victorious armies.

The Greeks of to-day are not the Greeks who fought and died at Thermopylæ, but they are descendants of those who have mixed their blood with an alien and an inferior race.

The Syrians of to-day are not the Phoenicians who were once the inventors of letters and the lords of the sea, but they are the products of an amalgamation with inferior races to the westward.

The fate of these people should be a warning to those who love America and American civilization.

The preservation of the sacred heritage transmitted to us by the fathers demands that the ax be put to the very root of the tree, and let no patriot shirk his duty now.

In conclusion, I will insert the resolutions of the Legislature of Vermont:

Joint resolution requesting the Vermont delegation in Congress to advo-cate and aid in the passage of an immigration bill containing the illiteracy test.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives:

Whereas there were admitted to the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, 1,030,300 persons as immigrants. That prior to 1883 among the immigrants coming to this country there was only 2.7 per cent of illiteracy. That for the past five years, illiteracy has alarmingly increased to more than 36 per cent, and that of the 1,500,000 south Italians, who came here from 1890 to 1909, over 800,000, or more than 54 per cent, could not read and write; 54 per cent of the Syrians could neither read nor write; 35 per cent of the Potuguese; 38 per cent of the Ruthenians; 51 per cent of the Russians; 58 per cent of the Ruthenians; 51 per cent of the Russians; 58 per cent of the Turks; 27 per cent of the Greeks; and 41 per cent of the Bulgarians and Servians and Montenegrins could neither read nor write; and

Whereas Congress, by its act of February 20, 1907, created an Immigration Commission, composed of three Senators, three Members of the House of Representatives, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, for the purposes of making a careful and searching investigation into the entire question of immigration, both in this country and abroad, and now, after several years of painstaking investigation at a cost of more than a million dollars, said commission has rendered its exhaustive report of 40 massive volumes to Congress, and urgently recommends the passage of a measure which will greatly restrict the admission of those less likely to become desirable citizens; and

Whereas the commission, with a single dissenting opinion, suggests and recommends that the illiteracy or reading and writing test is the one single measure best calculated to restrict undesirable immigration; and

Whereas the Hon. William P. Dillingham, senior Senator from Vermont, who was chairman of the Immigration Commission, has introduced into the Senate of the United States a bill containing the illiteracy requirement, and that said bill has passed th

GUY W. BAILEY.

GUY W. BAILEY, Secretary of State. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. BURNETT, Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Before the bill is read I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama whether he has any objection to this committee rising-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order, and the Clerk will read the committee amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is not the committee amendment an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and to insert the matter which the committee recommended to be inserted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the rule expressly provides that the committee amendment shall be read and not the substance that was stricken out by the committee.

Mr. MANN. What is the committee amendment? Is not the committee amendment an amendment to strike out and insert?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is proceeding under the rule adopted by the House.

Mr. MANN. Well, the rule only refers to the committee amendment; the rule does not define the committee amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Well, I am making a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already answered the gen-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that under the rule adopted by the House the amendment of the committee shall be read, and by the committee amendment it means the part of the bill that has been reported as a substitute by the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but my parliamentary inquiry is, What is the amendment reported by the committee? Is not the amendment reported by the committee an amendment to strike out and

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now proceeding under the rule.

Mr. MANN. I beg the Chair's pardon, but the rule does not define what is the committee amendment. I am not seeking to have the bill read for amendment. The Chair must not misunderstand me. The rule provides for the consideration of the committee amendment. Now, what is the committee amendment? Certainly it contemplates and proposes to strike out the language of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and to insert other matter in its place.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit? wish to submit this observation: That the rule under which the committee is now proceeding must be construed as a whole, and, being construed as a whole, I submit to the Chair that the clear intent of the rule and of the House in adopting the rule was that the amendment—the substance—the bill proposed by the House committee should be first read, because it provides in express language and express terms that if it be adopted the Senate bill shall not be read. If the contention for which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] seems to be standing were to prevail, then, if I follow it correctly, it, would necessitate the reading of the Senate bill, a thing which this rule was especially designed to prevent except in a certain contingency.

Mr. MANN. I think the rule was designed to prevent the reading of the Senate bill for amendment under the five-minute rule until the committee amendment had been disposed of. The rule provides for the consideration of the committee amendment. Now, this committee must act upon the motion to strike out the Senate bill after the enacting clause, or else there is no striking out. You either strike out or you do not.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit? Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. However, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I wanted to know if the gentleman from Illinois was claiming a right to demand a division of the motion?

Mr. MANN. I was not. The rule expressly provides that the motion to strike out and insert is not divisible. I am not asking for that. But I am asking to have the committee amendment reported as the committee made it-to strike out the Senate bill and insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule reads:

objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

The amendment proposed by the House committee shall be first read for amendment and perfected. After same has been so perfected the vote shall be taken upon the question of adoption of said amendment. If same shall be adopted, then the Senate bill shall not be read.

And the Chair thinks that under the terms of that rule it is not necessary, and was not contemplated, that the Senate bill should be read. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. That is not in order in the committee. I desire,

Mr. Chairman, to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the ruling of the Chair is erroneous, although I have no doubt the ruling is in consonance with the intention of the committee that reported the It is not, however, what the rule says. But here is a proposition which says that the committee shall be called upon to vote to strike out the bill which has passed the Senate, and been sent to the House for consideration, without even reading Gentlemen say that immigrants coming here shall be required to read or write. For what purpose? You do not propose here even to read the language you intend to vote upon. You do not propose to give any consideration to the bill which has come from the Senate, but you insist upon a ruling of the Chair that the very bill passed by the Senate, and which is here for consideration, shall be voted upon without reading. What more ridiculous position could be presented in a supposed deliberative body? [Applause.]
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. MANN]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 58, line 11, of the Senate bill: "That after four months from the approval of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit: All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or the language or dialect of some other country, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted or any citizen of the United States may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to land."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Cheirman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The committee amendment consists of four sections, although it is one committee amendment. Is it in order to offer an amendment at the conclusion of the reading of the first section of the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so. The Chair thinks it is clearly the intention to take up the bill as other bills are

-by sections.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is to be inserted after the word "land," on page 58, line 24.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 58, line 24, after the word "land," by inserting the following: "And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to peaceful and industrious and law-abilding immigrants whose moral character is established by the accredited authorities of the countries from which they come."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, before speaking on this amendment, I want to say to gentlemen on the other side that I sincerely trust there may be no application of that third-degree rule which was referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner], which will close fair debate under the five-minute rule. Give us a chance, who had no opportunity under general debate, to speak our minds with regard to this important and, in some respects, inhuman proposition that is now before us.

I have offered an amendment which is vital to this bill; an amendment that proposes that the real test to be imposed on those coming into the United States shall be a moral test and not a sumptuary one. [Applause.] Nothing in the bill has any regard whatever to the morality or the good intent of the man or woman seeking in the United States a haven from foreign shores, but the language and the spirit of the bill are the language and spirit of proscription and prohibition.

My amendment brings up squarely to the Members of the House the proposition whether, by the passage of this bill, we shall impose upon the unfortunate and the burdened a return to conditions of devices and conversion which to conditions of darkness and oppression which we did not impose upon our own forefathers and which was not imposed upon many of us.

I contend, and believe the American spirit supports the contention, that the real test of a man's worth is not whether he can read and write, but whether he is law-abiding, God-fearing, and well intentioned amongst his fellow men. A gentleman near me says, "It will sound well."

It is well if we would live and seek to continue to live in the spirit of brotherly love, or, if you please, in that spirit of brotherhood which ought to hold amongst men.

This measure proposes to turn aside from these shores those who have committed no crime and whose only offense is inability to read, an accomplishment which they can acquire readily enough if they are permitted to land here as your forefathers landed. The suppressed hopes of those who have been crowded down upon foreign shores find vent here under our American educational institutions. There is no lack of study in the districts congested by those who come from foreign shores. soon learn to stand the test imposed by American conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, on last Saturday, when the House was considering this immigration question and being enlightened and entertained by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley], I interrupted him for the purpose of asking a question. He refused to yield, as he had a right to do, but he had no right to assault me in the same breath. In refusing to yield he made this statement:

If I felt that it would add to the sum of human knowledge I would gladly do so, but I regret that I do not think it will. Therefore I refuse to yield.

A mere question, Mr. Chairman, is not supposed to add to the sum total of human information. A question implies information sought, and if the able gentleman had not forgotten the common courtesies of debate and had permitted the question to be asked and then, out of the profundity of his information, his extended scholarship, and great learning, had proceeded to answer and enlighten the House, no doubt the world to-day would be under a debt of lasting gratitude to him. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, since there is such a panting desire in the swelling breast of the able gentleman from Massachusetts to add to the sum total of human information, this House would like to know, and the country would like to know, why on last Saturday he made the statement in his speach that the Junior Order of United American Mechanics was a new A. P. A. or anti-Catholic order and then in his printed remarks that went to the people of his district and the entire country he eliminated any such statement? The gentleman knows, or at least he ought to know enough to know, that the Junior Order of United American Mechanics was organized in the year 1852, and that the A. P. A. was organized in the year 1887, 35 years after the organization of the Junior Order. It is therefore clear that the Junior Order of United American Mechanics is not a new A. P. A. order; and in behalf of the Juniors all over this land and country I deny that the order is anti-Catholic or anti any religion.

Was it the purpose of the gentleman from Massachusetts to array against the Burnett bill, now under consideration here, the Catholic Members of this body by charging that the Junior Order of American Mechanics, an order much interested in the success of this measure, is but a new A. P. A. movement? Why make the statement in the presence of the Members here that the Junior Order of American Mechanics is a new A. P. A. movement and then leave the statement out of the RECORD that goes to his district and before the world?

The gentleman knows that the Junior Order of American Mechanics is not anti-Catholic.

On February 19, 1912, there appeared before the House Immigration Committee, of which Mr. Curley is a member, Mr. William B. Griffith, State vice counselor for the Junior Order of American Mechanics for the State of New York, and in his statement in the presence of the gentleman from Massachusetts Mr. Griffith said:

In the first place, let me say that we are strictly nonpartisan and nonsectarian. Any American of any religious faith, be he Jew, Gentile, or Catholic, can become a member if he comes under the tongue of good repute and is a good citizen.

The Representative from Massachusetts was present when Mr. Griffith made that statement, for he asked Mr. Griffith a number of questions on other matters. At no time did he challenge or ask about the statement on the part of Mr. Griffith that the Junior Order of American Mechanics was strictly nonpartisan and nonsectarian."

Mr. John J. Weitzell, national counselor of the Junior Order of American Mechanics, together with a great number of representative Juniors, appeared before the House Immigration Committee on February 2, 1912, and Mr. Weitzell in his statement before the committee said:

We are nonsectarian and nonpartisan,

The Rev. M. D. Lichilter, of Harrisburg, Pa., chaplain of the national council of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, in his remarks before the committee on that day said:

We have nothing to do with anybody's religion. We believe in the enstitution—that every man has a right to worship God according to his conscience.

These statements went unchallenged, unquestioned.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to add to the of human knowledge he might tell this House why sum total he wrongfully branded the Junior Order of American Mechanics as the new A. P. A. movement in his speech on the floor here and then failed to have it appear in his written speech in the Record. There could be but one purpose in his statement to the Members here. The Junior Order of American Mechanics favor the passage of this legislation, and he hoped to prejudice the Catholic Members of this House by the statement to which I have made reference.

Does the gentleman mean to say that the demand for this legislation is based on opposition to Catholicism on the part of the American Federation of Labor, among whose national officials are to be found strong Catholics like John Mitchell and John J. O'Connell?

The State Legislatures of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Vermont, and others have passed resolutions favoring the literacy test, and have memorialized Congress for the passage of this legislation. Was the movement on the part of these legislatures anti-Catholic? Does the gentleman mean to have this House understand that the eight members of the Immigration Commission who recommended this very legislation were trying to discriminate against the Catholic religion when every Catholic on the commission recommended it and when the only dissenting voice was that of an ardent Presbyterian? The gentleman might add to the sum total of human knowledge by telling this House why he wrongfully charged the Junior Order of American Mechanics with being a new A. P. A. movement and why he has tried to drag a religious question into a discusion of a subject that ought to demand legislation of the highest patriotism and wholly removed from all religious prejudices and predilections.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, while I was out of the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the time on this amendment has expired.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I move to strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there are many Members of the House who have not had an opportunity to speak at all on this important question. There are some Members of the House who have spoken at very considerable length on the subject. I have no desire to prevent any Member speaking. I am anxious that all may have the opportunity; but I think if we are to extend time to those who have already occupied a considerable amount of time it should be understood that others who have not had the opportunity to speak at all may at least be recognized briefly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from whome Mr. MONDELL. With these suggestions I do not object, Does the gentleman from Wyoming object?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, is it generally understood that we will reach a final vote on this bill to-day?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I want to say to the gentleman that I will use no obstructive measures whatever. [Applause.]

Mr. RODDENBERY. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, while I happened to be absent for a few minutes last Saturday the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] undertook to say in the course of his speech, which has not yet been printed in the RECORD, that-

A great many of the wards in the asylums, as far as their constituencies are concerned-

Having reference to the constituencies of my colleague on the committee [Mr. Sabath] and of mine-are already filled, and some of them sleeping on cots and some of them wandering aimlessly through the corridors of the asylums seeking some place to rest.

Never was there a greater libel or baser slander uttered gainst a people or against any class of people. [Applause.] The statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] was born of a fevered imagination. It has neither foundation nor justification in fact. It was a flight of vivid imagination that never ought to have found utterance in this Chamber. The gentleman from Texas knows nothing about these constituencies, for if he did he could not have indulged in this extravagance of speech.

Speaking for my constituency, I want to say the people of my district are a good, honest, thrifty, and industrious class of men and women. They toil honorably, and that is to their credit. They are home-loving people who merit the community's respect They need no defense at my hands. Yet in the face of the unfounded statements concerning them and of the unwarranted aspersions cast on them, it may not be out of place, while the immigration bill is under discussion, to say that these people are as finely healthy in body and mind as any constituency represented in this House. That constituency, sir, consists of a decent, honorable citizenship, a credit to my city and to the country whose institutions they admire, respect, and revere. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I have only five minutes. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is it for a question only?

Mr. DIES. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he can distinguish the difference between an asylum for the oppressed and an asylum for the insane?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman in his utterances made on the floor had reference to an asylum for the insane, and he knows it. [Applause.] He undertook also to declare that 95 knows it. per cent of the foreign born do not know anything about Americanism in this country. Again the gentleman is grievously mistaken. I thought I had covered that subject fully last Saturday, when under general debate I held the floor. The gentleman perhaps ought to be pardoned for his serious error. I have computed the number of foreign born in his district from the census figures and find them just 212. I take it the gentleman can know little or nothing about the foreign born. Had the gentleman traveled broadly, had he gone on journeys such as Members of Congress ought to take, to become acquainted with their country and learn its people in the different sections of it, he would have learned that most of the foreign born have a realization of what American citizenship stands for, but that they come with law-abiding hearts and minds to dwell in peace and happiness, to build for themselves and their families, and that when they become enrolled into American citizenship they evince a patriotic love of country and are loyally devoted to our flag. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURRAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. MURRAY. To discuss the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment. Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment again reported?

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania) there were 45 ayes and 65 noes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania and Mr. Burnett.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 52 ayes and 84 noes.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 14, page 58, between the words "to wit" and the word "all," the following:

"Persons who are not eligible to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into; but this provision shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, engineers, teachers, students, authors, editors, journalists, merchants, bankers, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fall to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes, shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided by law."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment is germane. The committee amendment to the Senate bill is an amendment providing additions to the classes that shall be included under the immigration law. This simply adds another class to those that are to be excluded.

Mr. Chairman, on Saturday last the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] asked that I name some one of the persons who have appeared before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization who testified to facts which demonstrated the truth of the extract from the annual report of the Commissioner General of Immigration, which I caused to be read by the Clerk. I had not then the record of the hearings It seems to me unreasonable to expect a Member to remember, among many scores of witnesses, the names of those who testified to certain facts, especially when the testimony of the witnesses covers a long period of time. Now, in reply to the gentleman's inquiry I desire to state that Mrs. Mary Quackenbos, an attorney of New York, was one such witness, among several. I read the following extracts from her testimony before the committee in the Sixty-first Congress:

fore the committee in the Sixty-first Congress:

To continue: Nevertheless, from my experience in this work, I knew very well that immigration was stimulated abroad by steamship and private employment agencies. For nearly three years I had assisted the Department of Justice in the prosecution of peonage cases, and had sole charge of the cases in New York City against labor agents who had lured ignorant foreigners into peonage camps. As an attorney for the Department of Justice, I filed charges against these agents before the commissioner of licenses in New York City and various licenses were revoked. Immigrants had been horribly defrauded, in some instances, by their own countrymen. I do not find that they are defrauded by Americans. Through the courtesy of the Department of Justice, I have brought over some records of these cases, taken from the files. Before reading the records, I will say that when I was engaged upon this work we found no Federal statute under which we could prosecute these agents and have their licenses revoked.

As to immigration, it is not induced at all by the Federal distribu-tion bureau, but I will prove to you how it is induced. There is a way of stopping abnormal immigration, and upon this point I have much information which I shall be glad to give to this committee at another time.
Mr. Burnert. Induced by whom?

Mrs. QUACKENBOS. By the steamship agents abroad. There are 13,000 of them in Italy alone. There is generally one in every Province, and he has many subagents and runners.

The unconscionable steamship agent abroad, who lives in the Province with the peasant, who tempts him to leave his native land and his family and often to mortgage his old home in order to secure money for the ticket, from which the agent will get a commission—he is the man who helps induce our abnormal immigration. His friend, or business associate, the labor agent, on this side of the water, preying upon the immigrant after he is admitted in a like unconscionable way, too frequently dominates him and defrauds him and lives at the expense of this his less enterprising countryman. In this miserable business both agents become well to do. The worst evil is not wrought by the immigrant, but is suffered by him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, that which is sought to be amended is the committee substitute, which provides solely for an illiteracy test. Now the gentleman from California proposes to amend that illiteracy test by providing a test based on a question of eligibility for naturalization in the United States.

If the Chair will turn to page 454 of volume 5 of Hinds' Precedents, at the bottom of the page he will find section 5870, which reads as follows:

5870. To a provision excluding immigrants unable to read and write and requiring a certificate with each immigrant admitted, an amendment to exclude all foreign-born laborers was held not to be germane.

Even without that decision, which relates to a matter on all fours with the question now before us, it seems to me that under general parliamentary law the situation is clear enough. To amend an illiteracy test by superimposing a test relating to naturalization is surely a linking together of unrelated subjects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Chair is called upon to determine again what is the committee amendment. When I raised the point this morning to the Chair on a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair, I think, in a way sidestepped the proposition. Is the committee amendment an amendment to strike out the Senate bill and insert other matter, so that the whole subject matter of the bill is before the committee, or is the committee amendment an addition to the Senate bill, so that amendments must be germane solely to the new matter inserted by the committee? The gentleman from Massachusetts has cited paragraph 5870 of Hinds' Precedents. I call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 5873 of the same volume:

And amendments providing for an educational test for immigrants was held to be germane to the bill to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States. On May 22, 1902, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering the bill (H. R. 12199) to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, when Mr. Oscar W. Underwood, of Alabama, proposed an amendment providing an educational qualification, there being no such qualification in the bill.

A point of order was made that the amendment was not germane. The Chair has the ruling before him, in which the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole held that the bill being a bill upon the general subject of immigration, it was a germane amendment to provide that persons should not be permitted to enter into the United States who could not read Is the general subject of immigration before us on and write. this proposition now? Certainly, if the committee amendment is one to strike out the Senate bill and to insert something else, the whole subject matter of the Senate bill is before the committee, and any amendment which is germane to the general subject of immigration is a germane amendment to the committee amendment, the whole subject of immigration being now under consideration.

I will wonder continually whether the new rules of the House of Representatives, which were advertised to enlarge the freedom of consideration by the House and committees of bills, are to be so construed that when an immigration bill is brought before the committee and the House the Chair will be constrained to hold nothing can be offered to the subject matter of this general bill relating to immigration unless it relates to a specific proposition which has been recommended by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the whole subject of immigration is not before the House under the rule before the committee, which was adopted by the House, and is of opinion that an amendment to be in order must be germane to the amendment of the committee. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, on line 14, page 58, after the semicolon and before the word "All," the following: "All aliens, native of any part of Asia or the islands adjacent to Asia or in Asiatic seas, and the descendants of such natives, who can not read and write in some European language, including Hebrew or Yiddish"; to be followed with a semicolon, and change the capital "A" to a small "a" in the word "all," in line 14, same page.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that in its present form that amendment is not germane on account of the words "and write." That can be easily remedied, to be sure. However, I am going to ask the gentleman to withdraw that amendment before the Chair rules on the question of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair holds it is not in order, then I shall reintroduce it with the words "and write" stricken out, but I am thoroughly convinced personally that it is in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I would be inclined to agree with the gentleman that it is in order, but it is of such vast importance, and being especially anxious that the gentle-man who is acting with us and has been acting with us right along, should not do anything that will give aid and comfort to the enemy, I ask him to withdraw it.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not agree with him respecting his expression, "aid and comfort to the enemy." In the first place, I do not believe there can be a man in the House to-day who will not vote for this amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I shall not vote for it.
Mr. RAKER. That being the case, we ought to adopt this amendment, and then let the House be in a position to pass upon the proposed substitute of the gentleman from Alabama with this attached to it. Then we get before the Congress an illiteracy test that really amounts to something.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. RAKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the amendment with the words "and write" stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, on line 14, page 58, after the semicolon and before the word "All," the following:

"All aliens, natives of any part of Asia or the islands adjacent to Asia or in Asiatic seas and the descendants of such natives, who can not read in some European language, including Hebrew or Yiddish;" to be followed with a semicolon, and change the capital "A" to a small "a" in the word "all," in line 14, same page.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. KENDALL. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very clear that the gentleman's amendment is not in order, but if the gentleman desires to be heard the Chair will hear him.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, of course ordinarily after a judge has decided a matter it is difficult to get him to change his mind, but I have always, when he permits a hearing, gone at it with the same confidence as though he had not expressed his opinion, for I know the judge will pass upon the matter in the same way as though he had not passed upon it in the first

The very object and purpose of this bill is an illiteracy test. It does not specify in the bill any particular locality where they should come from, and this amendment simply intends to cover the whole subject of illiteracy and not make it specific. seems to me that when the bill covers that question of reading, this, then, is an amendment that would make it definite, more certain, and it would be germane when it does not curtail the reading of the bill nor the language of it.

It relates to the Hebrew and Yiddish language, relates to the subject of those who are permitted to enter when they are in a condition to read, and I can not for the life of me see—

The CHAIRMAN. What has the gentleman to say to the fact that this amendment practically points out people who live in Asia and the islands adjacent to Asia?

Mr. RAKER. Well, that is intended to reach out and make it more extensive instead of including those of the south of Europe. It just extends across in an imaginary line and takes in Asia instead of making it those of Europe, as the present bill does. This amendment proposes and says that it shall sweep that entire country and make a great distinction to those in Asia and a little different rule than those in the southern part of Europe. That is the object and purpose of it, and I can not see how if they could limit it to one State in the old country it would not be germane to say you can step over an imaginary border and exclude those in an adjoining State.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will yet hear the gentleman from Alabama if he has anything to say. The Chair overrules the point of order; he was wrong before.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask to have the amendment reported which has been held to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amend-

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the committee's attention to the fact that this amendment is in substance the law that to-day is the law of Australia, that is the law to-day of Cape Colony and Natal, that it is the law that is adopted and acted upon by British Columbia so far as the Province is concerned, and, notwithstanding the objections of England to the addition of such a provision in the laws of Australia, the people finally carried it out, and that is the law to-day, and the record shows that it practically excludes from the United States of Australia coolie labor.

Will my colleague yield? Mr. KAHN.

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.
Mr. KAHN. I simply desire information from the gentleman. As I recall, the Chinese exclusion laws exclude all coolies whether they can read or write. There is an agreement with Japan that she keep all of her coolies at home. How does the gentleman believe that his amendment is going to be of any particular advantage in the exclusion of oriental aliens?

Mr. RAKER. Why, surely. Where do you find that agreement between Japan and the United States?

Mr. KAHN. Well, there is an agreement between Japan and the United States, which is known as a gentleman's agreement, that she entered into after the Congress had passed a law prohibiting orientals from coming from our insular possessions to the mainland of the United States.

Mr. RAKER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is any agreement that can be obtained or that exists anywhere between the United States and Japan to that effect?

Mr. KAHN. There is such an agreement, and Japan is refusing to give passports to any of her laborers to come to the mainland of the United States under that agreement.

Mr. RAKER. Of course it is easy to say there is such an agreement, and it would be just as easy for me to say there is not, because I have been investigating and trying to find out and obtain that information.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman say there is no such agreement?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. There is no such record agree-

Mr. RAKER. There is no record of any such agreement, I mean.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman had printed in the RECORD the other day an amendment to be offered to this bill. Does the gentleman propose to offer it?

Mr. RAKER. I am going to offer it if I get the chance.

Mr. MANN. I did not know whether this amendment took the place of it or not.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to have the gentleman answer a question.

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the effect of the adoption of his amendment be at once to involve the United States in a controversy with the Empire of Japan?

Mr. RAKER. Why, no. What are you passing here to-day on your immigration bill? Does it not include every nation on earth? Do you make any distinction? Are you going to ask any particular foreign power whether or not you shall say that no citizens of their country who can not read shall be admitted into the United States? With as much propriety why should you not go and ask whether or not the coolie labor of India, that is coming and has been coming into the western country, and which is such a detriment to us, should not be excluded?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman— Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts, a member of the committee.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, the gentleman is entirely mistaken. The coolie agreement is a matter of record between the United States and Japan. have here a copy of the treaty with Japan, proclaimed April 5, 1911.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has it been ratified?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The treaty has been rati-ed. It is not confidential. I invite the committee's attention to the following declaration made when the treaty was signed:

In proceeding this day to the signature of the treaty of commerce and navigation between Japan and the United States the undersigned, Japanese Ambassador in Washington, duly authorized by his Government, has the honor to declare that the imperial Japanese Government are fully prepared to maintain with equal effectiveness the limitation and control which they have for the past three years exercised in regulation of the emigration of laborers to the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted-Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there? Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I can not yield. I can not yield.

Mr. RAKER. Only for a question.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. We have only five minutes, and I can not yield. This amendment, if it were to become law, would embroil us with Russia, with Turkey, with Persia, with Holland, with France, with Great Britain, and with Siam. All of those countries have innumerable subjects in Asia who can not read any European language. The proposal of the gentleman from California is to make the subjects of all those nations, born in Asia, read the European language. Am I incorrect?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman's amendment reads "native," as it was reported from the desk.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. "Native and descendants."
Now, no man born in Persia, for instance, according to the gentleman's amendment could come into the United States unless, perchance, he was able to read some European language. His amendment goes further than the Chinese-exclusion laws. It excludes not only coolies, but it excludes every man in China, in India, or in the East, unless he can read some European language, which is an unusual accomplishment for Asiatics. In other words, merchants could not come here; lawyers could not come here-nobody could come here-unless he could read in some European language. Furthermore, as if that were not enough, this amendment clearly violates Article I of our treaty with Japan, which says:

The citizens or subjects of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to enter, travel, and reside in the territories of the other to carry on trade, wholesale and retail; to own or lease and occupy houses, manufactories, warehouses, and shops; to employ agents of their choice; to lease land for residential and commercial purposes, and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as native citizens or subjects, submitting themselves to the laws and regulations there established.

Now, Japan, if the amendment were adopted, would be at perfect liberty to-morrow to discontinue this agreement which I have read to you and to denounce us as having violated the treaty. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of Mongolian exclusion, as is the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], but the result of adopting this amendment would entail a succession of events. First, the bill would go to conference. Even supposing that the Senate conferees were to accept this amendment, it is extremely unlikely that before the 4th of March the Senate would agree to any bill with such a provision in it. Even if the Senate did so, the President would be almost

I ask every man in this House who sincerely desires to see this bill enacted into law to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from California. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, Mr. MADDEN, and Mr. MON-DELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order that the motion is out of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it in order to recognize a gentleman to strike out when there is no amendment pending? Mr. MONDELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the only time a gentleman can be recognized for that purpose—when there is no amendment The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I voted against the rule brought in by the Committee on Rules for the consideration of this bill, because it was, in my opinion, under the circumstances, entirely indefensible. I shall, however, vote for the bill as reported by the Committee on Immigration, not because I consider it ideal legislation, but because, under existing conditions, it is at least worthy of a trial.

No one has greater confidence than I in the efficacy of free institutions in the preparation of the mind and the molding of the character of immigrants for the honest and intelligent discharge of the duties of citizenship under a republican form of government.

My firm belief in the good intentions of the great majority of mankind, our experience as a people, my own personal observation, all fortify and strengthen my faith in the marvelous efficiency of the air and the institutions of liberty in the evolution of a patriotic and useful citizenship from seemingly crude and ofttimes doubtful material.

We must all admit, however, that there is a limit to the capacity of even the best of free institutions and the widest of opportunities to assimilate and harmonize with our ideas and ideals those who, through no fault of their own, perhaps, yet none the less clearly, are lacking in the information and training which all admit are so essential to the intelligent exercise of the duties and responsibilities of our citizenship.

The question before us is, therefore, Have we in the recent past, and are we likely in the future, with no further restriction of immigration than we now have, to receive a tide of unprepared immigration in excess of our capacity to train, prepare, and assimilate into useful citizenship? Our opinion on this question must be formed in the light of the unfortunate fact that the burden of the assimilation of uneducated immigration is not distributed anything like equally over our entire area or population. If it were, I for one should doubt the necessity or advisability of further restriction. It falls largely on a limited number of communities, mostly in large cities and populous industrial centers. These ofttimes fail to afford the immigrant that contact with the body of our native or thoroughly amalgamated foreign-born population, or oppor-tunity for instruction in or familarity with our institutions, which all admit are essential to his preparation for his future responsibilities.

I freely admit that the educational test is not an ideal one, that it will not exclude the educated knave, or incompetent, and that it will exclude some ignorant but honest and competent people whom we would gladly welcome to our shores. But no test can be devised which will search men's hearts and reveal their intentions. This test will at least reduce the number of those who are, by reason of their inability to read, handicapped in securing the knowledge that they should have of our institutions. It will diminish the number of those who, while themselves generally well meaning, are oftentimes the instruments and frequently the victims of the vicious and designing, the criminal and the trouble maker, both native and foreign born.

If our experiences under a law such as this shall prove unsatisfactory and fail to provide the results expected, it can be repealed. It is altogether possible that such a restriction as this may have a stimulating effect on the intending immigrant in the pursuit of the limited educational requirement of the law. If such is the effect, that fact alone will largely justify its enactment. At any rate it will tend to challenge attention to the value of the opportunities which our land and institutions afford. After the lapse of the brief period necessary to enable the intending immigrant to inform and prepare himself, the reading test will exclude few, if any, who possess the ambition and determination which form a part of the part of the equipment of those we invite to share with us the opportunities and blessings of liberty under law. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have been surprised at many statements made during this debate abounding not in fact, but statements made either in ignorance or otherwise.

I want to call attention to the great outcry that has been made as to the harm that will come and the bad conditions that will come with respect to wages in labor centers unless immigration is checked. It is an economic question. Will anybody tell me why the native American, born on the farm and in the country, goes to the labor center? It is because he receives there more uniform and better pay than he gets on the farm and in the smaller city and village. That is the reason, and that is also the reason why the immigrants go to the labor centers-for more uniform employment at a better wage.

Will anybody tell me why it is that this immense immigration to this country does not go South? I can tell you. because the wage in the North is better than it is in the South, The wage in the factory North is better than it is South. So, after all, I do not see why our southern brethren are so insistent upon shutting out labor that comes to this country willing to be employed.

Have wages been reduced with this great immigration coming to this country—greater in the aggregate from 1900 up to the present time than in any other 12 years in the history of the Republic? No. Wages have greatly increased notwithstanding that immigration. Gentlemen misapprehend what the facts are. It is an economic question so far as the immigration is concerned, not a racial question.

I want to say again to our southern brethren that I rejoice in their advance from the material standpoint. But there are shorter hours to-day in the Northland than there were before this great block of immigration came, and there is better employment at a better wage.

Mr. MADDEN. And shorter hours also than in the South-

Mr. CANNON. Yes; shorter than in the Southland. Mr. MADDEN. And better working conditions. Mr. CANNON. Yes; better working conditions. The ing conditions are improving constantly, and will continue to improve. I am surprised at many gentlemen who are familiar with the influence that has come from this immigration in the Northland. I am surprised that they are protesting and agonizing. I say it in all kindness, not to criticize; I say it is my judgment that if a hundred thousand or more of this immigration that comes to this country could go into the Southland occasionally it would better your condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bar-THOLDT] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 58, line 14, after the word "all," insert the word "male."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, the effect of my amendment would be to limit the operation of this bill to male immigrants, and I offer the amendment for the reason that certainly none of the classes in this country who are now looking upon immigration as a hostile invasion or as unwelcome competitors with American labor would have any objection to the coming hither of female servants.

I read in a New York paper the other day the following:

NEW YORK NEEDS 100,000 SERVANTS.

An exhaustive report on New York employment agencies which Commissioner of Licenses Herman Robinson has prepared was turned in to Mayor Gaynor yesterday by the commissioner. The servant problem, which it deals with in detail, shows that there is a great scarcity of servants. More than 100,000 of them could find employment in New servants. More York City alone.

And the same condition prevails all over the United States. Certainly it would look almost ludicrous for the American Congress to insist upon a servant girl being able to read or write when she comes to this country. I think all the objects which gentlemen want to accomplish would be attained if the bill should be limited-to male immigrants.

While I am on my feet I want to say that our friends of the restrictive persuasion always lay great stress upon the total number of immigrants who are coming every year, but not one of them has yet told the House, and I have not heard it stated during the whole debate, how many are going back every year. I have the figures here, reported by the Department of Commerce and Labor, which show that in the year ending June 30, 1911, 155,000 laborers arrived in this country and 172,000 laborers departed during the same time. In the reports for the fiscal year 1912 you will find that 135,726 laborers arrived in the United States and 209,279 departed from the United States. In other words, many more laborers are departing than are coming at the present time, and I believe there is no country in Europe that does not receive more immigrants than this country receives at the present time. What is the reason? The reason is the inimical spirit which is being displayed toward the men who are coming here in good faith, with good intentions, with their muscle, their brawn, and their brain fitted to aid us in building up our country.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I can not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman's time has expired, then he must yield to the gavel of the Chairman.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I join with my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, in the hope that all amendments to this measure will be voted down. The bill itself is a long step in the right direction. It is true some gentlemen seem to misunderstand its terms. My friend from New York [Mr. Goldfogle] seems obsessed with a misunderstanding of some terms of the bill and of some remarks I made about it on yesterday. He seemed unable to distinguish between an asylum for the oppressed of all nations and an insane asylum for the inmates of his particular district. Of course, I am not responsible for that. He says I do not know how to look at this question because I have no immigration into my district. Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, standing upon a corner of Broadway in the city from which the gentleman comes and beholding the shivering forms of the bread line at Fleischmann's corner had something to do with the opinion that I have formed about the desirability of restricting immigration into this great country.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is that all the gentleman knows about it? Mr. DIES. And traveling through the gentleman's district, on the east side of New York, and beholding the unclad and shivering forms of his constituents, who, I am told, live partially, at least upon rotten bananas and orange peels, I felt that in their behalf something ought to be done to stop the competition which had driven them to that desperate strait.

Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with the idea of maintaining this great Republic as an asylum for the oppressed of the nations of the earth, but in the interests of constituencies like those of my friend from the east side of New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE], believe that the time has come when the master should hoist the gangway and declare that the ship is loaded to its gunwale. If I were the gentleman from New York, instead of looking to the ports of eastern Europe for new objects of pity to come into my district, I should take steps to relieve the condition of those already here and protect their labor and their living against the further importations of the pauper and the cheap labor of Europe to this country. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost. Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, if I thought the pending bill would cure illiteracy and do away with the necessity for the free bread line, if I thought the pending amendment to the Senate bill would cure of itself those ills so graphically described, I would not rise to oppose this legislation, which proposes to exclude from admission to our country those over 16 years of age who can not read or write. I believe it is pertinent to inquire as to what classes of aliens may already be excluded, and for that purpose I want to remind this House that there are already 20 causes of exclusion of persons who may come to this country seeking admission to its shores.

was surprised to find by a cursory reading of the October Immigrant Bulletin, published by the Commissioner General of Immigration, which every one of you can obtain even as I have obtained it, that aliens may be deported because they are idiots, imbeciles, and feeble-minded; because they are insane or epileptics; because they are afflicted with tuberculosis, even though it is noncontagious; that aliens may be deported because they are loathsome or have dangerous contagious diseases. If they are professional beggars or likely to become a public charge, they can be deported. They can also be deported if there is a surgeon's certificate of defect, mental or physical, which may affect the alien's ability to earn a living

If they come here as contract laborers, they can be deported. If they come here accompanying aliens who may also be ex-cluded, they can be deported. They can not be admitted if they are under 16 years of age and unaccompanied by a parent. Assisted aliens may be deported. Criminal aliens may be excluded. All polygamists may be excluded, as also anarchists. Prostitutes and females coming for any immoral purpose may be deported. Aliens who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or females for any immoral purpose can be excluded. People are not admissible without passports, and those under the provisions of the Chinese exclusion act, as also those supported by proceeds of prostitution, may be deported.

Now it is proposed to add to that already extensive list those who may not be able to read and write a given language if they happen to be over 16 years of age. The gentleman from If they happen to be over 10 years of age. The general and elo-Texas [Mr. Dies] has talked to us most interestingly and elo-quently, but he has said nothing that was not said in my own Commonwealth of Massachusetts in 1855. I have here the inaugural message of the governor of that Commonwealth in 1855, when he took the oath of office to serve as governor of that State. I can state to him the statements that were made in that inaugural, and also the inaugural of 1856, and ask him whether any thought he uttered is new or strange to the period that these messages were written. I ask any man whether he would have this country go back to the conditions that did exist in 1855 and 1856 in its early development as contrasted with the glorious advances we have made in the present century and what we have gained since that time.

I have lived to the day when those who were objects of hostile legislation in Massachusetts in 1855 and 1856 have produced descendants who are the pride and glory of our citizenship. I shall not lend my aid nor give my vote to any measure that is designed to keep out Italians and Hebrews because they may not be able to read and write. And I predict that the time will come when the descendants of these Italians and Hebrews, now the object of hostile legislation, will have shown their worth and won their right to be classed as real contributors to the glory of American citizenship.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be concluded in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be concluded in five minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

Mann) there were 66 ayes and 52 noes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. BURNETT and Mr. MANN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 67 aves and 52 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 58, line 24, after the word "alien," by inserting the following: "That the word 'alien' wherever used in this act shall include any person not native born or a naturalized citizen of the United States."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT]. It has been brought to my attention that the Supreme Court has decided that the word "alien" does not embrace seamen, and the purpose of the amendment is to cover that loophole. I think the gentleman will understand that there is a great deal of complaint with regard to the administration of the law as it affects alien seamen, and that much of the difficulty that arises from the whole immigration question is due to the admission in some subterranean way of men who come in as seamen; and the Supreme Court having decided that a seaman is not necessarily an alien, the amendment is offered to cover that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, by adding on page 58, line 24, after the word "land":
"Provided further, That this (act) shall not be applicable to any person who shall emigrate from any country wherein persecution is directed against the religious denomination to which he belongs, by means of laws, customs, regulations, orders, or otherwise, nor to any person seeking to avoid persecution because of political beliefs or activities."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, that is entirely taken care of. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MANN. On the gentleman's own motion he cut off debate. Mr. KENDALL. It is not taken care of on the political part

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Madden) there were—ayes 27, noes 70.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for tellers. As many as favor ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eighteen gentlemen have risen, not sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. KENDALL. There is one more back there, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SABATH. Were there not 20 Members rose? I have counted 19, with the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. BARCHFELD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Chair counted me

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair counted the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Chair has already ruled.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and I know there is no gentleman who will vote against this amendment. I will ask the Clerk to read it carefully.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, after the word "land" on line 24, add: "Provided, That in no case shall any alien be excluded if such exclusion would separate him or her from his or her parent or parents; if parent, from his or her children, or if such parent or parents or the majority of the members of such family are entitled to be admitted into the United States: Provided, however, That such alien is not insane or afflicted with a loath-some or dangerous contagious disease or convicted of a felony involving moral turpitude.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Sabath) there were—ayes 32, noes 72.

Mr. Sabath. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.
Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 28, noes 62,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, page 58, after the word "reading," insert the words "and

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. BARTHOLDT, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 58, lines 16 and 17, after the word "language," strike out the words "or the language or dialect of some other country" and insert in lieu thereof the words "or any other language."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes. This is an important amendment to cure a defect in the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 67. Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen gentlemen have risen; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-five Members are present, a quorum, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 2. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether allens can read or not the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with copies of uniform slips, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plain type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. No two aliens coming in the same vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation shall be tested with the same slip.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "Section 2," page 59, line 1, insert: "Each alien shall be examined to ascertain whether he can read."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to perfect the bill. There is nothing in the bill directing that immigrants shall be examined.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies], in attempting a portrayal of New York conditions, indulged in language so extravagant that I am led to doubt that he ever was in New York. Blinded to real conditions—I say willingly blinded to conditions—and guided, I fear, by that spirit which, sad to say, is inborn in some, which breathes racial prejudice and religious hatred, he stood on this floor misrepresenting the living conditions in my city, especially in the district I represent. There are no conditions over there such as he described. I can not understand what could have led him to venture to describe a situation which exists only in dream and fancied imagination. If, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman ever was over to the East Side of New York he came, it is true, to a crowded section, but to a locality filled with the homes of a decent people and an honest working class. Yes, and there, too, dwell professional men who have earned for themselves name and fame for ability and skill and character. It is a cosmopolitan population, but there are no such pitiful sights there as the gentleman from Texas would have you understand are

In that district, Mr. Chairman, you will find the homes of good people, in whose dwellings pure and becoming family life is observed and wherein domestic peace and virtue are enshrined. You will find a people alive to civic duty, of patriotic impulse, and who value and esteem American citizenship as a boon and a blessing. You will find the schools—the day and the evening schools—filled with children eager to learn, remarkably apt at study, bright and intelligent. You will find students in colleges and universities winning honors and prizes for their educational attainments. You will find homes for the aged, hospitals for the sick, and sheltering homes for the immigrant. You will find a people who largely aid in helping the poor and the distressed and maintain with credit institutions which are a credit to our great metropolis. You will find in that district highly prosperous banks, and in the neighborhood you will find busy mechanics, artisans, tradesmen, storekeepers, and manufacturers all actively at work. And there, too, you will find good lawyers, excellent physicians, and professional men generally whose abilities well qualify them for their profes-

Mr. Chairman, in that district we have the establishments of a number of foreign-language newspapers, and those who can not yet read the English find there the newspapers that are published in their native tongue. They are well edited and convey, as does the so-called metropolitan press, the news of the day, and contain reading matter which not only is enlightening and interesting but tends to the better Americanization of the newcomer amongst us.

In that district, Mr. Chairman, though the territory of it is comparatively small, we have a number of libraries and educa-tional institutions. These libraries are packed nightly with men and women, with boys and girls. Had the gentleman from Texas been over there really to see what conditions prevail there he would have observed these splendid libraries. In the hurry in which I must necessarily make these remarks I shall mention but a few of the many illustrations I could cite.

In the Seward Park (N. Y.) Public Library branch the circulation for the year 1911 was one-half million. This is said to be the largest number of books circulated in any branch library in the world. In the Rivington Street branch 265,405 volumes were taken out, 60 per cent being drawn by children and 40 per cent by adults, during the year. And think of it! Many of these were texbooks selected by young men and young women anxious to prepare for the civil service or regent examination.

In the Hamilton Fish branch during 1911 there was a total circulation of 350,539 volumes, of which 215,712 were taken out by children.

Think of it! Only 7 per cent of the books circulated in this library in the section where so many foreign born dwell are in foreign languages,

This, Mr. Chairman, in a very meager way, gives you and the Members of this House an insight into conditions in my district, and though it is far from thorough, yet the statement suffices to refute what has been asserted against the people

The gentleman from Texas talks of illiteracy. In the district he represents I find the rate of illiteracy exceeds

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that Mr. DIES is not upon the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Texas spoke a few moments ago.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Dies spoke a few moments ago and should have remained here. He took advantage of my absence during general debate the other day to villify and slander the district I represent.

Mr. BURLESON. I am quite sure he did not take advantage of the gentleman's absence to say anything he would not have said had the gentleman been present.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BURNETT and Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend the remarks made to-day in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend the remarks he made to-day in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I merely wish to say if it is the evident intention to cut off debate I shall object hereafter to any requests to extend remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] be given five minutes more in which to conclude his remarks. [Applause,]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I object. Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, for two days in this debate I have been bowing my head in humble prayer that out of this great aggregation of farmers in this Congress [applause] somebody would get upon his feet and make the speech that I now propose to deliver.

Mr. Chairman, I have been employing farm labor for 35 years. I have never found the laborer getting more than he was worth. I have never been compelled to pay him more than he ought to I have never discovered that the increase of population of this country has tended to decrease his daily wage.

Nobody has greater respect for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] than I have, and I was surprised the other day when he quoted from the Declaration of Independence, written by the immortal Jefferson. I was gratified to find a Republican who would quote from him, but he sticks in the bark, it seems to me. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] this morning also quoted from Franklin. Why, both Franklin and Jefferson were dealing with a situation then very different from what it is now. If I read aright, Franklin must have gotten mixed up in his mathematics in determining how much he owed for wine in Paris and how much he owed this Government when he got away from there. Nevertheless, Thomas Jefferson was of the opinion that coincides very much with the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], that there ought to be a limit of time upon the immigration into this country. I am not at all enamored with this idea of putting on an educational qualification. But Thomas Jefferson was in favor of limiting the time to a 27-year period in order to keep out Europeans who were possibly destructive not of social relations in this country so much, but more particularly of political relations. And I want to say in apology to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] that I had to vote against his amendment fixing a moral qualification, because that touches me very closely.

I came from progenitors who would have come in here under the literacy clause easily enough, because in this country are men of letters and learning, as you will easily observe by the remarks of one of them; but as I read the history of my family, they were the most notorious pirates that ever plowed the great seas. [Laughter.] Therefore, out of respect for my progenitors, I did have to vote against the gentleman's amendment fixing the moral standard.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I am glad of it, Mr. Chairman.

[Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 59, line 2, by inserting after the word "read" the words "and write."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in perfect good faith and not at all for the purpose of embar-rassing friends of the bill. I am in favor of the bill; I am in favor of financial, physical, and moral tests for admission of immigrants; and I think there ought also to be a literacy test, but that ought to include a writing just as well as a reading test. In my judgment, that is what the people of the country expect; and what they want when they ask for a literacy test is for it to include both reading and writing. I hope that the amendment will be accepted by the gentlemen in charge of the bill and agreed to by the committee and the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, on the figures of last year the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio would exclude only 3,024 more persons than are excluded under a reading test. In other words, almost everybody who knows how to read can also write. After consulting with immigration officials in New York some years ago the Committee on Immigration came to the conclusion that the extra cost and difficulty of the writing test overbalanced the very slight additional advantage. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is adopted it will be necessary to revert to the previous paragraph and amend it in conformity with this paragraph.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and, Mr. Adair having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3947) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, in Jackson Hole, Wyo., asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Jones, Mr. Warren, and Mr. Newlands as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMMIGRATION.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division on this important question. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 13:

"Sec. 3. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of this act, to wit: (a) All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; (b) all aliens in transit through the United States; (c) all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one point of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, line 18, after the word "religious,"-insert the words "or political."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, very many of the immigrants who come to this country come because of religious persecution abroad, but an equal number, perhaps, come because of political persecution, which at times is even more harsh than religious persecution. It is a difference of opinion between those who do not agree with the crowned heads or the potentates of foreign countries and those who are subservient thereto, and it would seem a fair inclusion to admit the man who comes to this country because of political convictions differing from those of the ruling dynasties, as well as those who come because of religious beliefs that do not conform to the established standard.

It seems to me this amendment ought to be adopted, and that we should not deny admittance into the United States of those who come because of political persecution in foreign lands.

[Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the line of reasoning of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore] is precisely that of a distinguished anarchist who appeared before our committee some years ago from my own State [laughter], in which he held that the objection to anarchy was purely political; that it was a political persecution which they were trying to escape abroad, and that now we are politically persecuting them by excluding them here.

Now suppose, Mr. Chairman, you had an inspector who agreed with that gentleman, and the stranger were admitted. very clear that under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gen-theman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is perfectly aware, I am sure, that anarchists are explicitly excluded from

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. They are already excluded, but under a subsequent statute, I think, it would be held that there would at least be some question as to whether they would be admitted or not, provided they did not admit themselves to be anarchists.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman knows that I am as much opposed to the admission of anarchists as the gentleman himself is. I am speaking of men, not anarchists, who differ in their political views from their oppressors.

Mr. KENDALL. Like the men of 1848 in Germany? Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moore]. The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

A division, Mr. Chairman. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The committee divided; and there were-ayes 26, noes 67. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 3, page 59, by striking out from lines 15 and 16 the following words: "Shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor that they"

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is intended to make effective this provision in the exception of the bill relating to those who flee from religious persecution. In my judgment, those who really favor the bill and are in favor of the exception ought to accept this amendment.

It will be noted that there are three exceptions in section 3. It will also be noted that the language which I have asked to have stricken out, with regard to the particular section that refers to those who are seeking these shores for the purpose of escaping religious persecution, applies only to this particular section. It gives to the immigration officer the power of determining to his satisfaction whether or not the person is fleeing from religious persecution. It puts upon the immigrant the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that he is so doing.

Since the determination of the case of Ju Toy, the Chinese exclusion case, the courts have held that immigration officers who had this power committed to them acted with absolute and complete authority, such authority that the courts themselves could not interfere with it. The case of the United States v. Jn Toy (198 U. S.) decides that-

Even though the fifth amendment does apply to one seeking entrance to this country, and to deep him admission may deprive him of liberty, due process of law does not necessarily require, a judicial trial, and Congress may intrust the decision of his right to enter to an executive

That is what this language does. It gives to the executive officer the absolute right to determine. But it goes still further than that. It provides that this proof must be to the satisfaction of this officer. Those words go further, I think, than gentlemen could have supposed them to go, because the courts have decided that when that kind of language is used it means, in effect, not only that there shall be a preponderance of proof, but that the proof shall be beyond a reasonable doubt.

I want to quote from a decision delivered in the State of the chairman of this committee [Mr. Burnett]-the case of Torrey against Burney, 113 Alabama, 496—in which that court, in interpreting the word "satisfied," said:

"Satisfied," as used in a statement that one party to a cause must satisfy the jury of the existence of a certain material fact, means to relieve of all uncertainty or doubt.

I want to quote also from another authority, the case of Keich against State, an Ohio case reported in American State Reports, 680, in which it is stated that-

The word "satisfy," when used in the sense of satisfying a body of men of the truth of a disputed fact, means to free the mind from doubt regarding that fact—to set it at rest. The word implies much more than a preponderance of the evidence.

There is another decision from Wyoming that I desire to quote, in which the court says:

To satisfy the mind, we think the evidence must be such as to remove all reasonable doubt. The general definition of the word, as given in Webster's Dictionary, is "to fill up the measure of a want of a person or thing," and, more specifically, "to free from doubt, suspense, or uncertainty; to give assurance to, to set at rest the mind; to convince,"

So we give now, under the terms of this act as it stands, the power to determine this question so that no court can interfere with it, and then we put upon the immigrant the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that he is fleeing from religious persecution. The effect of this will be to make valueless the exception and to put it within the power of the immigration officer to exclude anyone who fails to satisfy his mind that he or she is seeking here an asylum from religious persecution.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the question as to the official to whom the proof that the immigrant is fleeing from religious persecution must be made, it seems to me it is in the interest of the immigrant himself that that proof should be made to some proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Under the amendment offered by the gentleman, as I caught the reading of it, it simply would leave it up in the air as to whom this proof should be made. The bill simply says it shall be made to the proper immigration authority or the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. The immigrant would have the right of appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor if the inferior immigration authority should decide against him.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the provision of the bill I take it that the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is final.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; and under a number of other provisions in the general immigration law.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing that. I am simply trying to get it straight in my own mind. If the gentleman's amendment prevails, the decision in the first instance, of course, would have to be made by the immigration service?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly. Mr. MANN. Would there then be an appeal to the courts on the claim made by the man that he was trying to escape religious persecution?

Mr. BURNETT. I think not; he would have the right of habeas corpus, and it would be the same as the law with relation to one afflicted with contagious disease and other diseases. It puts him in the same category as a man in that class.

Mr. MANN. This is really a pretty wide door anyhow.

Mr. BURNETT. I think we are giving a pretty wide door in favor of the immigrant.

Mr. MANN. I mean in favor of the immigrant. If this means anything at all, there ought to be somebody to enforce it.

Mr. BURNETT. I think there is under the law. I think it ought to be as it is. It is in favor of the immigrant, in the interest of the Government, and in the interest of all that there should be some specific person designated to whom this proof may be made.

I do not think the authorities bear the gentleman from Iowa out in regard to his construction of the law that the word "satisfaction" of the proper immigration officer means satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt. It may not mean by a preponderance of evidence, but whatever evidence he may have, if it convinces the proper immigration officer to his satisfaction. not as in the criminal law beyond a reasonable doubt, but as in civil cases, to a reasonable certainty, that is sufficient.

think that is all that this means and all that it implies. That is what our courts have held—what would satisfy a reasonable man.

The fact that there is a persecution of the Jews in Russia, of which the whole country knows, it would be a matter of common knowledge if such persecution was given as a reason for the entry of the immigrant; that of itself would satisfy a reasonable man. I do not think that it imposes any hardship. It does not say that he must satisfy him beyond a reasonable doubt; but when it is proved to a reasonable certainty or the satisfaction of a reasonable man, that would be all that the immigrant inspector would require.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this bill, in the first place, because even if it should become a law as it passes this House I regard the literacy test provided for in the bill as incorrect in principle and unwise. In the second place, I oppose it because as it will finally pass both Houses it will be very different from what it is now, and I fear not nearly so good. It really makes little difference what the bill contains when it leaves this Chamber. When it arrives at the other end of the Capitol it will be disagreed to, and the bill that finally becomes a law will be written by the conferees of the two Houses. It will go out of this House like the evil spirit out of the man described in Holy Writ. will pass through the dry places of the other end of the Capitol and the conference room, and, having taken unto itself seven or more other spirits, probably more wicked than itself, will return to us in the dying hours of this session, and, like the man in the Scriptures, our last state will be worse than the first.

I am much opposed to unrestricted immigration. I am in favor of every fair restriction that is founded upon sound economic or social principles. I favor a physical test that will keep out imbeciles, epileptics, diseased persons, weaklings, and any others that will tend to lower our race in physical strength and vitality. We must have a physically strong and vigorous people. I favor every reasonable and effective requirement that can be made as to character, for it is even more important that we be a people of strong moral fiber. I would keep out the crook, the criminal, the anarchist, the Black Hander, but this bill aims at nothing in this direction. Its entire force is directed against the poor unfortunate man or woman who has not had the opportunity of learning to read and write.

Although I favor a broad humanity, I believe in beginning at home and measuring outward. I stand for this country first and foremost; and if I believed, as it seems some gentlemen do, that European immigration is an unmixed evil and that its effect is altogether harmful, then I should favor absolute exclusion. If I believed that to be true, I should favor building a wall around this country so high that no alien could scale it. One country in history literally adopted such a program, but no one cites China as a model for a progressive country.

I believe that in the present state of our economic, industrial, and social development, the immigration of virile able-bodied young men and women of good moral character from Europe is one of the requisites of our continued progress. This is no new question. There has been scarcely a time since the establishment of our Government that this question was not a living one. The pages of our history are filled with it. Read some of the political literature of the first half of the last century. You will think some of the eloquent proponents of this bill have been plagiarizing, only substituting the downtrodden peoples of southern and eastern Europe for the then equally hated German, Irish, and other immigrants of the period. look back through the years and scan the record of accomplishment of those immigrants and their immediate descendants, observing how large a place they have filled and are filling in our national life, we bow our heads in shame at the narrowmindedness of some of our forbears. Know-Nothingism and A. P. A.-ism have gone to join witch burning, or at least I had supposed they had until this debate began. As I look out into the future and see a strong, virile, self-reliant, self-governing Nation of 200,000,000 people made up of the blood of all Europe. but all Americans, loyal to the same flag and ready to die for it, I can fancy the broad-minded statesmen of that time looking back upon this day with much the same feelings with which we look back upon the antiforeign demonstrations of the earlier

The ability to read has no correlation with sound bodies, clear intellects, and good morals, and these are the basic requisites of a great people. If a literacy test had been applied in this country from the beginning, how many of us would be here to-day? Go back through the probate and land records of the last two and a half centuries and see how many of your own ancestors made their cross in lieu of a signature.

I was born in the mountainous section of Tennessee. The purest American blood on all this continent is found there today. The people there are the direct descendants of the men who fought the Battle of Kings Mountain and of the men who were with Jackson at New Orleans, and yet within the memory of men still living comparatively few of them could read or write even so much as their names. My dear old father—still living there at a ripe old age—was the first to teach in his community the three R's to those brave, capable people. Such men as they laid the foundations of our earlier new Commonwealths, and comparatively few of them could either read or write. Would you shut out such men if they came to us now across the seas? You would if this bill were a law.

Some of you gentlemen who are casting such bitter aspersions upon the immigrants now coming here from the countries of southern and eastern Europe do not know what you are talking about. They are not a "coarse crew," neither are they the "scum" or "offscourings" of Europe, as they are so flippantly called. They are from among the best people of those countries. True, they do not come largely from the nobility nor from the broken-down aristocracy, but of the dregs of those countries they are not. They are largely from the substantial, rugged middle class, the kind making up the bone and sinew of every country. Though not of the poorest class—for these can not pay the cost of passage—it is admitted that most of them are poor, but pray since when was it a crime to be poor? If poverty were a crime, I was born a criminal and have never been pardoned or paroled from the consequences of it.

The percentage of illiteracy to-day is very high among the mountaineers of western North Carolina, eastern Tennessee, and eastern Kentucky; much higher, in fact, than it is in the cities of the East, which are supposed to be flooded with these illiterate immigrants. Would you argue that these mountain people are undesirable citizens on that account? Illiterate, many of them are; but ignorant, no. There is a difference. If there are people in this Union well qualified to govern themselves and others, it is those same brave, independent, generous mountain people. Many of them have had to face poverty both as individuals and as communities. School facilities have been inadequate and inconvenient; but keep your eye on the mountaineers, they are coming. So with many of our best immigrants. School facilities have been lacking in the land from which they come. They have had to endure poverty, and poverty hinders education; in fact, it precludes it in many countries outside of our own. Is it a mark of depravity that these people wish to come here to better their condition in life and enable their children to be educated?

It is seriously claimed here that these illiterate immigrants are crowding out our native skilled laborers and mechanics by competing with them in the labor market. What a compliment to the immigrant and what a reflection upon our native-born artisans. I do not believe it. From the beginning the immigrant of whatever nationality has done the hard, undesirable, though absolutely necessary, work. His continued coming, entering at the lower industrial level, has not forced the older immigrant and the native born down or out, but upward. Behold the course of the immigrant of half a century ago! First he dug the ditches and did the hard work in constructing the railroads. When other immigrants came to dig the ditches and build the railroads they pushed him up to be a gang boss, foreman, a contractor, or a policeman. Then, still others kept coming and kept crowding him, always upward, until now he is in Congress, and the end is not yet.

The coming of the immigrant furnishes the opportunity for

The coming of the immigrant furnishes the opportunity for the bright and capable among the native born and older immigrants to rise in the industrial scale. Somebody must do the work at the bottom of the scale, and there is much of such work to be done in a great and growing country like ours. Who shall do it? It is honorable, as all honest work is honorable; but it is hard and yields the smallest return. Yet it must be done, or industry must languish or stop altogether. Shall we by legislation attempt to make it necessary that a large share of this work be done by men already fitted for a higher grade of work? In my judgment, no worse blow could be struck at our skilled laborers and mechanics than to shut off the stream of ablebodied immigrants.

Admitting that it would be an industrial mistake to unreasonably restrict immigration, some have argued that in spite of that fact the restrictions of this bill should be imposed for social and political reasons. It is said with much fervid rhetoric that the very existence of our free institutions is threatened by this influx of immigration. I am not at all alarmed. All sorts of dire consequences to our social order are predicted if these illiterate immigrants are not shut out. The Prophet Jeremiah was an optimist compared with some of these gentlemen. Again I say, gentlemen, you do not know these people. Last Saturday, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley] called the Italian and Hebrew rolls of honor, it was suggested that the immigrants of to-day are not to be compared with those worthies. You make a serious mistake if you think we are not receiving some excellent material now, not only Italian and Hebrew, but other nationalities as well. Come with me to the city of my home and there call for a list of the men who are doing things worth while, making good in their chosen fields of activity, helping to make city, State, and Nation a better place to live in. High up on the list will be found representatives, not a few of the very people sought to be excluded by this legislation. Some of the very highest places in the learned professions, as well as in business, are held by men of these nationalities, either immigrants themselves or the sons of such immigrants. They are just as good Americans as you or I. Those of you who have had no opportunity to know such men can not appreciate them. I know them. They are my friends and neighbors, and the country is not in danger from the coming of their friends and former neighbors who are willing to do for a while the very hardest work in order to have a part in making this the greatest as well as the best country in all the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. TILSON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record.

there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Under the leave to extend just granted I desire to have printed as a part of my remarks an editorial from Financial America, as follows:

DILLINGHAM-BURNETT BILL.

Financial America, as follows:

DILINGHAM-BURNETT BILL.

With a persistency worthy of a better cause each recurring session of Congress in secent years witnesses the introduction of a bill, or bills, to recurring the property of the House is pledged to its support. This is the Dillingham-Burnett bill, and Mr. Burnarra assures us that an overwhelming majority of the House is pledged to its support. In discussing a measure of this sort it is well to look facts as they exist squarely in the face. What is the evil sought to be overcome by this bill? Ostensibly crime, we suppose; but where are the statistics to warrant the fest proposed of a preponderance of fraud and crime among the new arrivals? They are not at hand, nor may they be produced, for they are wholly nonexistent. On the other hand, is it sought by this measure to assure the laborer in this country benefits now enjoyed by him or to grant him an improved condition? We can not assent to either proposition, for our expendiorly of new arrivals in this country are not skilled workmen, and, accordingly, do not clash with the labor unions. In the second place, the preponderating number of aliens are unskilled in any particular training and are ready and willing to do manual work of almost any grade. We need men for employment of this character, and we have not a sufficiency among our own natives our youth for common labor and trains few as skilled mechanics. Our public school and high-school graduates, in the main, do not become mechanics or artisans. They seek and usually obtain more genteel employment. Only a few are young of effection and present living to therewise. We know, without any extended argument, that these things are so; and we should know that the lower grades of human employment in this country are taken by the immigrants who come to us, and that if they were not here to render us the service they do and have otherwise. We know, without any extended argument, that these things are so; and we should know that the lower grades of human employment paid the fines of minor offenders to procure their services, so difficult is it for these concerns to secure necessary labor. The commissioner of licenses in this city reports a shortage of 100,000 in the ranks of domestic service. Allens are the class from whom the farmer, the steel mill, the coke works, and the mistress obtain the help they require. Pass the Dillingham-Burnett bill and you will intensify the difficulties now existing through a shortage in the supply of manual labor or inferior employment.

If an alien is moral, law abiding, healthy, and honest, although lacking an education, we should permit him to enter, for we have need of his services. Indeed, his educational handicap is a badge of his carnestness and industry, for he must work to live. On the other hand, almost every "crook" can read and write some language. As between a crook passing the proposed test and an honest laborer failing to meet it, is the country the gainer by the admission of the former and the rejection of the latter? The educational test is necessary for citizenship. For mere admission it is not necessary, but, on the contrary, is a departure from earlier and long-established precedent, and a discrimination against unfortunate human beings who differ from us merely in the fact that they never enjoyed our opportunities. It is unworthy of America, unworthy of the spirit of "76, a reproach to the civilization we enjoy, to evolve which millions of aliens have nobly done their part, and a menace to our commercial and industrial expansion.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15 strike out the word "who," and in line 16 strike out the word "or" and insert in lieu thereof the words "with right of appeal." Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is agreed to, the paragraph will read as follows: All aliens shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer, with the right of appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, that they are seeking admission to the United States solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, it makes the language plain and puts it in such a way that there can be no mistake in the meaning that Congress desires the alien to have the right to appeal from the decision of the inspector wherever it is wanted. In many of the ports, and as well in inland places, the inspector passes upon the rights of the alien to stay in this country without opportunity to be represented fully in the premises. would offtimes be a sad miscarriage of justice to deport aliens under this act, if it does become an act-which I hope it dees net, however-if there was no opportunity to have the case or cases appealed for consideration by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor. These people are usually ignorant of their rights in the premises, and it is not an unusual thing for the inspector to be anxious to deport them.

If this section should remain as it is in the bill and become a law, it will, in fact, be very doubtful if there is the right of appeal to the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor to review or reconsider de novo the decision of the immigration officers. I hope that the chairman of the committee will allow the amendment to be adopted. I think it will help this section and help the bill. If the bill is to become a law, it will be of some benefit. I hope, of course, that the bill will not pass, for I believe it is pernicious to the spirit of the American people to provide educational tests for those who desire to come and seek opportunities in this country.

If the illiteracy test had been in operation in this country in the past, it would have robbed us of some of our best citizens and of some of our ablest and greatest patriots. In my city-St. Louis-some of the ablest of our professional and business men are the progeny of parents who could neither read nor write when they landed here from foreign shores. To-day they are as good citizens of this country as there can be found. The illiteracy test will neither cheapen nor degrade American labor. It will not keep out the undesirables. It will hinder and in many cases prevent good emigrants from coming to this country. We want all the good ones we can get. They are needed in the city factories and mills and to build railways, and they could, many of them, be used to advantage in the South on the plantations and otherwise. Read our country's history and learn of the great patriots that came to these shores without any education. This proposed test is wrong in principle and un-American, in my judgment, and I trust it will not prevail, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, touching the gentleman's first amendment, striking out the word "who," it will destroy the sense, as the gentleman will see if he will read the first part of the section. The bill provides as follows:

That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operations of this act, to wit, (a) all allens who shall prove to the satisfaction, etc.

Is the gentleman not convinced that that word should remain there?

Mr. DYER. That, perhaps, should remain there. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman was probably correct in the other amendment which he offers; that is, the substitution of the words "with the right of appeal" for the word "or.'

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I would not object to the right of appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, but this gives the immigrant an advantage—even at that—because it allows him in the first instance to make his proof to the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor. I will be willing to have the further statement made, that if he has tried in the first instance

Mr. MANN. But if the gentleman will permit, Does not the language of the bill authorize the Secretary of the department to make general rules concerning what proof is necessary?

Mr. BURNETT. I think so.
Mr. MANN. It could not be done if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri were agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. That is true. I think that is a dangerous proposition.

Mr. DYER. But I will say that there are now instances where the immigration authorities have the full power to act upon these cases, and to have these people deported, and if there is no right of appeal to the Department of Commerce and Labor, in lots of cases men will be sent back, as they have been sent back wrongfully, where if they had an opportunity to pre-sent their case before the Secretary or even before a chief or the Board of Immigration and Naturalization great wrongs would never have happened as they have happened.

Mr. BURNETT. They have now under the general law that right of appeal.

Mr. DYER. Oh, I beg to differ from the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; except in surgical

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to oppose the amendment?

Mr. BURNETT. I think it is unnecessary to oppose it. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is it too late to move to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to move to strike out the last word. This is an amendment to the amendment. If the gentleman is opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, the Chair will hear him upon that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am not opposed to it. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rose in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Massachusetts spoke in the time of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I yielded the floor, and the gentleman from Massachusetts took the floor in his own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill for two reasons. First, because it is against the broad American spirit which has always opposed class distinction. If enacted into law, it will not prevent the coming into this country of the anarchist, the ultrasocialist, who we believe is a menace to the institutions of our country, members of the Mafia and Black Hand organizations of southern Europe, all of whom are able to read and write. What it will do is to shut the door of opportunity to the men or women who have never had a chance and who in the past have come to this country, the haven of the oppressed, to be afforded the opportunity to work out their own and their children's future. This whole movement, in my judgment, is a prejudice on the part of unthinking people against the so-called foreigner. This prejudice has existed since the establishment of the country. In the minds of some people it has always been a habit to say that we want America for the Americans. Those who have adopted that shibboleth have forgotten that their ancestors, struggling for the opportunity to serve God and work out their own salvation, were immigrants themselves.

An examination of the record from the beginning of the last century down to this very late day will show many periods in the country's history when apparently this whole matter would come up and be discussed. I recall reading in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD a discussion which took place over 100 years ago on this very subject, when a distinguished Representative in Congress in referring to the large immigration from Ireland expressed alarm at the effect of the coming of the "wild" Irish on our institutions; he referred to their herding in the large cities, saying they would control our politics and were even then being elected to Congress. He was certain that if we permitted it to continue the Nation would be destroyed. The subsequent developments showed he was in error, and so during all the years that have gone the agitation over the large Irish,

German, Scandinavian, and French immigration has disappeared, and the opposition now seems to be centered against the Jew, the Italian, and the Pole,

The strange thing about it all is that the Representatives in this House from the districts where there is no foreign population are the ones that are advocating this legislation, while those from the great cities of the country, who have to deal with the problem in everyday life, are opposed to the enactment of this legislation, which will put upon the illiterate alien this most unjust discrimination.

In the city of New York the difficulty of the assimilation of the immigrant is a great problem, but it is being worked out. A reference has been made by some of the advocates of this legislation to crime committed in our city, but when you stop to consider the fact that we have a population of nearly 5,000,000 within the limits of the city and another one and onehalf million within a radius of 25 miles, the crime in proportion to the population is not excessive. We are proud of the city of New York; we are proud of the progress it has made as the greatest metropolis of the world; we are proud of its manufacturing industries, of its art and literature, of its great financial institutions; we are proud of the fact that our people are able and willing to leave open the door of opportunity for the strong and healthy of Europe who are willing to come here We build and maintain at great expense a system of public schools, which is the greatest leveler of the human race. and which has done and is doing more to inculcate the true spirit of this country into the sons and daughters of the illiterate alien than anything else we know of. We ask no assistance to take care of them, and if the people of the rest of the country would take a broader view of this important subject and do their part they would not only be happier, but more prosperous. If their communities were like our great city, they would develop more rapidly.

The following is an interesting table of the population in the city of New York, furnished me by the Census Bureau, showing the native and foreign born of that city. You will observe the foreign born in 1880 was about 33 per cent and that in 1910 it has only increased to about 38 per cent, in spite of the immigration of the last 30 years:

My second reason for opposing this legislation is that it is economically wrong. The recent immigration has not displaced the native American wage earner and the earlier immigrant, but has only covered the shortage of labor resulting from the excess of the demand over the domestic supply. I am competent, I believe, to discuss this question. I have studied it from every phase as affecting the business interests of New York City and the wage earning of the American workman; neither has it increased the hours of labor of the so-called skilled American workman. The real fact in the matter that can be demonstrated clearly is that this immigration has tended to actually decrease the hours of labor and increase the wages of the skilled American workman. I am engaged in the building business in New York City, and from my own observation have noted in the past 25 years first a reduction of the hours of labor of men engaged in that industry from 10 to 8 hours and an actual increase in compensation for every branch of labor of from 30 to 100 per cent. The following are a few of the trades picked out at random showing how much the compensation has increased during the time above indicated:

Common laborer, with pick and shovel, from $1.25 to $2.25

Hod carrier, from $1.75 to $3.25 per diem. Stonemason, from $3 to $4.50 per diem. Bricklayer, from $4 to $5.60 per diem. Plasterer, from $4 to $5.60 per diem. Plumber, from $3.50 to $5 per diem. Carpenter, from $3 to $4.50 per diem. Roofer, from $3 to $4.50 per diem. Tile layer, from $3 to $5.25 per diem.

Take the first item, the commonest kind of labor, the man who works with a pick and shovel. Twenty-five years ago he received $1.25 a day and worked 10 hours, and we had all of the men we needed for this character of work. To-day we pay the same man $2.25 and in many cases $2.50, and he works 8 hours a day, and at present we are 25 per cent short of the required number of men needed for this work. This is the kind of work the illiterate men of Europe do for us. Only last week I talked with a contractor in New York City who had 125 laborers engaged in excavating work. One hundred and fourteen of these were foreign born and 96 could neither read nor write. We have employed in common labor, building our great subway systems of New York City, thousands of men who work with the pick and shovel. We are unable to get anywhere near the number of men we need for this character of labor, and if immigration is cut off 25 per cent you are going to severely cripple the building of railroads, besides the numerous private enterprises of the country. These illiterate immigrants are not men who are threatening our institutions, but from close intimate observation I know them to be law-abiding citizens, easy to manage; they live quietly and unpretentiously, so that in the main they stay here, send their children to school, and in the second generation are assimilated by the people of our great city.

I have here a statement furnished me by the Department of Commerce and Labor relative to the number of immigrants who arrived at the port of New York between 1881 and 1910:

Years.	Number of ar- rivals.	Number of illiterates over 14 years of age.	Per- centage of illit- eracy.
Total immigration, 1881 to 1890. Total immigration, 1891 to 1900. Total immigration, 1901 to 1910.	5,246,613 3,687,564 8,795,386	2,126,153	27.5
Italian, South, 1901 to 1910	1,761,948 342,261	843,300 36,121	53.9 11.6
Total Italians, 1901 to 1910	2,104,209	879, 421	46.9

It will be observed by this statement that 27 per cent of the immigrants coming here between 1901 and 1910 were illiterate, and of a total of 2,126,153 illiterate immigrants 843,300 were from southern Italy, the people who furnish the common labor in America. The additional fact has not been brought out that at least one-half of these illiterate immigrants return to their homes, so that, after all, the sum total of the increase is hardly perceptible, taken throughout the country as a whole.

I can sum up the situation in no better way from the economical side of the question than to read the following extract from an article by Dr. Isaac A. Hourwich, printed recently in one of the current magazines:

Recent immigration has displaced none of the native American wage earners or of the earlier immigrants, but has only covered the shortage of labor resulting from the excess of the demand over the domestic supply.

2. Immigration varies inversely with unemployment; it has not increased unemployment.

3. The standard of living of the recent immigrants is not lower than the standard of living of the past generations of immigrants in the same occupations. Recent immigration has not lowered the standard of living of Americans and older immigrant wage earners.

4. Recent immigration has not reduced the rates of wages, nor has it prevented an increase in the rates of wages; it has pushed the native and older immigrant wage earners upward on the scale of occupations.

5. The hours of labor have been reduced contemporaneously with recent immigration.

6. The membership of labor organizations has grown apace with recent immigration; the new immigrants have contributed their quota to the membership of every labor organization which has not discriminated against them, and they have firmly stood by their organizations in every contest.

Mr. Chairman, this is a big question and one not to be considered in a spirit of prejudice, but to be worked out in keep-ing with the great principles of our American institutions. If I were to be influenced in my vote on this question by the number of letters I have received from my constituents favoring the bill as against those opposed to it, I would vote for this amendment, but I am convinced that in principle it is wrong and that it will work great harm to the country; it will injure rather than help American labor; that it will be more detri-mental than beneficial to our institutions, and will be a step backward, and I can not bring myself to vote for it.

The discussion of the day seems to indicate that it will be passed by an overwhelming vote, in view of the agitation now being worked up in its favor, and unquestionably go to the President for his action. I hope he may take the broad ground that others before him have, and see what I believe to be a situation that in the end will work great harm to us.

I am the grandson of immigrants myself, and glad of the fact that my Irish and Scotch ancestors came here in the early part of the last century, and confident of the fact that they helped, with others of their race, to work out the problems of their day and generation, and certain the immigration of this period is beneficial rather than injurious to this country, and hopeful in the end this legislation will not become a law.

The reasons that I have already given are the chief reasons which ought to occur to any broad-minded observer and true lover of his country. They are the reasons which actuate me lover of his country. They are the reasons which actuate me in my capacity as a Representative, not only from the State of New York but as a Representative for the benefit of the whole United States. Each Representative, however, is not only a national Representative but the representative of the interests of his State and of his district. I deem it proper, therefore, to call the attention of the House to the additional reasons which actuate a Representative from New York State and from New York City. Not only have we there now an absolute dearth of labor, but we are confronted by the fact that our State has just voted to bond itself in the sum of $50,000,000 for additional good roads and that our city within 30 days will have signed contracts for the building of new subways costing $300,000,000. The bulk of this vast sum of $350,000,000 will be spent for labor, and the greater portion of that labor will be unskilled If, coming from Brooklyn, I vote to cut down the supply of unskilled labor, I vote to postpone the coming of our sorely needed additional subways. If there were no other reason for voting against this amendment, I would not vote on the eve of these great public works to exclude healthy, clean-minded, hard-working, unskilled laborers simply because they can not read, especially when I note from the reports of the Commissioner General of Immigration for 1910, 1911, and 1912 that the increase of population through immigrants is steadily decreasing, having been 817,619 in 1910, 512,085 in 1911, and but 440,000 in 1912. What justification is there for further restriction, as such, in the face of an increased demand for labor and a decreasing supply?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

Amend by inserting the following at the end of line 22, on page 59, as new sections, and numbered section 4 and section 5:

"Sec. 4. That section 2 of the act entitled An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, approved February 20, 1907, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All Aslatic laborers; all idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The reading thus far makes it apparent it is out of order, and I make the point of order at this point that it is not germane.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, is it not ordinarily the custom to read the bill before the Chair is able to determine?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the amendment read.
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BURNETT. If the reading of the bill proceeds far enough to make it apparent that it is not germane, is not it in order to make the point of order at that time? If it were a little short amendment I would not care, but I do not care to have a long bill read to kill time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the Chair will hear it read a little further.

The Clerk continued to read as follows:

"five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars"——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that this amendment is not germane, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Before the Chair sustains the point of order I would like to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Chair ruled awhile ago, and then after hearing it argued reversed himself. The Chair is very positive that he knows how to rule upon an amendment that he has not heard read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not ask the gentleman from Illinois to instruct him on that point.

Mr. MANN. That is the duty of the Chair to be instructed by gentlemen of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will come to Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois is in order. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair declined to grant me the courtesy of a hearing; I take it in my own right. Here is a proposition to forbid the admission of aliens over 16 years of age physically capable of reading who can not read the English language, and so forth. Now, the gentleman from Call-fornia offers an amendment excluding other aliens. Is the Chair prepared to rule that no alien can be excluded except those specifically provided for in this amendment? Is that the liberality of amendment under the provisions of this rule which we were told would obtain when the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] defended the rule? Here is a proposition excluding certain classes of aliens, and it is now ruled by the Chair that no other alien can be excluded; that no proposition can be put into this by way of amendment which enlarges in any way the provisions of the committee amendment. By the same token of reasoning the Chair might equally well rule that you could not take anything out of this provision; that you could not enlarge and you can not decrease the number provided for by the committee amendment; and yet we were told the other day that this was not a gag rule; that this permitted liberal amendment; that this permitted the House to act as it pleased upon the questions which should come before it; that the House could determine who and what they would put into the bill. The Chair rules you can not add to it; that you can not detract from it. A liberal rule! I said the other day the rule was a gag rule. The Chair construes it to be a gag rule. There never was a rule introduced into this body more of a gag rule, which cunningly provides that the Chair shall rule you can not add to it and you can not take away from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the judgment of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The question was taken, and the decision of the Chair was

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly, as a Member of this body, that the majority Members who are in favor of this restrictive legislation are not basing their position on a sound economic theory. Representative WYATT AIREN of South Carolina, as a Member of this House, on April 22, 1904, said this in support of a bill authorizing the Commissioner General of Immigration to establish an information bureau on Ellis Island for the better enlightenment of the immigrants and for their better distribution throughout the land:

The land area of the South is 585,310,000 acres. In 1900 the total farm acreage was 387,690,426 acres. The total improved acreage was only 145,185,599 acres, leaving 242,000,000 acres of farm land to be put into profitable cultivation.

And speaking of the immigrants that to-day are condemned by men from the South as undesirable, he said:

Until latterly considerable prejudice existed against the Italian, but with most favorable testimony in his behalf from Georgia, Louisiana, and a number of other Southern States, our people look with a great deal more favor on these hardy industrial agriculturists.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, if that was the position some 10 years ago, I do not know in what particular that condition has changed. I believe, Mr. Chairman, if this question is to be determined on an economic theory, an economic basis of a sound character, then the real question is one of distribution and not discrimination. Establish laws in your State that will prohibit the employment of women and children at night, that will prohibit the employment of boys and girls under 18 years of age, and you will compel the settlement and the development of your farm lands.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] wants to know why I changed what I said in my remarks when I referred to the Junior Order as an A. P. A. society, or a proscriptive society, and I will say to him that I was informed by one of the delegates attending the convention in this city that it was not an A. P. A. organization. I presumed the gentleman was telling the truth. I sent to the library and I have here a liberality of the Junior Order of American Mechanics. The first principle of your organization-

Is to maintain and promote the interests of Americans and shield them from the depressing effects of unrestricted immigration.

The second section reads:

To assist them [Americans] in obtaining employment.

Third section:

To encourage them [Americans] in business * * *. To uphoid the American free public-school system, to prevent any interference therewith, and to encourage the reading of the Holy Bible therein.

Is there any reason why an Episcopalian, a Methodist, a Catholic, or an Israelite should be compelled to attend school and because of his attendance rend the Bible of some other religion than the religion in which he believes if this is a country where free religious belief exists? You talk about your chivalry, and you fear the competition of the foreigner. You make provisions, further, here so that encouragement shall not be given to anyone who furnishes employment or assistance in securing employment for anyone other than a member of the Junior Order of American Mechanics. And, further, here in your criticism in this book, you refer to ex-Speaker David B. Henderson, whom I never met, and say that he was the champion of the Roman Catholic Church, and made a very bitter speech, and complimented the Junior Order of United American Mechanics on their part in defeating the sectarian amendments by denouncing it as a secret society that works in the dark.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURLEY. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, some reference has been made to my reference to the question of the Black Hand. I have believed, Mr. Chairman, that the ignorant man, not possessed of education, the man who is always with his back to the wall, is a different class of man to deal with than the man who has the advantages of our public-school system, the advantages of association with men of intelligence, men of culture, and men of refinement. And I am surprised that the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert] should see fit to bring that up as a subject for comparison. There is no comparison between the intelligence of the South and the ignorance of the foreigner landing on our shores, who has had no opportunity for education and no opportunity for the refining influences that are to be found in our public-school system and in our American associations.

With reference to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Pow-ERS], I had a perfect right to determine whose questions I should answer and whom I should permit to ask questions of me. And I yielded to those who in my opinion I believed might ask a question, as I said, that might contribute some-thing to an intelligent discussion of this question. And I take nothing back from that proposition.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, if this question were to be determined on merit, I believe that every man in the South knowing the development that has taken place in the West through the influx of the immigrant and through the influence of the immigrant would vote for this proposition to make Dixie land what it should be-the fairest and the finest of any section of the entire earth.

You are blessed by divine Providence with sunlight for a longer period of the year than any other section of the country.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CURLEY. Yes; I yield.
Mr. DIES. May I ask the gentleman this question: Does the gentleman believe that these 250,000 who are sought to be excluded by the provisions of this bill will by their coming help to maintain the standard of wages and living in this country? And does the gentleman believe they are capable government and can help us to solve the difficult problems of Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, on that proposition I submit that the best evidence obtainable is the evidence of a Representative of the gentleman's own district who served in Congress, on whose own admission the land of the South is as yet scarcely scratched.

There is no section where the immigrant has taken up an abode that has not become enriched materially. The presence of the immigrants makes of them a contributing factor to the entire community. Even allowing that they send money home occasionally, the fact remains that they do bring their families here. And it is not the scum of the earth that we get here. Of the 232,000 immigrants who arrived in 1903, 197,600 were history of that order. I am surprised when you talk about the from Italy and were between the ages of 15 and 45, and the immigration commissioner of Italy made the statement that every male Italian coming here between the ages of 15 and 35 represented a loss to the Italian Government of at least $1,000 in each individual case. If he represented that loss to the Italian Government, then he represented that gain to this Government.

You have no immigrant problem to disturb you in the South, and the Representatives from New York are in no wise disturbed over the immigration in New York, which they are handling to their entire satisfaction.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman if the voters of his own State are not required to sign their own names and to read the Constitution of the United States before they can register as a preliminary preparation for voting?

Mr. CURLEY. In answering that question I will refer the gentleman to the parent organization of our dear Junior Order once more and to the provision that insisted that an immigrant should live in this country for 21 years before he could acquire the right to take out naturalization papers and thereby secure the advantages of citizenship.

The principles of the Native American Association, as adopted in 1837 and modified in 1844, were as follows:

First. We maintain that the naturalization laws should be so altered as to require of all foreigners who may hereafter arrive in this country a residence of 21 years before granting them the privilege of elective franchise; but at the same time we distinctly declare that it is not our intention to interfere with the vested rights of any citizen or lay any obstruction in the way of foreigners obtaining a livelihood or acquiring property in this country, but, on the contrary, we would grant them the right to purchase, hold, and transfer property and to enjoy and participate in all the benefits of our country (except that of voting or holding office) as soon as they declare their intention to become citizens.

Second. We maintain that the Bible, without note or comment, is not secturian; that it is the fountainhead of morality and all good government and should be used in our public schools as a reading book.

Third. We are opposed to union of church and state in any and every form.

Fourth. We hold that native Americans only should be appointed to office and to legislate, administer, and execute the laws of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley] be extended five minutes. there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Bu-CHANAN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the solution of the immigration question is one that has been taxing the intellectual ability of the best men in the country. Those who have been active in the organized-labor movement of this country almost from the beginning of the success of that movement, men who have been earnest and honest in exercising their influence for the uplift of the working people of the country, have favored a limited restriction of immigration, not because they are enemies of the foreign element but because they want to protect the foreign element against a condition under which they are brought here in their ignorance to be exploited by greedy, profitseeking corporations.

This amendment, Mr. Chairman, probably will not produce the results that are desired by the labor people of this country and when I say "the labor people" I mean those who have studied the labor questions; those who favor the improvement of the conditions of the wage earners of this country. It may not, as I stated, do all that they hope it will do, but it certainly is not an unreasonable amendment, this educational It ought to encourage the foreign nations to educate their people if they want them to come here. It ought to fit them the better for citizenship.

I would probably favor something which should provide for a minimum-wage scale, or prohibit these foreign workingmen from working for less than the prevailing wage. In my judgment, that would tend to solve this problem. But the constitutionality or the validity of such a provision would probably be successfully attacked. Hence the labor people who have studied this question from the point of view of labor's interests in this country are in favor of this limited restriction, and therefore, with that view in mind-the protection of the laboring people against the exploitation of profit-seeking corporations-I favor this measure.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up further time, and so I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Buchanan] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. Mann. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my colleague have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not care to take the five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman believe that the enactment of this bill, providing for a literacy test, will decrease the price of labor in this country or increase it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, I am of the opinion that it will tend to improve our citizenship, and that means that it will improve the condition of the working people. If the foreign working people who are educated and who desire to come here and secure a home for themselves and become citizens of the United States would endeavor to understand our institutions and exercise an influence for the improvement and betterment of the working people, instead of permitting themselves to be used to reduce the standard of wages, legislation of this sort would probably be less desired, but since facts prove that there has been rapid deterioration in the mode and standard of living of the working classes consequent on the incoming swarms of lifelong poverty-stricken aliens I believe that the educational test should be adopted, since it would tend to eliminate to a great extent the undesirable element of foreign countries coming here and thus tend to again place the social life of the American working people up to the standard that we desire.

The organized-labor movement has always been in favor of a restriction of immigration by means of the literacy test. the Pittsburgh convention of the American Federation of Labor in 1905 the following resolutions were adopted:

in 1905 the following resolutions were adopted:

A further check should be put upon assisted immigration. The law now permits the passage of an alien to be paid by any relative or "friend" living in this country. Every employer who wants to bring in cheap laborers is of course a "friend" to them, or can find some-body to play the part. It is one of the readiest means of evading the contract-labor law. The privilege of paying the passage of others should be rstricted to the nearest relatives—fathers, mothers, and children, brothers and sisters, husbands and wives.

In accordance with the views here outlined, we recommend that you authorize your officers to use all honorable means for the amendment of our immigration laws so as to exclude persons physically unfit, to check the evil of assisted immigration, to introduce an educational test, and to provide that ports of entry shall be confined to those on the Atlantic and Pacific oceans and the Gulf of Mexico.

In the 1909 convention of the American Federation of Labor

In the 1909 convention of the American Federation of Labor at Toronto, Canada, these resolutions were indorsed:

at Toronto, Canada, these resolutions were indorsed:
Whereas the filiteracy test is the most practical means for restricting the present stimulated influx of cheap labor, whose competition is so rulnous to the workers already here, whether native or foreign; and Whereas an increased head tax upon steamships is needed to provide better facilities, to more efficiently enforce our immigration laws, and to restrict immigration; and Whereas the requirement of some visible means of support would enable immigrants to find profitable employment; and Whereas the effect of the Federal bureau of distribution is to stimulate foreign immigration: Therefore be it

Resolved by the American Federation of Labor in twenty-ninth annual convention assembled, That we demand the enactment of the illiteracy test, the money test, an increased head tax, and the abolition of the distribution bureau; and be it further Resolved, That we favor heavily fining the foreign steamships for bringing debarable allens where reasons for debarment could have been ascertained at time of sale of ticket.

The following extract from the annual report of President

The following extract from the annual report of President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, which was indorsed at the recent convention held at Rochester, N. Y., November 11-23, 1912, with reference to Senate bill 3175, explains the present position of the organization in regard to the matter:

The illiteracy test advocated by the American Federation of Labor was added to the bill and passed by the Senate.

In the January, 1911, issue of the American Federationist, under the title of "Immigration—Up to Congress," President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, says:

pers, of the American Federation of Labor, says:

The final inning of the tug of war over immigration has now begun. In this contest tremendous forces are engaged. On the side of America are the upholders of two distinctive American sentiments, the maintenance of the American standard of living for our wage-working classes and the maintenance of American institutions as they are, unimpaired through the financial degradation of the working classes. On the proimmigration side is the powerful immigration machine, composed of the transocean combine, with all its thousands of agents and other innumerable parasites, the bankers, padrones, etc., who are coining money out of the millions of immigrants coming in the course of years into this country from Europe.

The center of this tug of war has at last shifted to Congress. No longer is the discussion indefinite, casual, or partisan, or without an immediate object, conducted through the press and other insufficient agencies of information and debate. No longer, either, is it backed up merely by individual impressions or the partial investigations heretofore promoted by various private institutions. The Federal Government undertook four years ago the solution of the immigration question through scientific means. It set out to ascertain the undeniable facts, and after three full years of research its commission has brought forward in less than 40 volumes on the subject, covering every possible phase. Its recommendations it has brought forward in concise form in a separate pamphlet.

A reading of these recommendations confirms the facts of the case as they have been accepted by the American Federation of Labor after the serious study its members had given the question for decades. The local, and then the international unlons, and finally the annual conventions of the American Federation of Labor itself have had immigration up for consideration as one of the principal labor topics on literally thousands of occasions. The membership as a whole, from upholding the sentiments the great majority once entertained, namely, that this country could go on indefinitely absorbing the entire possible stream of immigration, have reluctantly, in view of the facts, passed over to the sway of the sentiment that their own good heartedness toward the immigrants and he laborers of the Old World was being exploited by large employers for the purpose of reducing wages as well as by the steamship combine and its myriad of parasites for the sake of their own profits. At last the great body of the American industrial wageworkers have come to see one fact above others, which is, that the immigrants are assimilated in America through the wageworking class. This names that the American broad and the relegions have witnessed a rapid deterioration in citizens should be made subject to deportation, and that the division of information should cooperate with the States desiring immigrant settlers.

At the recent St. Louis convention of the American Federation of Labor the president in his report called the attention of the delegates to the fact "that a veritable flood of bills" designed to check immigration had been introduced in the last session of Congress, and the report of the executive council on the president's report expressed the hope that this flood of bills and the work of the Immigration Commission would result "in the enactment of legislation which will protect the workers in this country from the unfair competition resulting from indiscriminate immigration."

On behalf of American labor it is to be said that the action of the trade-unlons in this country on this most delicate international question involves a step that touches the heart of every man contemplating it. That step, the advocacy of exclusion, is not prompted by any prejudices against the foreigner. We recognize the noble possibilities in the poorest of the children of the earth who come to us from European lands. We know that their civilization is sufficiently near our own to bring their descendants in one generation up to the general level of the best American citizenship. It is not on account of their assumed inferiority, or through any pusillanimous contempt for their abject poverty, that, most reluctantly, the lines have been drawn by America's working classes. Changes are constantly going on in Europe for the uplift of the men of labor, and it can well be believed that each country in Europe is in position to solve its own labor questions in the way best for itself. A fact now obvious in this country is that American labor and European labor have both been made the subject of a colossal bunco game played by avaricious exploiters of the poor. The sounding phrase, "protection of American labor," has of recent whole, to be made the mode of the working classes, the net gains, on the w

The first annual report of the New York Bureau of Industries and Immigration, a branch of the State department of labor, was submitted to the New York Legislature while in session. The year reported for closed September 30, 1911. The summary read as follows:

In the matter of distribution of labor, that this State is without any machinery for distribution or supervision of private distribution agencies, except through a law administered by separate cities according to the standard and belief of each individual mayor, although a great part of the furnishing of labor is intercity and interstate.

In the matter of transportation, that the combination of steamship

In the matter of transportation, that the combination of steamship agents, emigrant hotels, runners, porters, expressmen, and cabmen throughout out the country, operating chiefly through New York City, forms one of the most stupendous systems for fleecing the alien from the time he leaves his home country until he reaches his destination in America, and vice versa.

In the matter of living and labor conditions in labor camps and colonles, that aliens are discriminated against in regard to housing, sanitation, food supplies, and employment methods, being denied the ordinary decencies of life; that in regard to labor conditions, aliens are checked and tagged, amounts ordered by the padroni are deducted from their wages without their knowledge or express sanction, and exploitations occur in hospital charges and the purchase of supplies.

In the matter of industrial calamities and personal injuries, exploitations occur in hospital charges and the purchase of supplies.

In the matter of savings, and property in his home country.

In the matter of savings, that the private banking laws are affording only a small measure of protection, owing to evasions of the law, and no protection whatever outside of cities of the first class; that frauds in the sale of homes to aliens by means of the solving of puzzles or by means of excursions arranged to interest aliens in "show" pieces of property, or by other means, are widespread; and that the settlement of affairs in the old country, when an allen wishes to settle here, is in the hands of a most unscrupulous class of lawyers, notaries public, collection agents, information bureaus, and protective leagues.

In the matter of education for children, that inadequate provisions exist for taking care of groups of people who collect with the starting of new industries in remote places, such as mines and quarries, and that adults outside of cities are wholly neglected in matters of instruction in English, civics, and naturalization. There are no systematic assimilation processes by t

Commenting on the above report in the American Federationist for November, 1912, Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, said:

Federation of Labor, said:

The reader of this indictment of America's civilization may well wonder if there could be worse conditions for the bureau to investigate and describe. In the body of the report, of which there are 184 pages, and diagrams besides, the details bear out the ugly summary. If there are any bodily ills or human brutishness or crooked customs or skin games to which the immigrants are not exposed, from their landing at Ellis Island until they either go back home to Europe or get away from the clutches of the harples that beset them here, it would be interesting to have them set forth. The record of the ills under which they suffer, as given in the report, is sickening, and the thought that most of them come from the immigrants' own countrymen or from men who should be their protectors is, in the extreme, discouraging.

The question naturally arises, Why do the immigrants come at all, when their experiences are so outrageously bad as here officially given? Do they know beforehand the risks they run of misfortune in endless forms? Or, bad as conditions are for them here, are they possibly worse off in their own country?

Of coures there are immigrants and immigrants. The attention of the bureau is naturally taken up with the case of the poorest, most ignorant, most helpless. But of these there are great numbers. The moving sentiments of the chief investigator, Frances E. Kellor, with regard to the immigrants are well known. They are humanitarian. We all sympathize with her work. As a fact, on reading her statements one is selzed with the feeling that there is urgent need for her work, and nothing else is to be done but have her go on with it. She is tackling, in a way creditable to her heart, one phase of immigration.

One phase only. There are larger phases. The one having the closest interest to American labor—a matter frequently dealt with in this magazine. We make note of it now merely to denote our position and not to dwell upon it or even to restate it. It is unchanged. But when we conte Organized labor for more than a quarter of a century has persistently sought the passage by Congress of restrictive immigration laws. Some steps in that direction have been taken, but as yet they have been entirely inadequate for the protection desired. Every commission that has been appointed by our Government has recommended that immigration be restricted, and about all, if not all, have recommended the educational test as the most feasible. The provisions of this bill are very moderate, and it seems to me that no patriotic American who understands the need of solving this immigration question can find reasonable grounds for opposing this mild modification of our immigration laws.

It has been argued here by some that we need these poor for-eigners for the purpose of doing our drudgery. In other words, these men seem to favor unlimited immigration, so that the shackles of industrial slavery may be clamped upon the incoming foreigners as fast as they arrive, and this, in my opinion, is far more brutal than the negro-chattel slavery which existed before the Civil War. To their further contention that Americans will not do the work that the foreign pauper labor is employed to do, I say that if a sufficient wage scale were maintained and the men were employed under equitable working conditions, such as an eight-hour day, and so forth, it would not be difficult to find willing American workmen on hand to do the work. And if it were possible to effect a law that would require the payment of a fair minimum wage and an eight-hour day the employers of this country would not desire to employ foreigners in preference to Americans, as is the case to-day with the United States Steel Trust and other large industrial corporations, and evidence of which is found in the following advertisement appearing in the Pittsburgh papers not long ago:

Men wanted; tinners, catchers, and helpers; to work in open shops. Syrians, Poles, and Roumanians preferred. Steady employment and good wages to men willing to work. Fare paid and no fees charged.

In an article in the Federationist for January, 1911, containing the above advertisement, John Mitchell, ex-president of the United Mine Workers of America, says:

United Mine Workers of America, says:

The suggestion that American labor is not wanted is likely to arouse a sentiment of hostility against the foreign workers whose labor is preferred by the companies responsible for advertisements of this character. Nothing but evil can come from discord and racial antagonism. At the same time that the American workman recognizes the necessity of reasonable restriction upon the admission of future immigrants, he realizes that his own welfare depends upon being able to work and to live in harmony and fellowship with those who have been admitted and are now a part of our industrial and social life.

There is perhaps no group in America so free from racial or religious prejudice as the workingmen. It is a matter of indifference to them whether an immigrant comes from Great Britain, Italy, or Russia; whether he be black, white, or yellow; whether he be Christian, Mohammedan, or Jew. The chief consideration is that, wherever he comes from, he shall be endowed with the capacity and imbued with the determination to improve his own status in life, and equally determined to preserve and promote the standard of life of the people among whom he expects to live. The wage earners, as a whole, have no sympathy with that narrow spirit which would make a slogan of the cry, "America for the Americans"; on the contrary, we recognize the immigrant as our fellow worker; we believe that he has within him the elements of good citizenship, and that, given half a chance, he will make a good American; but a million aliens can not be absorbed and converted into Americans each year; neither can profitable employment be found for a million newcomers each year, in addition to the natural increase in our own population. our own population

The great labor leaders of this country, who have fought the battles of labor against the concentrated power of predatory wealth for many, many years, see the need of a law restricting immigration in this country, not alone for the protection of the American workingman but for the protection of the immigrants themselves. When we are prepared to protect these ignorant immigrants against the avarice and greed of the commercial pirates and industrial highbinders that seem to be in control of our industries to-day, and prevent them from being exploited to lower the standard of living and character of the American workingmen, we may eliminate the restriction; until then let us at least have the mild modification for which this bill provides. Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, and hope to see it passed by this House. I represent a district in the city of Baltimore, of which I am justly proud, embracing in its boundaries people of many nationalities, each pursuing his chosen profession or business and with great credit to himself and to the city of his birth or adoption. They have made names for themselves in the business and professional world, they have become eminent in the law, the arts and sciences, in manufacture and commerce, and in carrying to successful fruition the vast enterprises of our Maryland metropolis. The artisans and laborers have performed their duty with equal ability and are to-day building a greater Baltimore, which will be even more beautiful than ever before.

Immigration and immigrants are not new to me. During my boyhood days my father employed many of them-first, the Germans, then the Poles, and after them the Bohemians. know them to be good workmen and honest toilers, and I am familiar with their habits, their troubles, and their enjoyments. Many of them have accumulated wealth; others are still toiling, and quite a number have passed that solemn bourn from which no traveler returns. They make good citizens and they have always had my sympathy and assistance. I am not, therefore, like some Members have said of others on this floor-unfamiliar with the immigration question.

I would not vote to do anything which would prevent any desirable immigrant from coming here who wishes to come here and take part in the further development of our country. I do not believe the Burnett bill will keep from our shores very many aliens who wish to make this their home. The alien is required only to read in his own language, including the Hebrew and Yiddish, some 30 or 40 words, and this, I believe, can be done by almost the entire body of aliens. Besides this, the bill provides:

That any admissible alien or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relatives shall be permitted to land.

This would enable any alien now in this country, or who may hereafter come and be admitted under the provisions of this bill, to send for those of his family whom he has left behind and to bring them in, whether they can read 30 or 40 words or not, because under the bill they would not be required to perform this task. We therefore find that practically any member of a family who can read in his own language a few words can bring in the members of his family who can not do so, and which, I believe, would cover almost any person who desires to be admitted and who is not prohibited under the provisions of the present immigration laws.

The literacy test is not new in this country. ralization law requires that a man must be able to speak the English language, and the very State from which the able and distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Curley] comes requires that a man must be able to sign his name and read the constitution of the State of Massachusetts before he can register and be qualified to vote and take part in the affairs of that State.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MURRAY. I ask the gentleman from Maryland in how many States of this great Union the naturalization law he speaks of is a prerequisite to the right of suffrage?

Mr. LINTHICUM. In nearly all the States. I do not know how many do not require it, but they are very few.

Mr. MURRAY. May I inquire of the gentleman if the reading and writing test is required in the great State of Texas, represented by the gentleman [Mr. Dies] who sits by his side? Mr. LINTHICUM. It is not required in the State of Texas, and it is not required in my State.

Mr. MURRAY. If the gentleman will allow me-Mr. LINTHICUM. I can not yield further, I have only five

As I was saying, Mr. Chairman, the great State of Massachusetts requires a man to be able to sign his own name and read the constitution of that State before he can register and vote. The requirements of the bill before us are certainly not as drastic as these, in that he is required only under this bill to read a few words in his own language. But that is not all. This bill does not keep out or require this literacy test if the alien is fleeing from persecution. In that event he is allowed to come into this country, although he may be absolutely illiterate and unable to read. We in nowise shut our gates to those of other nations who are seeking a place of refuge from persecution in their own land, and were we I should certainly not vote for the bill.

I believe this bill will help us to improve upon the character of our immigration. I do not believe it will keep out any desirable citizens, and I do believe that it will be of great benefit, not only to those native-born Americans of our country but those who make this their home and intend to live with us.

I can not but be surprised at the inconsistency of some Members who have been talking upon this floor for lo these many years about protecting American labor from foreign competition by keeping out goods of foreign make, which they claim are manufactured or made by pauper labor, and yet they would keep down the bars and let illiterates and all others who may desire to come to this country come in without any hindrance except those debarred by our immigration laws, and here, upon our own soil and in our own midst, compete with our American labor, whether native or foreign born. As for myself, I prefer to keep out the class aimed to be excluded by this bill and to spend my time and my efforts in the further protection of those aliens now with us, through granting to them salutary laws and more healthful surroundings, than to permit illiterates from every country of the globe to be dumped upon us, flooding our labor market and depreciating the value of the labor now performed by our citizens, both native and foreign. I would rather have our people happy and prosperous than to see them competing with every class of illiterates which might be brought in by the steamship and railroad corporations who are engaged in promoting immigration to this country, and whose supreme object in bringing them here is the profit they derive from the charge for their transportation.

Furthermore, I do not believe it is in the interest of the illiterate aliens themselves to be encouraged to come to this country by stories of vast wealth and large wages and thereby induced to leave a country where they have lived all their lives in comparative prosperity, happiness, and contentment. We know that many come because they believe that here fabulous fortunes are to be amassed with ease, and when they get here they experience a bitter awakening and find that the work is just as hard, and after the expenses of living have been de-ducted there is but little left toward those savings to which, under false pictures, they looked forward with such happy anticipations.

Mr. BURNETT. I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I offer an amendment to close the debate immediately. I do not see any reason why it should continue for five minutes, if there is to be no more debate than that.

Mr. BURNETT. I accept the amendment.

I think that is better, if we are not going to Mr. SHERLEY.

have any debate.

Mr. MANN. Let the amendment be reported, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes, to which motion the gentleman from Kentucky moves an amendment to close debate immediately.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman knows that it is not debatable. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were 85 ayes and 46 noes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. Burnerr and Mr. Moobe of Pennsylvania.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 78 ayes and 39 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Alabama made a motion to close debate, and the gentleman from Kentucky offered an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama accepted the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama could not accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire that the question be put? Mr. MANN, No; not if it has already been disposed of; but I like to see matters disposed of according to the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 59, after line 22, insert the following:
"Provided, That any allen excluded from admission into the United States under the provisions of this act shall have all the rights of appeal conferred upon aliens by the act approved February 20, 1907, entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sabath].

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost. The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC, 4. That an alien refused admission to the United States under the provisions of this act shall be sent back to the country whence he came in the manner provided by section 19 of "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved February

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do it for the purpose of calling attention to what has been done here this afternoon. I offered an amendment to correct what I believed to be a serious defect in this bill. I called the attention of the distinguished chairman to it, but the amendment was voted down. I merely want to call the attention of the House to the fact that under the phraseology of section 1 not a single Pole can be admitted into the United States, whether he can read and write or not, because the language is that he must speak either the English language or the language of some other country. As we all know, Poland is no country; it is only a historical conception, so that the Polish language is a language without a country, and a man from any one of the three provinces which in the last century have been divided between Russia, Prussia, and Austria who would come to our ports would have to be rejected because he could not read the English language or the language of another ountry.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman's argument in regard to Poland is true, would not the same argument apply to that country in which we are all so much interested— Ireland?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It might-apply to Ireland; I have not investigated the question, but under the phraseology of this bill which you have adopted neither Kosciusko nor Pulaski, the great Revolutionary heroes, to whose memory we have erected monuments in this great Capital, could have been admitted to the United States.

Gentlemen who have spoken here representing districts in Chicago who are in favor of this bill and voted against my amendment I am sure have a large number of Poles in their district, and this matter will surely be brought to their attention when they return home, because under this bill no Pole could be admitted to the United States, and no judge would construe the language differently, in my judgment, from what I construe it, and as every man who reads the language must construe it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, we have come to the close of the consideration of this substitute, and I greatly fear that some members of the committee have been laboring under a misunderstanding as to what the power of this committee is over this bill. The statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] a few moments ago should not go unchallenged at this time. Mr. Chairman, the rule we are operating under in the consideration of this bill is not a gag rule. This committee has it within its power to consider every line and every word of the Senate bill if it so chooses to do it. The consideration that has been given to that substitute bill this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, has not been under this special rule at all. It has been under the general rules of the House. All that the special rule does, all that the rule did, is to give precedence in consideration to this substitute bill offered by the House committee, and that is all. If this committee shall desire to consider the Senate bill, desire to amend it, desire to do anything they choose with it, the way is open for doing so by rejecting the substitute bill, and the Senate bill is then wide open. Furthermore, let me say, if the committee desires to do that thing, they have lost nothing by rejecting the substitute, because every provision in this substitute is found somewhere in this Senate bill; and, Mr. Chairman, if the committee desires, as I believe they will and as I shall vote to do, to adopt this substitute, saying by their votes they do not propose to consider the Senate bill, that is the right of the committee so to do, and it is not a curtailment of the power of the committee in any sense. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before that is voted upon I have an amendment which I desire to offer which is in the nature of a new section.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the paragraph, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, line 1, strike out the word "section" and insert in lieu thereof the words "sections 15 and."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, unless this amendment is adopted there will be no authority of law permitting or authorizing immigrant inspectors to go upon vessels for the purpose of the particular tests provided for in this act, and the master of any vessel could forbid the test being made. Mr. Chairman, I desire by way of extending my argument to send to the Clerk's desk and have read in my time a letter from the Hon. William S. Bennet, formerly a Member of this House and a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and also of the Immigration Commission, that is reported to favor this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BENNET & COOLEY,
ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS AT LAW,
New York, December 16, 1912.

Hon. J. Hampton Moore, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Hon. J. Hampton Moore,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Moore: I was somewhat amused and very much interested last week to be told that some of the New York papers were alluding to the Burnett literacy test as the "Bennet bill." Of course the confusion grows out of the similarity of names; but I find that there are those who actually believe that the Burnett bill is one drawn and approved by me, and that some of those people and other people have the impression that I joined as a member of the Immigration Commission in that commission's approval of a reading and writing test. As a matter of fact, I dissented from that approval. Mr. Burnett on Saturday so stated, but I would be glad if the fact could be brought even more emphatically to the attention of the House, in which there are many still who were my colleagues in one or more Congresses. I find also that there is a widespread belief that the Burnett bill was in form approved by the Immigration Commission. This impression is not well founded. I do not doubt that there are individual members of the commission who would approve the form, but there was never any discussion of the form in the commission. I, of course, want to make it very clear that Mr. Burnett does not claim and never has claimed that the form of his literacy test had the approval of the Immigration Commission.

Inasmuch as there is the impression that in some way the Burnett literacy test is mine, I feel that I ought to point out briefly some reasons why I do not desire to have that belief prevalent. Irrespective of the principle, the bill is distinguished for bad English, and in addition to that is drawn without apparent knowledge of or reference to existing law and conditions, and, worst of all, is unworkable.

As to the question of English, take section 2 on page 59 alone. Why the words "or not" on line 2? On line 3 the draftsman speaks of "uniform slips" when the whole context shows that the slips are to be different; doubtless what the draftsman meant was slips of uniform size, but he has not said it. Take the phrase "each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use printed in plain type in the various languages and dialects of immigrants"; what the draftsman meant evidently was to insert after the word "in," where it occurs the second time, on line 6, the words "some-one of," but he forgot to do it. On line 7 the word "may "is used when "must" is meant. Under the language as it stands there is no penalty if the allen neglects to make the choice so politely given him, if he picks out the slip he is required to read, but as nowhere in the bill is an examination directed, nothing happens unless he picks out the slip. I could multiply instances in this and other sections of the faulty construction and bad English of this test framed on the idea that the people desired in this country are experts in language.

As to collisions with existing laws and conditions I note, among other things, that it applies to the Canal Zone. The immigration law excepts the Canal Zone. It applies to the Philippines and provides for the enforcement of the act by immigrant inspectors; there are no immigrant inspectors in the Philippines. It applies to the ambassadors, ministers, and other officials of foreign Governments, their suites, families, and guests; the immigration law excepts these from all other tests, but if a member of the hone had been applied to the hardy solve and the provides of the hand and made to read her "not less than 30 nor more nation.

These criticisms are not captious; not one of them would have applied to section 38 of the Gardner bill of 1906; that test was equally bad in principle, but its English was good; it did not collide with other provisions of the immigration law, and being made a part of the immigration law it would have been workable. The Burnett bill is much the least desirable in form and draftsmanship of any of the literacy tests which have been considered in the House during the past eight years.

Very truly, yours, WILLIAM S. BENNET During the reading of the foregoing letter the time of Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania expired, and by unainmous consent sufficient time was granted to enable the Clerk to conclude the reading of the letter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, under general leave, I also offer the following protests against the bill:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., December 17, 1912. Hon, J. HAMPTON MOORE.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C .:

Philadelphia Board of Trade appeals by unanimous vote to oppose passage Dillingham-Burnett bill restricting immigration.

WM. M. COATES, President.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 27, 1911.
A remonstrance against further restriction of immigration.

A remonstrance against further restriction of immigration.

In view of a number of propositions now pending in Congress for the further restriction of immigration, the Jewish Community of Philadelphia, a representative organization constituted by delegates from many congregations, educational institutions, charitable associations, benevolent orders, and other societies, begs leave to submit to the Senators from Pennsylvania and the Representatives from the congressional districts of Philadelphia the following considerations:

I. Existing law prohibits the incoming of criminals, paupers, lunatics, persons of immoral life, those affilicted with contagious diseases, and all others who may reasonably be regarded as dangerous to the public welfare or likely to become burdens upon the public purse. These provisions are sufficient for the exclusion of all unfit immigrants, and any further restriction must inevitably result in inhumanity and wrong.

II. Two of the proposed restrictive measures are especially objectionable, namely, the imposition of an educational test and the increase of the head tax.

(a) With regard to the literacy requirement, it is submitted that this is not a fair measure of moral worth, of economic value, of mental capacity, or civic virtue.

Experience proves that moral soundness—simple honesty—is independent of intellectual culture. The vast majority of those ignorant of letters are morally sound, while a minority of the literate are morally defective, despite their education.

(b) With respect to the proposed increase of the head tax, it is submitted that for the special purpose of providing for the cost of administering the immigration law the present head tax of $4$ furnishes a large surplus and is therefore more than enough. As a source of revenue for general purposes it would be essentially unjust, putting an undue burden upon those least able to bear it.

III. Many important economic objections might be urged against these proposed restrictions, but the Jewish Community prefers to base it earth. It is inconceivable that a free and prosperous people whose institutions are founded upon the broadest humanity and the most explicit recognition of the rights of man could wish to close its ports against peaceable, honest, worthy, and industrious men and women seeking for themselves and their children political, religious, and industrial freedom. To turn them back because of defective education in the oppression and misery from which they are escaping, or to diminish by an unnecessary tax the remnant of their possessions, already depleted by official robbery in their native lands, would be for this Nation stultification and shame.

While beyond our concern for the national character and entional honor we have a particular interest in our brethren the Jews fleeing from persecution and massacre in Russia, we do not limit our remonstrance against these cruel and unjust proposals by any consideration of nation or creed.

from persecution strange and unjust proposate strange against these cruel and unjust proposate of nation or creed.

Respectfully submitted by committee representing the Jewish Community.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The sections to which he referred have to do with vessels' manifests. As to the Gardner bill being in better shape than the Burnett bill, it is not unnatural that the gentleman who wrote that letter should think so. He had a large hand in drafting the Gardner bill. As to the Burnett bill, there was complete collaboration between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnert] and myself. Much as I like the former Member from New York, Mr. Bennet, I do not think that any of his criticisms, except one or two minor ones, are very important. To be sure, I myself formerly contended that Canada and Mexico should be exempted from the provisions of the bill; but if I recollect rightly the very people who objected to that exemption are the very ones who now are desirous of amending the bill so as to exempt Canada and Mexico. [Applause,]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of this legislation. My colleague, Mr. Burnerr, the author of the bill, is entitled to the thanks of the whole country. The time has arrived when the American people must pay some attention to the kind of people who come here from foreign countries. We are not opposing the coming of people who are fleeing the persecution of other countries, seeking this land of liberty and opportunity, with the intention of becoming good citizens and of supporting our institutions. This bill does not strike at them, but it strikes at a class of people dangerous to peace and order in the United States. Gentlemen here know, and I know, that under the present immigration law undesirable people are coming into our country, poisoning our civilization and striking at the very vitals of this Republic. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, the time has come when we must guard our liberties and protect our civilization in the United States. [Applause.] Some of the opposition to this bill does not arise from sympathy with the downtrodden, as the term is used.

Mr. Chairman, some of the steamship companies are opposing this bill because they want unrestricted immigration so that this traffic in human beings may continue. They are not thinking of the good of society in the United States. They are not considering the danger to our civilization that will come by an indiscriminate class of foreigners coming into our country. [Applause.] They favor unrestricted immigration because it furnishes to them a lucrative trade. They now send agents abroad, who urge every class and condition of people to come to the United States—no thought of the well-being of the people in America; no thought of the perpetuity of this Republic inspires them when they are seeking to load their ships in foreign lands. [Applause.]

The American people have seen and felt the evils of unrestricted immigration, and they are determined to provide ways and means for safeguarding American ideals and institutions. We must have some standard by which the foreigner seeking our country can be measured. There must be a test of fitness. We must determine who shall or shall not come here and take up his abode in our country. [Applause.] Some gentlemen here are unnecessarily alarmed. We are not trying to keep out the man or woman inspired by the love of liberty and actuated by the desire to better his or her condition and support our institutions, but we are striving to safeguard our institutions, protect our civilization, and to prevent this from becoming the dumping ground for the unfit and criminal hordes of other ountries. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama has given utterance to the keynote of much of the discussion on this bill, which shows how erroneously some gentlemen reason. He states that the object of this bill is to keep out the undesirable immigrants, and his remarks are predicated upon the belief that the mere capacity to read 30 words of the Constitution of the United States in any language is a proper criterion of whether a man will be a One desirable or an undesirable acquisition to this country. of the great minds of England, who has given considerable attention to the effect of culture upon morals in his well-known work on the Study of Sociology, Herbert Spencer, has written as follows upon the question:

as follows upon the question:

Are not fraudulent bankrupts educated people and getters up of bubble companies, and makers of adulterated goods, and users of false trademarks, and retailers who have their light weights, and owners of unseaworthy ships, and those who cheat insurance companies, and those who carry on turf chicancries, and the great majority of gamblers? Or, to take a more extreme form of turpitude, is there not among those who have committed murders by poison within our memories a considerable number of the educated, a number bearing as large a ratio to the educated classes as does the total number to the total population?

This belief of the moralizing effects of intellectural culture, flatly contradicted by the facts, is absurd a priori. What imaginable connection is there between learning that certain clusters of marks on paper stands for certain words and the getting of a higher sense of duty? What possible effect can acquirement of faculty in making written signs or sounds have in strengthening the desire to do right? How does knowledge of the multiplication table or quickness in adding and dividing so increase the sympathles as to restrain the tendency to trespass against fellow creatures? In what way can the attainment of accuracy in spelling and parsing, etc., make the sentiment of justice more powerful than it was? Or why, from stores of geographical knowledge, perseveringly gained, is there likely to come increased regard for truth?

Mr. Chairman, this bill will not accompalish what the sentiment of accuracy in the content of the

Mr. Chairman, this bill will not accomplish what those who advocate it desire. I come from a very cosmopolitan district. Those I represent and I myself favor legislation that will keep out the undesirable elements of other countries that are detrimental to our citizenship, but the mere capacity to read will not do so. The most expert agriculturist, who might be highly desirable to every section of the country, if perchance he can not read will be excluded; experts in mining and other arts, highly desirable to this country, would be excluded.

Mr. Chairman, many men of this House are descendants of a race who when their ancestors came to this country it was a penal offense for Irishmen in Ireland to attend any school, and they were educated in the hedge schools of Ireland by the persecuted priests who were not tolerated in the Kingdom because of their religious beliefs. I regret to find in this House to-day the descendants of such people attempting to exclude from this country honest, desirable, capable men because unable to read. They aspire as earnestly as those who are here for the opportunity of developing and bringing up their children in a country whose institutions appeal to them most forcibly. They leave behind all that is associated with the love of native land and devotion to ancestry and, striking out hopefully and enthusiastically, come here that they may be a part of a government and of a country and of a people which reflects so gloriously and creditably upon the ability of all men when given an opportunity to rise to that high state which God intended they should have on this earth. [Applause.]
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

is recognized to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Word "alien" wherever used in this act shall include foreignborn, unnaturalized seamen. That the term "United States," as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act, shall be construed to mean the United States, including the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii; and if any alien shall attempt to enter the United States from the Canal Zone, the Philippines, Porto Rico, or any other place outside of the United States but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, such alien shall be permitted only on the conditions applicable to aliens entering the United States from a foreign country.

That nothing is this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign governments nor to their suites, families, or guests.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that merely defines the term "alien" in the act, and includes one other thing, namely:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign Governments nor their suites, families, or guests.

Of course, it is not to be presumed that these officials shall not be able to read or write, but under the language of the bill when they enter they shall be subjected to the trial as to whether they can read or not. They shall be handed a slip to see whether they can read. I do not believe the House ought to be inclined to take the position that the ambassador of Great Britain when he enters the port of New York, or Boston or Philadelphia, shall be rquired to show to the immigrant inspector that he is able to read the English language.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.
Mr. MANN. I offer a further amendment as a new section.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read a portion of the amendment, as follows:

SEC.— That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $5 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyances or vehicle. The tax imposed by this section—

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BURNETT. I do not think the amendment is germane to the bill under consideration. It provides for a head tax, as I catch the meaning of it, and I do not think it is germane to the bill. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will complete the reading of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it is necessary to read the amendment through after that point of order has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the rule under which we are operating provides:

The amendment proposed by the House committee shall be first read for amendment and perfected. After same has been so perfected the vote shall be taken upon the question of the adoption of said amendment. If same shall be adopted, then the Senate bill shall not be read, but the committee shall rise and report the measure to the House.

It says that, when it is perfected, the committee shall rise and report the same to the House. Immediately upon the perfected measure being reported to the House the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill, and so forth.

Now, the Chair is called upon to rule as to whether, in the consideration of the proposition pending in the committee, it is in order to offer any amendment which may not be germane to the committee substitute but is germane to the original bill. I did not offer this as an amendment to the committee substi-tute. I offered it as a new section to the bill. The rule provides that the committee amendment shall be perfected. After the same shall have been so perfected a vote shall be taken upon the question of the adoption of said amendment. Is it a gag rule to prevent any other matter being offered as an amendment? If it were a bill pending before the House, it would be in order to offer this amendment.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] a moment ago assured the House that this gave the widest latitude to the House. Here is an amendment, admittedly germane to the bill, admittedly germane to the general proposition of immigration, but which I admit is not germane to the mere literacy test, but which is germane to the matters involved in the bill and germane to the committee amendment, which proposes to strike out all of the Senate bill, and it seems the rule could have no purpose unless the purpose was to prevent the House from having a chance to consider proper provisions relating to immigration and to gag the House. I have heard my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the ex-Speaker of the House, repeatedly state in the House that the majority of the House at any time could do anything it pleased. I wondered when I heard my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] repeat that speech, because many times have I heard him in the House declare that the rules ought to give protection to the minority in the House; ought to give the House an opportunity to vote on questions in which the House is interested. We shall be called upon, presumably, in the end to vote upon a conference report covering this and other matters. Have we taken away from ourselves by a rule the power to express in committee our opinion upon these matters upon which later we will be compelled to vote in the House?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of opinion that this amendment is not germane to the committee amendment. the committee votes down the committee amendment, then this amendment could be made to some portion or some part of the Senate bill. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. That does not require a vote, Mr. Chairman. I beg the Chair's pardon, but that does not require a vote; does it, now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. MANN. I take it that so long as it was read section by section it would follow the ordinary course—that when it is not voted out it stays in.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will read to the gentleman: After same has been so perfected, the vote shall be taken upon the question of the adoption of said amendment. The question is on the adoption of the amendment,

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GOLDFOGLE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. GOLDFOGLE. To strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. But the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an additional amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendment, with a recommendation for its passage.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. I offer an amendment. This is a new section, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to what?

Mr. SABATH. To the bill; a new section. The CHAIRMAN. But the committee has already adopted the committee amendment, and no other amendment is now in order. The motion that the committee rise has been agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hay, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate bill 3175, to regulate the immigratton of aliens to and residence of aliens in the United States, and had directed him to report the same back with the amendment proposed by the Committee on Immigration, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the special rule that the House is operating under, the vote will be taken on the committee amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Under that rule a provision is inserted to the effect that-$\boldsymbol{\Lambda}$ separate vote may be demanded on any amendment or amendments thereto adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The Chair did not put the question whether a separate vote was asked for. There was an amendment or two adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informed the Chair that no amendment was adopted to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I thought I heard the Chair declare that an amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER. No; the thing which the Chair was talking about is really what is the bill. Under that special rule this amendment from the committee is treated and considered as a bill. Mr. MANN. If the Chair will pardon me, I think that the Chair is in error. The rule provides that "a separate vote may be demanded on any amendment or amendments thereto."

The SPEAKER. That is to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. To the committee amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that none was adopted. The Clerk is the source from which the Chair gets official information.

Mr. MANN. If I am mistaken, I beg the Chair's pardon. I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands a division. Those in favor of adopting this committee amendment will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-one gentlemen have risen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty-seven gentlemen have risen in the negative.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 201, nays 62, answered "present" 3, not voting 123, as follows:

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 18, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, authentic copy of the certificate of final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Illinois at the election held therein on November 5, 1912; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

2. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, authentic copy of the certificate of the final ascer-tainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Idaho at the election held therein on November 5, 1912; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

3. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, authentic copy of the certificate of final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President appointed in the State of Alabama at the election held therein on November 5, 1912: to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. CULLOP, from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 26190) to provide for participation by the Government of the United States in the National Conservation Exposition, to be held at Knoxville, Tenn., in the fall of 1913, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1275), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

HENRY E. RHOADES.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back adversely the bill (S. 3027) placing Henry E. Rhoades, assistant engineer, United States Navy, on the retired list with an advanced rank. I ask to have the accompanying letters from the Secretary of the Navy printed in the RECORD, and then the bill may be indefinitely postponed.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, August 4, 1911.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, United States Senate.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: In reply to that portion of the committee's letter of July 15, 1911, requesting the department's opinion on bill (S. 3027) placing Henry E. Rhoades, assistant engineer, United States Navy, on the retired list with an advanced rank, your attention is respectfully invited to the department's letter of May 24, 1911, to the committee, giving its opinion and recommendation on a bill (S. 2028) of May 4, 1911, for the relief of Henry E. Rhoades, a retired officer of the Engineer Corps, United States Navy. For reasons fully set forth therein it is recommended that the present bill (S. 3027) be not given favorable consideration. A copy of the department's letter referred to is herewith inclosed.
Faithfully, yours,

BEEKMAN WINTHROP.

BEERMAN WINTHROP, Acting Secretary of the Navy.

MAY 24, 1911.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

United States Senate.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: Referring to your letter dated May 5, 1911, inclosing a bill (S. 2028) for the relief of Henry E. Rhoades, a retired officer of the Engineer Corps, United States Navy, and requesting the department's opinion thereon, I have the honor to inform you that Mr. Rhoades was appointed an acting third assistant engineer in the Navy February 11, 1865, and was honorably discharged October 3, 1865; the was reappointed in the same grade December 19, 1866. and was mustered out April 22, 1869. Subsequently, on February 25, 1871, he was appointed in the Regular Navy.

After a cruise in the Arctic on the U. S. S. Juniala Mr. Rhoades appeared before a naval retiring board on November 20, 1874, and the medical members thereof found him subject to frequent epileptic attacks, accompanied with neuralgia of the chest and palpitation of the heart, shown to have existed prior to his entry in the Navy, and therefore not originating in the line of duty. The full board found that his incapacity did not originate in the line of duty or from any incident of the service. In pursuance of this finding of the board, it was optional with the President, under the provisions of the act of August 3, 1861 (12 Stat., 291, sec. 23), either to retire Mr. Rhoades on furlough pay.

Under date of January 28, 1893, the then Secretary of the Navy. Mr. Tracy, in reporting to the committee upon a bill (H. R. 980, Flifty-second Congress, first session) authorizing the name of Mr. Rhoades to be placed upon the list of efficers who have been retired on account of incapacity of service origin, as provided in section 1588 of the Revised Statutes, stated that the department perceived no objection to the proposed legislation. At the same time the committee was furnished with a copy of the record of proceedings of the retiring board before which Mr. Rhoades was examined in November, 1874. Subsequently, however, under date of April 21, 1896, Mr. Secretary Herbert, and on April 1, 1897, the beneficiary's retirement, nearly 30 years before. The foregoing recommendation was made on April 1, 1904, and again reiterated February 1, 1906.

It might be stated that on a number of occasions favorable reports were made by committees of Congress on bills for the transfer of Mr. Rhoades from the half-pay to the three-quarters-pay list of retired officers, on the theory, apparently, that the finding of the retiring board that his disability was not of service origin was erroneous; and that when the measure by which he was finally so transferred, viz, H. R. 9297. Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, was under consideration in the House of Representatives a motion to recommit it for an amendment providing that the increased retired pay take effect from the date of the passage of the bill (instead of from the date of the officer's retirement) was defeated by a large majority. (Congressional Record, May 18, 1906, p. 7298.)

That bill became a law on May 26, 1906, and on June 2, 1906, Mr. Rhoades was transferred from the half-pay to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers under the provisions of section 1588 of the Revised Statutes, to take effect from December 30, 1874, the date from which he was originally transferred to the retired list. Under this authority Assistant Engineer Rhoades received the sum of $13,695.72.

After the passage of the act of June 29, 1906, increasing the rank and pay of certain officers "retired on account of wounds or disability incident to the service," etc. (34 Stats., 554), Mr. Rhoades was nominated to and confirmed by the Senate to receive the rank of the next higher grade, viz, that of passed assistant engineer with the rank of lieutenant.

In a decision rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury on Septem-nated to and confirmed by the Senate to receive the rank of the next higher grade, viz, that of passed assistant engineer with the rank of lieutnant.

In a decision rendered by the Comptroller of the Treasury on September 20, 1907 (14 Comp. Dec., 162), in a similar case, that of Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, it was held that upon the passage of a special act of Congress approved June 10, 1902, transferring Lleut. Morse from the 50 to the 75 per cent retired pay list, "such officer thereby became an officer retired on account of disability originating in the line of duty from the date of the passage of said act, and, being otherwise qualified within the act of June 29, 1906, possessed the qualifications which enable the President and Senate, under the act of June 29, 1906, to advance him in rank and pay on the retired list one grade above that actually held by him at the time of retirement, and is entitled to the pay of such higher grade from June 29, 1906."

On March 13, 1909, upon request of this department, the Attorney General rendered an opinion holding that a special act of Congress, approved January 5, 1909, transferring Assistant Engineer Jabez Burchard, United States Navy, from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list of retired officers "to take effect from the date of his retirement," did not operate to change the officer's original cause of retirement, and that Mr. Burchard was not therefore entitled to the rank and pay of the next higher grade under the act of June 29, 1906, he having been retired for disability not incident to the service.

This opision of the Attorney General was applied by the Comptroller of the Treasury to the case of Lieut. Jerome E. Morse, who, because of a special act of Congress transferring him from the half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list, as hereinbefore referred to, had been nominated to and confirmed by the Senate to receive the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, under the act of June 29, 1906, The comptroller reopened and reversed his prior decision, st tion 1588 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to take effect from the date of his retirement," "did not make him an officer of the Navy who had heretofore been 'retired on account of wounds or disabilities incident to the service * * *," the fact being, as the record shows, that, although unadvisedly or erroneously, Mr. Burchard was definitely retired for a physical disability which was not due to an incident of the service." The case of Mr. Rhoades was similar to that of Mr. Burchard.

of Mr. Burchard.

Under the law then and now existing, namely, the act of June 29, 1906, Mr. Rhoades was not entitled to advancement on the retired list to the rank and pay of the next higher grade, i. e., to the rank and pay of a passed assistant engineer on the retired list with the rank of leutenant.

of a passed assistant engineer on the retired list with the rank of lieutenant.

Notwithstanding that Mr. Rhondes does not come within the terms of the existing law upon the subject, as just stated, the bill under consideration proposes not only to give him what the present law itself does not now provide, but also aims to secure for him, though retired for disability not incident to the service, advantages which Congress has not deemed it proper to provide for officers retired for disability which was incident to the service, a bill for the latter during the last session (H. R. 31598, 61st Cong., 3d sess.) having falled of enactment.

Mr. Rhoades has received every proper consideration, both from the department and from Congress, even generous treatment when it is recalled that he was (1) retained on the retired list on furlough pay in 1874, when, in the President's discretion, he might have been wholly retired, i. e., separated completely from the service; and (2) that he was, by special act of Congress of May 18, 1906, transferred from the furlough or half-pay list to the 75 per cent pay list to take effect from the date of his retirement 32 years before, whereby he received nearly $14,000 from the Government and a continuing substantial increase of pay.

pay.

In view of all the foregoing facts and of the additional fact that this measure comes within that class of special legislation the enactment of which is not thought desirable, it is recommended that the committee do not take favorable action upon the bill here under consideration.

Faithfully, yours,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

LANDS OF FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. DIXON. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 5138) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement, and I submit a report (No. 1075) thereon. On account of the somewhat urgent situation I should like to ask immediate consideration. The bill is accompanied by a unanimous report from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr WORKS. Mr. President, I did not rise to object, but I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that there seems to be a mistake in the bill as I heard it read.

Mr. DIXON. This is the original bill. The amendments will now be read.

Mr. WORKS. The bill should read "$1.25 an acre."

Mr. DIXON. The amendments which the committee have reported will now be read.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like some information from the author of the bill. Is it a local measure affecting only the State of Montana or is it general in its scope?

Mr. DIXON. It merely opens the abandoned Fort Assimiboine Military Reservation to settlement under the usual terms.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

whose, proceeded to consider the bill.

of $2.50 per acre," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to immediately cause to be surveyed all of the lands embraced within the limits of the abandoned Fort Assinnibolne Military Reservation, in the State of Montana.

SEC. 2. That before said lands are opened to entry the Secretary of the Interior shall have said lands classified by an inspector or special agent of the Department of the Interior into two classes—first, agricultural lands; second, timber lands—and in making such classification all lands susceptible of cultivation that do not contain in excess of 75,000 feet of merchantable timber to the 40-acre tract shall be classified as agricultural lands, and all lands containing in excess of 75,000 feet of merchantable timber to the 40-acre tract shall be classified as timber lands.

SEC. 3. That when so classified, all of said lands classed as agricultural land shall be opened to settlement and entry under the homestead laws of the United States: Provided, however, That the enlarged homestead act, approved February 19, 1909, shall not apply until six months after said land has been opened to settlement and entry as aforesaid.

homestead act, approved February 19, 1909, shall not apply until six months after said land has been opened to settlement and entry as aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That entrymen upon said lands shall, in addition to the regular land-office fees, pay the sum of $1.25 per acre for said land, such payments to be made as follows: Twenty-five cents per acre at the time of making entry and 25 cents per acre each and every year thereafter until the full sum of $1.25 per acre each and every year thereafter until the full sum of $1.25 per acre shall have been paid. In case any entryman falls to make annual payments, or any of them when due, all right in and to the lands covered by his entry shall cease; and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the land shall be again subject to entry under the provisions of the homestead law at the fixed price thereof: Provided, however, That the commutation provision of the general homestead law shall be applicable to all persons making homestead entry on said land under the provisions of this act, save and excepting entries made hereunder in accordance with the provisions of the enlarged homestead act, approved February 19, 1909, which shall not be subject to commutation.

SEC. 5. That this act shall not apply to an area of 640 acres embracing the Government buildings at Fort Assinniboine.

SEC. 6. That if, within five years from the date of the approval of this act, the State of Montana shall, by act of its legislative assembly, agree to establish and maintain any agricultural, manual-training, or other educational or public institution at the present site of Fort Assinniboine, then, in that event, the President of the United States is authorized and directed to transfer, grant, and set over its right, title, and interest of, in, and to the said 640 acres of land hereby reserved and embracing the buildings at Fort Assinniboine to the State of Montana, upon the payment by the State of Montana of the sum of $2.50 per acre.

SEC. 7. That sections 16 and 36

LANDS RESERVED FOR RESERVOIR PURPOSES.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (8. 7448) restoring to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for reservoir purposes at the headwaters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and I submit a report (No. 1076) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, on page 2, line 11, after the word "law," before the period, to insert a comma and the following words: "for the period of 90 days following the time fixed hereunder for the restoration of the lands," so as to make the bill read:

for the restoration of the lands," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby restored to the public domain, subject to the easement provided for in section 2 hereof, any and all lands hitherto reserved by Executive order in connection with the construction, maintenance, and operation of reservoirs at the headwaters of the Mississippi River and its tributaries the restoration of which the Secretary of War has recommended or may hereafter recommend to the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 2. That the lands hereby restored shall forever be and remain subject to the right of the United States to overflow the same or any part thereof by such reservoirs as now exist or may hereafter be constructed upon the headwaters of the Mississippi River, and all patents issued for the lands hereby restored shall expressly reserve to the United States such right of overflow.

Sec. 3. That the time when such restoration shall take effect as to any of such lands shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; and in all cases where actual settlement has been made on any of said lands prior to January 1, 1912, and improvements made the said settlers shall have a preferred and prior right to enter and file on said lands under the homestead law for the period of 90 days following the time fixed hereunder for the restoration of the lands.

Sec. 4. That no rights of any kind, except as specified in the foregoing section, shall attach by reason of settlement or squatting upon any of the lands hereby restored to entry before the hour on which such lands shall be subject to homestead entry at the several land offices, and until said lands are opened for settlement no person shall enter upon and occupy the same except in the cases mentioned in the foregoing section, and any person violating this provision shall never be permitted to enter any of said lands or acquire any title thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CULLOM:

A bill (S. 7798) granting an increase of pension to Alfred J. Adair (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7799) granting a pension to Eliza Fosha (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MASSEY:

A bill (S. 7800) for the relief of Fred E. Jackson (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SANDERS:

A bill (S. 7801) for the relief of George T. Larkin; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 7802) to amend section 103 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; to the Committee on the Judiciary

sions. By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 7821) to provide for a nominating election for postmasters; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 7822) granting an increase of pension to Lillie D. Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions, By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 7823) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Workman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHILTON (for Mr. WATSON):

A bill (S. 7824) granting an increase of pension to Oakaley Randall (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 7825) granting a pension to William R. Swearingen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $20,000 for suport and civilization of the Indians at the Blackfeet Agency, Mont., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 to encourage industry among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and others crops, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $400,000 for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the post-office building under present limit at Denver, Colo., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF JOHN GLANZMAN AND OTHERS FOR EXTRA TIME ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I desire to have printed as a public document a statement or memorandum, with accompanying decu-ments and quotations, regarding certain claims for extra time of certain employees on public buildings, including John Glanzman, of Nevada, an amendment covering which claims was offered by me on the 17th day of December, 1912, to the omnibus bill, H. R. 19115, reported by the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nevada that the papers he sends to the desk be printed as a public document? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further concurrent or other resolutions the morning business is closed.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to make a motion to-day for an executive session, but I understand that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon] is almost through with his speech, and I yield to him for that purpose. I observe that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Smith] has also given notice that he desires to speak this morning, and I will give way to him, too,

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—
Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the morning business closed?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is The Senator will be recognized for morning business.

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; I move to take up House bill 19115, the omnibus claims bill, so that it may maintain its place, and then I will yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Da-kota moves that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts. Without objection, it is agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will yield to the Senator from Iowa to conclude his remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to occupy the attention of the Senate briefly this morning under the notice I have given, for the purpose of calling to the attention of the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Iowa. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

For a speech or argument?

Mr. KENYON. For a speech Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator from Georgia I desire to finish the remarks I was making at the close of the morning hour yesterday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I would be glad to yield to the Senator from Iowa, but give notice that after he concludes I will follow him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill called up by the Senator from Iowa.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (S. 4043) to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, on yesterday, to complete my argument by the close of the morning hour, I proceeded perhaps a little more rapidly than I otherwise would have done, but I think I made my position reasonably clear. I wish to devote just a few moments in closing to section 2 of this act, which is the committee amendment.

Section 2 of this act is the committee amendment. It is identical with the Wilson law, except in the present bill are found the words "and before delivery to the consignee." Otherwise there is no difference. This bill clearly states, by section 2, what was in fact the object and purpose of the framers of the Wilson bill. In the Rahrer case the court sustained the Wilson Act, rather destroying its effect, however, in the Rhodes case, There can be no reasonable doubt, from the reading of the interesting debates, as to the purpose in mind of Congress with refence to the Wilson Act. Senator Wilson, the author thereof,

It is a bill to grant to the States what may be called a local option, to allow them to do as they please in regard to the liquor question.

They could have prohibition, high license, local option, or free liquor, as they please. It was the intention that each State should be free to determine its own policy in regard to the liquor traffic. If the State wanted prohibition, that was its business; if it wanted license, that was its business; if it wanted free liquor, that was its business. Senator Vest argued that the bill was a delegation of the power to the States to regulate interstate commerce, and asked this significant ques-

Can the Congress of the United States delegate a constitutional power exclusively vested in it to any of the States?

The distinguished Senator Hoar said:

Mr. President if this bill be not within the constitutional power of Congress, I think we must all agree that the condition of the American people in regard to this particular subject is more miserable than that of any other civilized nation on the face of the earth. I suppose there does not exist a community where men live together under law where the danger of permitting the unrestricted sale of intoxicating liquor is not recognized and guarded against by public authority.

Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, who had as profound regard for the Constitution as any other man, in discussing the bill, said .

Now, where is the line? The line is, I think, a line which the Supreme Court of the United States appears to have gone over—that when your act of transportation, your act of commerce among the States or from foreign nations has become complete and the word "among" no longer applies, and the commodity is in the State where its transportation is ended, and it is in the hands of its owner there, whether that owner be a citizen of one State or another makes no difference, it is then just like the commodity of the same nature, all the laws being equal, in the hands of the citizen of the State who made it there himself, the subject of State law; and that is what the Supreme Court of the United States within the next 20 years will come to. * *

This has proved prophetic, indeed, as the Supreme Court came to that proposition in a later case. Senator Edmunds continued: The objection that has been made to this bill is that we are delegating

That is an objection that has been raised as to the pending

That is an objection that has been raised as to the pending bill—

I deny the proposition. I say that by this bill, although its mere terminology is not what I would have adopted, but in substance it comes to the same thing, Congress is undertaking to regulate the traffic among the States of things by saying, "We employ the agency of the people through its legislative authority, the State of Missouri, for instance, to say whether it is wise to admit this thing in the community that is there from the State of Illinois or not." We say to the State of Vermont, "We employ you as the agent of Congress in the regulation of this traffic to determine whether the condition of things as to the state of public morals there will warrant that thing."

Congress, therefore, instead of delegating a power is exerting the same power in respect of internal commerce that it has always exerted in respect of external commerce, to authorize somebody to determine how and under what conditions this commerce, if you call it that, shall be carried on. Giving no preference to one State over another, not as a remitted or delegated authority but as the exertion of the power of Congress to regulate this traffic among the States, on the theory of the Supreme Court, it says to one body of people, "You may carry it into another if our agents there think it right to exclude it." So in whatever aspect you look at it, if the power to provide for the safety and regulate the transactions among men in the several States is in the States, as I think it is, it can not be touched at all; but on the strength of these decisions, and assuming it to be in Congress, we are exerting the very power which gentlemen say belongs to Congress, we are exerting the very power which gentlemen say belongs to Congress, we are exerting the very power which gentlemen say belongs to Congress, we are exerting the very power which gentlemen say belongs to Congress, we are exerting the very power which gentlemen say belongs to Congress, we are exerting the very power which ge

Senator Faulkner, of West Virginia, to whom I referred yesterday, offered the following amendment, showing that the debate ranged around the very question that was afterwards determined in the Rhodes case:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That when fermented, distilled, or intoxicating liquids or liquors are transported or conveyed by a common carrier as an article of commerce from a State or Territory into another State or Territory, such fermented, distilled, or intoxicating liquids or liquors so transported or conveyed shall be considered as incorporated as a part of the common mass of property within such State or Territory and subject to its regulation, control, or taxation in the exercise of its police powers on delivery of the original package by the common carrier to the owner or consignee."

This amendment of Senator Faulkner's embodied exactly what the Supreme Court subsequently held in the Rhodes case and this amendment was voted down by the Senate, showing that the construction subsequently put upon the Wilson Act in the Rhodes case was exactly what the Senate did not intend. It is claimed by opponents of this measure that section 2 is a delegation of power to the States to regulate interstate commerce; that the section recognizes transportation into the State and yet permits the police power to operate upon the commodities while in transportation; that interstate commerce in its fundamental aspect continues until delivery to the consignee; and that Congress can not change the actual fundamental of interstate commerce. These objection are answered to some extent by the Rahrer case in the language therein used. It must be remembered, as has heretofore been argued, that prior to Leisy against Hardin the sale was an essential ingredient of interstate commerce just as much as the transportation, and that same doctrine as to practically everything but intoxicating liquors has been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States within the last few years. As late as the 225th United States, in the case of Savage against Jones, it was said:

The protection accorded to this commerce (interstate) extended to the sale by the receiver of the goods in the original package.

This had been the unbroken precedent of the courts, and if the court could cut off the sale as a part of commerce, why can Congress not further restrict and say that the article shall cease to be a matter of commerce 50 miles from destination, 10 miles from destination, or 5 miles within the State?

I do not say that it can; but in the Rahrer case the court used language which would indicate that that might be done.

Senator Nelson, of Minnesota, in his report some years ago to Congress on this question, stated that matter from that standpoint so clearly that I use his language. He said:

Under the Wilson law the Federal Government relinquished a portion of its control over interstate commerce, and under the proposed legislation it proposes to relinquish an additional portion. In neither case is there a delegation to the State; in both cases it amounts merely to a declaration on the part of Congress that interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors shall only be free to the extent that it does not interfere with or embarrass the police power of the State.

It is pertinent to call attention to a decision in the case of In re Vliet (43 Fed. Rep., 763), which follows the case of In re Rahrer (140 U. S., 561-564):

It is competent for Congress, under the grant of power to regulate commerce among the States, to determine when a subject of that commerce shall become amenable to the law of the State in which the transit ends.

In the Rahrer case it will be remembered the court said:

No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain designated subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within its competency to

If the power is, in fact, in Congress to divest articles of their interstate-commerce character at any period, at any place, or at any time, then why can not Congress, as is done in section 2, provide that the police power shall apply before delivery to the consignee, or, in other words, that the interstate-commerce character shall cease before delivery to the consignee?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me a single question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Interstate transportation, as I understand, begins when the article is delivered by the consignor in the State from which it is shipped and ends, and only ends, when it is delivered to the consignee in the State to which it is shipped. Now, if Congress may divest an article of its inter-state character and surrender to the State the power to regulate it and deal with it as it pleases immediately after it has crossed the line of the State in which it is shipped, may it not, by the same reasoning, surrender the power to the State from which the article is shipped until the time it reaches the State line? If that be true, would it not result in Congress surrendering to the two States the whole power of interstate commerce?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. KENYON.

Very gladly.
The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] Mr. NELSON. fails to state the entire proposition in its integrity. preme Court, in the case of Leisy against Hardin, held that interstate commerce extended until the consignee had disposed of the goods in the original package; and in the case of Rahrer, under the Wilson law, the Supreme Court held that Congress had relinquished its power over a part of interstate commerce, to wit, the sale of the unbroken package.

In that case the Supreme Court held that it was not a delegation of legislative authority, but that under the terms of the Wilson law the goods had not arrived within the State until delivery to the consignee. In the case of Leisy against Hardin the Supreme Court decided that the sale by the consignee in the unbroken package to the retail trade was a part of interstate commerce, and just as much subject to the protection of Congress as the transit by rail to the point of destination. In that case Congress chopped off a part of interstate commerce; it chopped off the sale in the unbroken package; and in section 2 of this bill it is simply proposed to go a step further. So that the question propounded by the Senator from Utah did not cover the whole case; it did not cover one part of interstate commerce that was eliminated by the Wilson law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let it cover that element, then, and then does the Senator from Minnesota say that Congress has the power to surrender to the State in which the shipment originates the power to regulate it until it reaches the State line?

Mr. NELSON. There was a surrender in that case of a part of interstate commerce, and there is no reason why Congress can not surrender another portion. The question of the delegation of legislative authority was discussed by the court in the Rehrer case, and the court held that there was no delegation of legislative authority.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then Congress may surrender to both States the entire power of interstate transportation?
Mr. NELSON. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. NELSON. There is no doubt about that.
Mr. KENYON, Mr. President, I want to get into this joint discussion. My answer to that is perhaps not as good as that of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson]. There can be an interstate shipment that is not protected by the interstate commerce clause, such as putrid meats. There is no delegation of power any more than the bankruptcy law results in a delegation of power, to which I will refer in a moment.

If the Supreme Court should take a different view of the proposition, yet it could sustain section 2, and I assume it would try to save any constitutional infirmity by holding that the fundamental of commerce is the actual physical transportation, and that from the point of destination to the hands of the consignee was but a mere incident of commerce. If they could hold as contrary to the unbroken line of decisions that a sale was a mere incident of commerce, then they certainly could hold that when the actual physical transportation ended, the delivery to the consignee was a mere incident of commerce. If section 2 did, in fact, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. Suther-LAND] seems to assume, delegate to the States the power to regulate interstate commerce, I do not believe anyone would claim that it could be constitutional, although some of the language in the case of Leisy against Hardin, as the Senator from Minnnesota has suggested, would seem to indicate that the States might act as agents of the Government in the regulation of commerce.

The language used there, as he suggests, is that the States can not exercise that power without the assent of Congress-

And further-to concede to a State power to exclude, directly or indirectly, articles so constituted without congressional permission is, etc. * * *

Without criticizing in any way the decision in Leisy against Hardin, it has always seemed to me that the minority opinion was the better law. I do not think it can be successfully claimed that this statute is a delegation of power. It is a mere rule prescribed by Congress, removing the impediment to the exercise of certain police powers by providing that intoxicating liquors to be used in violation of law are a pollution of interstate com-merce and will not be permitted. Congress has passed other acts analogous to this, for which some of the best constitutional lawyers in this branch of Congress as well as in the other voted—for instance, the Lacey Act, providing that dead bodies of foreign game or the dead bodies of any wild game transported into any State or Territory or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, should upon arrival in such State be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police power. I do not find that this act has received consideration by the Supreme Court, but the Federal court had passed upon and upheld it in One hundred and eighty-first Federal, page 87; and the court of appeals of New York, with reference to said act and the Federal enactment in The People of the State of New York v. Hill (184 N. Y., 126), said, among other things:

That Congress can authorize an exercise of the police power by a State which without such authority would be an unconstitutional interference with commerce has been expressly decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the matter of Rahrer, 545.

Further, the court says:

The object of the legislation, reference to the Lacey Act, was to enable the States by their local law to exercise a power over the subject of the preservation of game and song birds, which without that legislation they could not exert.

Further:

By the Lacey Act Congress determined to aid the States in the enforcement of their game laws, but did not deem it wise to enact a game law of its own, and this for the very obvious reason that the game laws of the different States vary greatly, a variation justified in no small degree by the varying climatic conditions,"

Likewisa reference might be made to the practice in the Federal courts conforming under statute to the practice of the various States; likewise bankruptcy proceedings and exemptions under the bankruptcy law.

In the case of Hanover National Bank v. Moyees (22 Sup. Ct. Rept., 857), the court had the very question as to the recognition of the local law in the matter of exemptions, dower, priority of payments, and the like; whether it rendered the bankruptcy act in question void as an attempt by Congress unlawfully to delegate its legislative power.

The provision as to exemptions, for instance, is that they shall be controlled by the existing State law at the time of the institution of the proceedings. That would obviously be an adoption of State laws yet unenacted.

Nor can we perceive

Says the court-in the recognition of the local law in the matter of exemptions, dower, priority of payments, and the like, any attempt by Congress to unlawfully delegate its legislative power. (Re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545; 35 L. Ed., 572, 576; 11 S. C., 865.)

The real difficulty with section 2 is this: The section recognizes the transportation of liquors into the State and then permits the operations of the police power that might stop the liquor at the State line, thus keeping it out of interstate commerce. The first section takes certain liquor out of commerce and the second section seems to recognize it as being in. There is some incongruity in this. That is the proposition on which I have had great difficulty in harmonizing my views.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator agrees with me that the only way we can sustain the constitutionality of section 2 is on the assumption that Congress has divested the article of its interstate character the moment that it crosses the line. Do I correctly understand that to be the Senator's position?

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that a strong argument can be made under the Rahrer case, and in the language of the court in the Leisy case, that the interstate feature may be removed some time in the journey.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct.

Mr. KENYON. I do not myself so argue.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is correct; but it must be in the act itself which divests it of its interstate character.

Mr. KENYON. That is done by section 1.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no doubt of the authority of Congress to divest it of its interstate character.

Mr. KENYON. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. McCUMBER. But as section 2 now appears is it not open to the possibility, at least, of a construction that it is not a delegation of authority and that there is no attempt to really divest it of its interstate character; and could we not cure that by a simple amendment, such as was suggested by Senator Edmunds in the argument which you have just read, by a clear and definite declaration that it shall cease to be an object of interstate commerce the moment it crosses the State line? With that declaration, I believe that the constitutionality of it may properly be sustained.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? Mr. KENYON. I will be very glad to yield.

Mr. KENYON. I will be very glad to yield.
Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from North Dakota to what the Supreme Court stated in the The language is significant and right to the point. Rahrer case. Here is what the court said, speaking about the Wilson law:

Here is what the court said, speaking about the Wilson law:

The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraint. Therefore it has been determined that the failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject shall be free from restrictions or impositions upon it by the several States.

* * Congress now has spoken and declared that imported liquors or liquids shall, upon arrival within a State, fall within the category of domestic articles of a similar nature. Is the law open to constitutional objection? * * No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain designated subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within its competency to do so. * * We recall no decision giving color to the idea that when Congress acted its action would be less potent than when it kept silent. The framers of the Constitution never intended that the legislative power of the Nation should find itself incapable of disposing of a subject matter specifically committed to its charge. * * Congress did not use terms of permission to the State laws in respect to imported packages in their original condition, created by the absence of a specific utterance on its part. It imparted no power to the State not then possessed, but allowed imported property to fall at once upon arrival within the local jurisdiction.

In other words, the court could see no reason why Congress could not by its legislation divest an article of that kind of its interstate commerce privilege at an earlier time than it otherwise would lose that character.

Now, if in that case Congress could divest it of the right of sale in the unbroken package, why can it not go a little further and say that the article shall be subject to the laws of the State before it comes into the hands of the consignee?

Mr. KENYON. Would it have become interstate commerce if it never got over the boundary line of the State? That is the proposition that occurs to me.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me further?

Mr. KENYON. I do. Mr. McCUMBER. The opinion read by the Senator agrees exactly with my proposition, that it may be divested, but that the law itself should show the congressional intent that it should be divested of its commercial character the moment it crosses the line. I am not arguing against the authority of Congress to divest it of its commercial character, but I insist that there should be such an amendment, or the language should be clear that the purpose is to divest it of its commercial character the moment that it crosses the line, and not leave it open to the implication that we are allowing it to proceed further as an article of interstate commerce, and yet be subject to the authority of the State.

I think there is no disagreement between the opinion the Senator has just read and the suggestion I make.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from North Dakota will agree with me, will he not, that the Supreme Court, of course, would try to save any constitutional infirmity?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but I think the act should be made wholly clear by a little statement that the article shall be divested of its commercial character the moment it arrives within the State. That would make it so clear there could be no question.

Mr. KENYON. What would be the need of that if the first section, which divests it of its interstate character, became a law?

Mr. McCUMBER. The only difference, as I understand, is that those who favor this section 2 desire to keep the article out of the State entirely or make it subject to the laws of the State the moment it gets into the State without the necessity of having to prove an intent, and if that can be done it is better than the first section.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have felt that this section could be sustained by the Supreme Court on the theory I have advanced, of holding the delivery at the end of the actual physical transportation, from there to the consignee, as an incident of commerce. But outside of this troublesome question, and one on which I confess I have no abiding legal conviction, it seems to me very clear that the power is in Congress to absolutely prohibit, as has been argued, the transportation of intoxicating liquors in commerce. In other words, to take such liquors out of interstate commerce. This full plenary power existing, it is within its power, as a part thereof, to make any regulation it may desire with reference to such intoxicating liquor, and hence it has the right to prohibit, as is done in this measure, the transportation of liquors intended by the parties interested therein to be used in violation of the law of a State.

Mr. President, the whole question was epitomized in just a few words which I want to read in closing from the dissenting opinion of Justice Harlan, in the Bowman case. I think no man has ever occupied a position on our Supreme bench or on any bench in any government in the world who in all his utterances has rung out so true for the right thing and for the human side of legislation and of law as did that great-bodied, great-hearted, great-brained Kentuckian.

Twenty-five years ago in the Knight case he painted, in a dissenting opinion, an accurate picture of the condition of this country if the majority opinion of that court as to trusts and combinations was to prevail. And looking over the condition in this country to-day and reading the views of Justice Harlan in that dissent, it would seem as if he was endowed with almost prophetic vision. His voice rang out again in the Northern Securities case, and in his dissenting opinion in the Standard Oil and the Tobacco Trust cases. He believed that the conservation of human rights was as much the concern of legislation and of the courts as the conservation of property rights, and he said, with reference to this very question, and it ought to be final, in his dissenting opinion in the Bowman case:

If, consistently with the Constitution of the United States, a State can protect her sound cattle by prohibiting altogether the introduction within her limits of diseased cattle, she ought not to be deemed disloyal to that Constitution when she seeks by similar legislation to protect her people and their homes against the introduction of articles which are, in good faith and not unreasonably, regarded by her citizens as "laden with infection" more dangerous to the public than diseased cattle, or than rags containing the germs of disease.

And he further said:

Does the mere grant of the power to regulate commerce among the States invest individuals of one State with the right, even without the express sanction of congressional legislation, to introduce among the people of another State articles which by statute they have declared to be deleterious to their health and dangerous to their safety? In our opinion, these questions should be answered in the negative.

Then, Mr. President, in one sentence he states this proposition that this bill seeks to reach:

It is inconceivable that the well-being of any State is at the mercy of the liquor manufacturers of other States.

That is the whole problem in this bill. That is the problem which this Congress is asked to meet, and in my humble judgment this measure will help to meet it.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire very briefly to bring to the attention of the Senate the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and acts supplementary thereto.

Fifty years ago the Morrill Act was passed. Under it a landgrant college was established in each State of the Union. Twenty-five years ago the Hatch Act was passed. Under it an experiment station was established in each State of the Union.

In most of the States these two institutions work in close association. They have conducted investigations and made tests bearing upon many important questions connected with the farm, and their investigations and tests have been especially with reference to conditions in their respective States. They have studied plants and determined with accuracy the foods upon which they live and mature crops. They have analyzed different classes of soil in their respective States to determine the plant food contained, and have learned how to make it valuable. They have ascertained defects of soils and how to remove They have worked out improvements in seeds, and have found the way to resist plant diseases. They have tested stock, cattle and hog foods and diseases. They have found what foods will bring the best results, and have advanced in the treatment of diseases.

The National Government has spent on the agricultural colleges and experiment stations, in round figures, $70,000,000. It spends now upon them nearly $4,000,000 annually. From State appropriations and other sources they receive even a larger sum, but most of this last-named amount is required for new buildings and equipment.

The Government appropriates $15,000,000 a year for carrying on the exclusively agricultural work of the Department of Agriculture. Much the larger portion of this amount is spent in investigation and experimentation. Information of great value to the rural interests of the country is secured, but an apparently small sum is devoted to showing those at work upon the farms how to apply this information. There are students at these colleges who are obtaining much aid from the instruction which they receive, but there is no sufficient provision to carry to the farmers at their homes the valuable information which has been and will be obtained by the work of the colleges and experiment stations.

Dr. True, Director of the Office of Experiment Stations, is authority for the statement that for several years the officers of the colleges and experiment stations have been pressed with the demand to carry the result of their research to the home of the farmers. A number of the colleges have secured small amounts to do this work in a partial way, but, he declares, "their work was limited by lack of sufficient funds." It is of vital importance to carry promptly to the farmers the knowledge acquired at these institutions.

A number of bills have been introduced in Congress in recent years seeking to meet this pressing want of the agricultural interests. Last fall a bill was perfected by the executive committee of the colleges and experiment stations, by officers of the Agricultural Department aided by officers of the National Soil Fertility League and Congressman Lever and myself. I introduced the bill in the Senate, and he introduced it in the

The bill under consideration this morning is substantially the bill perfected, as I have just stated, the only changes of importance being two amendments, one which provides that this work from the colleges shall not interfere with the demonstration work now being done by the Department of Agriculture, and, further, that 75 per cent of the money appropriated shall be used in actual demonstration work.

The bill under consideration provides for the establishment and maintenance in each of the land-grant colleges of agriculture of an extension department to give instruction in agriculture and home economics to the farmers at their homes. This instruction is to be given by demonstration work on their own land in the local farm communities. It provides for a fixed appropriation from the Treasury of $10,000 annually, unconditionally, to each State. It provides for an appropriation beginning with $300,000 a year, July 1, 1913, to be prorated among the States on a basis of rural population. This appropriation is to be increased each year $300,000 until the maximum of $3,000,000 is reached in 1923. No State is to receive a pro rata of this sum unless it provides an equal amount for the same purpose. The money is to be expended by the State colleges of agriculture through their extension departments in each State. Seventy-five per cent of the money must be used in actual field demonstration, 5 per cent may be used in printing and publications, and the remaining 20 per cent for instructions in household economics or for further field demon-

The bill provides that any Federal money lost or misused must be made good by the State, and it prohibits the use of the money for purposes except those specified. It provides for reports from the colleges to the Secretary of Agriculture, and through the Secretary of Agriculture to Congress.

According to the plans of the bill, the representatives of the colleges in the various States will enlist farmers, who, under the direction of the representative of the agricultural college, will test the value on their own land of the information brought by the representative of the college. The farmer will be invited to plant under the direction of the representative of the college. The character of the soil will be tested, the nature of the fertilizer to be used explained, the selection of seed advised, and the time of planting and manner of cultivation suggested, and demonstrations will be made which will teach and prove the value of the knowledge acquired at the colleges and experiment stations. In another place the representative of the college will teach, and by experimentation demonstrate, the best manper of caring for fruit trees. In another place the best system for feeding cattle and stock, and dairying and butter making may be the subject of the demonstration. Demonstration will also be made in home economics and labor-saving machines.

The colleges of agriculture and experiment stations in each State have been devoted to a study of the peculiar conditions in the localities of their States and will, through their representative, carry to the farmer in his home the accurate information which experimentation has demonstrated, and in turn give practical demonstrations in the locality before the farmer and his neighbors of the value of the information acquired and how to use it.

This class of work will be supplemented by printed discussions of the best mode of farming, on hygiene, and on household economics, and the means available will be used to give those on the farm all that research can develop which will be of service to them.

The value to the agriculture of the country of such work is not a matter of experiment. It has been tried and proved in our own country to a limited extent. To a far greater extent it has been tried and proved in other countries. In many parts of Europe the representatives of the colleges and experiment stations are constantly engaged in the field among the farmers showing the grown farmers what has been learned at the colleges and experiment stations. I will take Belgium as an illustration. For 20 years this course has been pursued there. Information gathered at the Department of Agriculture shows the fact that as a result of this work in Belgium the production per acre in 20 years' time has increased 30 per cent and the cost of production has been decreased.

Let us think what this would mean for our country. annual value of our agricultural products is, in round figures. $9,000,000,000. If the increase as the result of this work were only 20 per cent, we would have an increased value of $1,800,000,000, or a sufficient sum to meet the proposed appropriation for 600 years.

The colleges of agriculture and experiment stations sent their representative to appear before the congressional committee to tell us that they were ready for the work, could do the work. and how valuable it would prove.

This measure has been indersed by the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, by the can Agricultural Coneges and Experiment Stations, by the International Dry Farming Congress, by the New England Conference on Rural Progress, by the Tri-State Grain Growers' Convention, comprising Minnesota and the two Dakotas; by the State Grange, the State Federation of Farmers' Clubs, and the State Horticultural Society, of Michigan; by the Farmers' Union; by the Third Wisconsin Country Life Conference; and by the Eastern Fruit Growers' Association, and by the National

It received the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, who, referring to this bill, said:

Unquestionably such a plan, if properly carried out, would result in great good and would do much toward making useful and valuable the rapidly growing store of knowledge developed along agricultural lines.

The farm lands of our States are occupied by over 49,000,000 men, women, and children. A large number of them struggle to earn a livelihood and can not afford to experiment for the purpose of learning things that are new. If we will only carry to them those truths which have been demonstrated in the colleges of agriculture and experiment stations, they can be shown how to double the yield of their lands and at the same time lessen the cost of production.

I believe that the greatest power and chief hope of this country are found in our farm population. We have made the investment and prepared for the work. Shall we carry the results of the investment to the people who need it?

I am sure that no piece of legislation has been before Congress in years which will bring larger results for the amount

There are measures we may support because we believe they are right, but we may know that this is right. There are measures ures we may support because we believe that they will do good, but we may know that this will do good. Most measures have possible harm connected with them. This has no possible harm.

I urge the speedy adoption of this measure, feeling sure that not alone the tiller of the soil but the people of our entire country will feel the beneficient effects of the operation of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Before the Senator from Georgia takes his seat, I will ask, for information, if the bill provides that on the gift by the Federal Government of $10,000 to a State the State must also give $10,000 in order to reap the benefit of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. I explained at the outset that the bill gives $10,000 unconditionally to each State. The further appropriations are conditioned upon like appropriations from the States, but the $10,000 appropriation is to go to each of the States unconditionally.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to suggest that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The roll will be called. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names: Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Dil-LINGHAM] is detained on account of illness.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Fall] is in the performance of special service, for which he was designated by the Senate, and he is obliged to be absent from the sessions. I desire the RECORD to show that his absence is due entirely to official business outside the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Illinois, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. REED. Let us have the yeas and nays. Mr. CULBERSON. Have the yeas and nays been ordered? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is there a second to the demand?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CRANE (when his name was called). The Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER], with whom I am paired, is absent. In his absence, I refrain from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger, when his name was called). The present occupant of the chair is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Davis]. He transfers that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. Gamele], and will vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY1. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Jackson] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MASSEY (when his name was called). with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson]. In his absence I refrain from voting. My vote would be in the affirmative if the Senator from Virginia were present.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). eral pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. As he is absent from the Senate, I will withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons], with whom I have a general pair, is not in the Chamber. therefore feel compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams], with whom I am paired, has not voted. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

my vote.

Mr. McLEAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Myers], with whom I am paired, is not in the Chamber. When I voted I thought he was present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

OLIVER (after having voted in the affirmative). notice that the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. in company with most of the Senators on the other side, is out of the Chamber, and having a general pair with him, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I think all those Senators were here when the roll call began. I think they were in the Chamber and that they are probably now in the cloak room. I do not

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Poin-DEXTER] is detained from the Chamber by important business. I do not know how he would vote if present.

Mr. OLIVER (during the calling of the roll). If it is in order now, I call attention to the fact that my pair is here, and I therefore ask to have my vote recorded on the vote just taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is too late for the Senator to vote. The roll is now being called to determine whether a quorum is present.

Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will please take the chair to preside over the impeachment proceedings.

Mr. BACON assumed the chair as Presiding Officer.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr., and Mr. Martin.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last sitting of the Senate as a Court of Impeachment.

The Secretary read the Journal of Tuesday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any inaccuracies in the Journal? If not, it will stand approved. Counsel for the respondent will proceed.

TESTIMONY OF DWIGHT J. BEARDSLEE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask that Dwight J. Beardslee may now be called.

Dwight J. Beardslee, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Give us your full name, please, Mr. Beardslee.—A. Dwight J. Beardslee.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Peckville, Pa.
Q. What is your business?—A. I am in the coal business.

Q. In what species or department of the coal business?—A. In the washery business,

Q. Washing culm dumps?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what is called the Katydid culm dump, near Moosic, Pa.?-A. I do.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to examine it with a view to determining its value?-A. Yes; I looked it over.

Q. When was that?—A. I think it was some time last April. Q. At whose instance?—A. A man by the name of Davis.

Q. Do you know his full name?—A. I believe the man's name was Jones. I had that wrong. It was Mr. Jones. I do not know the man's first name.

Q. Do you know whether it was Thomas Star Jones, or-I believe that was what they called him; but I am not sure about it.

Q. Did you go alone or were you in company with somebody else?—A. I was in company with somebody else.
Q. Who?—A. C. C. White, Robert Davis, and Mr. Jones.
Q. What kind of an examination did you make of the dump?—A. I looked the dump over. I did not examine it particularly collections and problems of the second state of the quantification of the dump over. I did not examine it particularly, only just as I walked around it, to see the size of it.

Q. About how much time did you spend on the examination or around the dump?—A. About two hours.
Q. Tell us what conclusion you reached, if you reached any?—A. I could not find any water. That was the first thing I asked about. And the next thing, I thought the dump was too small to warrent an apparation. to warrant an operation.

Q. Why too small to warrant an operation; what does that mean?-A. It was too small a tonnage to pay for building a plant there, I thought.

Q. What would it have cost to have built a plant and operated it properly and to have gotten the water up to it?—A. I do not know what it would have cost to get the water, because I did not know where you could get it. To build a plant there would have cost from $15,000 to $18,000.

Q. Fifteen to eighteen thousand dollars to build the plant?—

A. I should think so.

Q. And for the water an additional sum, whatever it would cost?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you did not see where you could get it at all?-A. I did not that day; no, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We have no questions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is excused.

TESTIMONY OF REESE ALONZO DAVIS.

Reese Alonzo Davis, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Where do you live?—A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am office man for my brother, mining engineering office.

Q. Have you had any experience in the matter of ascertaining the value of coal dumps in that region?—A. Just a little. Q. Tell us briefly what your experience has been .- A. Well,

I used to look after the mines we operated ourselves for several years. I used to look after the mines mostly.

Q. You say the mines "we operated"?—A. My brother and

Q. For how many years were you engaged in that way?-About the mines:

Q. Yes.—A. All my life. Q. You say all your life. Might I ask how old you are?— A. Forty-two.

Q. And for twenty-odd years you have been engaged in that sort of business?—A. Yes

Q. Did you at any time have occasion to visit the Katydid dump near Moosic, Pa.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that?—A. April 6, 1912.

Q. At whose instance did you go there, for what purpose?-A. Mr. Jones, of Scranton-Thomas H. Jones-came in the office one day and said that he had a culm dump with 150,000 to 200,000 tons of culm; and I said, "If you have a dump like that I have got a purchaser." So I got Mr. Beardslee in the office and we went down to look it over, and when we got there I could not see any value in it myself. I did not measure it up, did not test it, but just paced it off.

Q. You paced it and examined it, and reached your conclusion in that way, did you?—A. Well, we saw the tonnage was not there, and we did not bother.

Q. What do you mean by saying you saw the tonnage was not there?—A. The tonnage that Mr. Jones claimed. He claimed about 150,000 to 200,000 tons. Mr. Beardslee said it was not worth while to bother with it; he said he would not take it for a gift.

Q. Mr. Beardslee has been here and told us what he thought about it, but I would like to have your judgment about it.— A. Those are the very words he said. He said he would not take it as a gift.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. We object to that kind of an exami-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be excluded.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I do not want that. Of course, that is not an answer to my question. What we want to know is the conclusion you reached as to the quantity and value.—A. I did not think there was much value there, because it would not pay to put up a washery to operate it; at least, I did not think so.

Q. Do you know about the cost of washeries?—A. No, sir; I have not been in that line—in the operating line—for the past eight years. Therefore I am not versed on the price of material and stuff to-day.

Q. Have you had experience in estimating the quantity of material in these dumps?—A. A little; yes, sir.

Q. As foreman, you said, or acting for your brother?—A. Acting for my brother; I worked for him.

Q. Did you form any conclusion as to how much material there was in the dump when you looked at it?—A. We just paced it off; did not measure it, you understand. We did not test it, but just paced it off.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Then I object to any question along that line. Evidently the witness knows nothing about it. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understand the witness has testified he has had some experience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He can give his estimate of the value of the property, and it will be a question as to how much weight his opinion is entitled to.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am asking him more particularly about the quantity. The Witness. I think there was about 20,000 tons. That is, fair coal. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) That much fair coal?-A. Yes; below pea coal.

Q. You say below pea coal?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you form any estimate about the pea and sizes above?—
A. No; I did not. We just pushed it over with our feet when we were walking over it, and we could not see—

Q. I want to find out why you say you estimated the quantity below pea. Did you find no pea and no chestnut there?-A. Well, we could not see any.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Do you know Mr. Rittenhouse?—A. I know him to see him, but not personally.
Q. Is he a competent engineer?—A. As to that I can not say.
Q. If he measured it and tested it and found 49,000 tons of coal there, you would say you did not know much about it, would you not?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to asking one witness what he thinks about the testimony of another. In view of the ob-jections made yesterday to our questions, I think it is a little Surprising that such a question should be put.

Mr. Manager STERLING. If you bring witnesses here and put them on the stand and do not qualify them as experts, I do not think you have a right to ask them their opinion.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not think the manager has a right to ask him what conclusion he draws from the testimony of other witnesses whom he has not heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager might ask him, if he thought it proper to do so, whether the fact that the estimate of another person was so and so, and that was brought to this witness's knowledge, it would cause him to change his mind.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) If an estimate and a mechanical test made by Mr. Rittenhouse showed 49,000 tons, then you would say you were mistaken in your judgment?—A. No, sir; I would not. I would take my own judgment.

Q. You can tell better by just looking at the dump than a mining engineer can tell by actual measurement and test?-A.

Not necessarily: no.

Q. If Mr. Saums, the engineer who measured it and tested it for the Du Pont Powder Co., disclosed 90,000 gross tons and 55,000 tons of coal, then would you say that your judgment was wrong?-A. No.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The WITNESS. I take my own judgment. Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Yes; you would go out and just look at a dump and step it off and then take your judgment in preference to any engineer's, would you?-A. No; not necessarily so.

Q. Just answer that question .- A. If I thought the dump was of any value when I took a man down there to purchase it, then it would be worth while to measure it.

Q. Just answer my question—A. I am trying to. Q. Would you take your judgment based on the examination you made against the judgment of any competent engineer who had measured it and tested it; would you do that?—A. If it was necessary I would go down and measure it myself.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination: Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) One question about Mr. Rittenhouse. Do you know something about him?—A. I do not know Mr. Rittenhouse only to see him. I am not personally acquainted with him.

Q. Do you know anything about his reputation up there?—A. No; I do not.

Q. As an expert?—A. I do not. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, then, I can not ask you about That is all.

it. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire, and is finally excused.

TESTIMONY OF OSCAR WENDEROTH.

Oscar Wenderoth, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You are the Supervising

Architect of the Treasury?-A. I am, sir.

Q. Have you been subpænaed to bring here from your office the plans of the Federal building in Scranton?-A. I have, sir. Q. Where the offices of the judges there are located?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the post office?—A. Yes. Q. Have you them with you?—A. I have brought what we call in the office the assignment plans—a complete set of plans of the building-the original office copy, showing the assignment of space and the arrangement of the building. I brought a duplicate.

Q. You have a duplicate set which you can leave here?—
I was not sure whether you would demand the originals. have a duplicate, with a certification that it is a true copy.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As far as I am concerned, we can use the duplicate, and let the witness take the originals back with him.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object, unless we know the purpose of it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let us have the plans identified first, and then when we offer them it will be time enough to raise any question. We can identify them and let the witness go.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Certainly. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What is this [indicating]?— That is a photograph of the building, in case it should be called for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Speak louder, so everyone can

The WITNESS. I brought a photograph of the building in case there should be a call for it and two sets of plans, one an original office copy and the other a certified duplicate of the original office copy.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask to have these plans marked now simply for identification, and the question of offering them in evidence will come up later. Take the photograph first. am having the certified copies marked, not the originals, which I propose to let the witness take back with him, unless there is objection.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. You are not offering them in evidence now

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; I am not offering them in evidence now. I called this witness at this time so that he may be allowed to go. He is in charge of the office up there, and we ought not to keep him waiting any longer than is necessary. So far as we are concerned, the witness can go. It is perfectly understood these papers are not now offered in evidence; they are merely marked for identification.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I desire to say, Mr. President, on behalf of the managers, that we did not object to them on the ground that they were certified copies instead of the originals, but we desire to reserve the right to object to the testimony for other reasons when it is offered.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then the witness may be discharged. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may be finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF CLARENCE S. WOODRUFF.

Clarence S. Woodruff, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What is your full name?-A. Clarence S. Woodruff.

Q. Where do you reside?--A. Scranton, Pa.

What is your business?-A. I am an attorney at law

O. In what building there is your office?-A. In the Republican Building.

Q. How far is that from the office of W. P. Boland?-A. Right next to it.

Q. Do you know him?-A. Very well. And his brother?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. He has an office there, too?-A. Yes.

Q. Where is it?-A. Next to Mr. Christy Boland is Mr. Will Boland's office. Q. I will ask you whether or not, about the 1st of November, last, you had an interview Mr. Christopher G. Boland, and he took you into his office in the Republican Building?-A. I did.

Q. And shut the door, and then had a conversation with him?--A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I object to any conversation between this witness and Christopher Boland.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When Mr. Christopher Boland was on the stand I laid the foundation for this evidence—

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Where did you lay it?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. By asking him on cross-examination whether he did not have this interview with this witness at this time and make the statement that I now offer to prove he did make.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. What page? Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not remember. Mr. Simpson will give it to you in a moment.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I do not object to his repeating to this witness the question he asked Mr. Boland.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is what I propose to do.
Mr. Manager FLOYD. If that is what he is proposing to do, go ahead with the question. If it is for the purpose of contradicting Mr. Boland, I do not object, and I presume that is the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is the purpose and the sole purpose of it-to contradict Mr. Christopher Boland.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We do object, because that is a matter that counsel brought out on cross-examination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent may proceed. Objection has been made, and counsel for the respondent has the floor.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will now proceed to state the question I propose to ask. You will not answer until-

Mr. Manager STERLING. Will counsel give us the date on which that question was asked?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are looking for it. We will have it in a moment. While they are looking for that let me ask you about another matter.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Is your office on the same side of the Republican Building; is it on the side next to the Federal building?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where Judge Archbald had offices while he was judge there?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know about the relation of the office of William P.

Boland to the office the judge occupies?— Λ . I do.

Q. What is that relation?—A. It is about 60 feet back from the street from Judge Archbald's window, and the distance between the Republican Building, where Mr. Boland's office is, and the Federal building, where Judge Archbald's office is, is 50 feet, so that the distance across would be the hypotenuse of a right angle, one side being about 50 feet and the other side about 60 feet.

Q. Do you know about Judge Archbald's offices there, those he formerly occupied and those he has occupied since he became a judge of the Commerce Court?—A. Yes, sir; I do. Q. What change was made then?—A. A change was made from the office in front to an office in the rear; about 50 feet.

Q. I ask you if that change was made about the time he became a judge of the Commerce Court? As a matter of fact, do you know when it was made?-A. I do not remember just when it was made.

Q. Do you remember that it was made last spring?-A. It was made recently; yes; since he became judge of the Commerce Court.

Q. You do not know just when it was made?-A. I think some time last spring. My office is just across from where he is

Mr. Manager FLOYD. On what page?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am trying to find it. [After a pause.] It is page 420. I will ask the witness the question in the language in which I asked it to Christopher Boland. Do not answer, you understand, until you hear it, whether there is objection to the question. [To the witness:] I will ask you whether on or about the 1st of November last, in Christopher G. Boland's office in the Republican Building, he requested you to see Judge Archbald, and to state to Judge Archbald for him that if the suit of the Marian Coal Co. against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. was settled he, Christopher, would withdraw from all impeachment proceedings against Judge Archbald, and asked you to communicate that message to Judge Archbald.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. I object.

Mr. Manager WEBB (to Mr. Worthington). What does Bo-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager objects, Mr. WORTHINGTON. Shall I go on and read what he said? The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the Chair understands that counsel is now proposing to answer the objection of the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The manager asked me what Christopher Boland said in response to that.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Never mind; I know.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I will remind the Chair and the Senate that later the senior Senator from Texas asked the witness a question about that on page 422, and the witness gave an answer which covers three-fourths of a page.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. On what page is the first question? Mr. WORTHINGTON. At the top of page 420 is the first question. The question put to him by the Senator from Texas

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Yes, sir; we object.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am waiting to hear the objection. propounded the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Which question is it that was asked the witness?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I paraphrased the question put to Christopher G. Boland at the top of page 420.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, to that we object. object to this testimony because we think it is on a collateral matter and is wholly immaterial and irrelevant to the issue in this case. We can not impeach a witness on immaterial matters. That is a well-known rule of law. As to whether at some subsequent time he had a conversation with Mr. Boland in which Mr. Boland made any such statement or request of this case, and for that reason we object to it. We concede the right of counsel to contradict a witness upon material matters, unless they have brought them out themselves on cross-examination, and then we do not concede that right. That is one reason for objecting, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel for the respondent will proceed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The managers were consulting together, apparently, as to whether they would say anything further.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We reserve the right to be heard at the end of your remarks.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Christopher G. Boland, as the President remembers, was a witness called on behalf of the managers, and gave testimony which they considered of great importance and which the Senate thought of sufficient importance for a vote to admit. I had always supposed until now that there was no question that when any witness is put on the stand his adversary may show whether that witness has done anything which shows that he is interested in the result of the case or has attempted to bring about a result in that case by unfair

If Christopher G. Boland, for instance, had come to Judge Archbald and said to him, "If you will pay me $100,000 I and my brother will withdraw from these impeachment proceedings," I take it for granted nobody would deny that that was competent evidence to show the kind of a man he is and to show what credibility should be attached to his evidence. That is just in substance what he did. We contend, and we offer to prove by this witness, that he asked Mr. Woodruff to come down into his office, took him into his office, where there was no one else, and carefully shut the door, and then said to him, "I want you to go and see Judge Archbald and tell him that if the claims of the Marian Coal Co. against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., the rate case before the Court of Commerce of which we have heard so much, could be settled, he and his brother would withdraw from the impeachment proceedings. What is that but an attempt of the witness to get somebody to bribe him and to come here and give testimony because he was not bribed. We expect to follow that up by showing that the witness, as a matter of fact, did communicate his message to Judge Archbald in the presence of another witness, who is here. So far as that is concerned, that is another matter. The question now is whether we may prove that Christopher G. Boland, a witness for the managers, undertook in this way to get money from or through Judge Archbald for the purpose of stifling his testimony here.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, the absurdity of the answer to that question is perfectly evident from the fact that the case which counsel speaks of was settled by the Interstate Commerce Commission last summer and could not have been pending when this conversation took place last month, as is alleged.

It is a universal rule of evidence, Mr. President, that wherever counsel on cross-examination brings out collateral testimony they are forever bound by the answers of the witness with reference to all collateral matters. This is purely, of course, a collateral question which Mr. Worthington brought out from Mr. C. G. Boland, and he is bound by those answers. only object that he has now in the introduction of this witness is to contradict Mr. Boland about a purely collateral matter, and it is a universal rule of practice and of evidence that that can not be done. If that were not so, we could be piling up straw men here from one year to another to knock them down.

If Mr. Boland made a false statement about a matter which is purely collateral, he could not be indicted for perjury, because it is not a material statement. Therefore the rule is wise that wherever counsel draws out from a witness on cross-examination a collateral matter counsel can not put up additional evidence to contradict that. The only object of this testimony is to contradict what Mr. Worthington brought out from the witness on a collateral question entirely. Therefore we say that it is not competent in any view of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that for the purpose of contradicting a witness upon a collateral matter it is clearly inadmissible; but independently of the fact that the witness, Boland, had testified one way or the other on this particular point, it seems to the Chair that the counsel is entitled to show any fact which would indicate bias on the part of the witness.

The Chair puts his ruling on that ground exclusively, not on the ground that counsel has not a right to contradict it; but if the witness had not been interrogated as to that matter at all witness, it seems to us, is wholly immaterial to the issue in the by the counsel, it appears to the Chair that counsel would have a right to show any facts which would prove bias on the part of the witness. The Chair will state to counsel in the beginning that the question whether or not the witness ultimately communicated to the respondent has nothing to do with this case.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Well, I will have to restate the question, I presume. The Reporter would probably have to hunt some time for it. [To the witness:] Mr. Woodruff, I will ask you whether, on or about the 1st of November last, Mr. Christopher G. Boland took you into his office in the Republican Building

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would suggest to counsel that in view of the ruling of the Chair the question ought to be asked independent of any interrogatory which was propounded to the other witness.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is purely on the ground that it is to show bias.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have simply made a memorandum for myself to frame the question on. [To the witness:] I will ask you, then, whether or not, on or about the 1st of November last, Mr. Christopher G. Boland invited you into his office in the Republican Building in Scranton, and whether you went with him, and then he shut the door?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Nobody else was present?—A. I think not.

Q. I will ask you whether or not he then and there said to you in substance that he wanted you to see Judge Archbald?

Mr. Manager NORRIS. Mr. President, I object to the form I think under the ruling of the Chair the of the question. question counsel has asked and which the witness has answered is wrong. He can not put the answer into the witness's

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The witness had already testified that he went there. I will not ask the witness whether he said anything that might prejudice this case. I ask him whether or not he said anything in relation to the claim of the Marian Coal Co. against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., and the settlement thereof.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object. I do not see how that could have any relation to the showing of bias.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question is legitimate on the line already indicated.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Now, Mr. Woodruff-

The WITNESS. What he said might result in substance to that, but I did not take in that way what he said to me.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Tell us what he did say.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, we object. He can only answer "yes" or "no" to the question which is asked.

If we desire on cross-examination to know what he did say we can draw it out. There is just one question the counsel can ask—the direct question he asked of Boland—and this witness can answer "yes" or "no."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would rule that the question is not for the purpose of contradicting the former witness, Boland, but for the purpose of showing bias, and for that purpose the counsel has a right to show what the witness said.

The counsel for the respondent will proceed.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Will you proceed to state what Mr. Christopher G. Boland said to you on that occasion?—
A. He said that there had been negotiations made between Morgan Davis, of Scranton, and the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co. in reference to the purchase of the Marian coal dump. He said that that had been going on for some three months, and that it had virtually come to an end. He said that his brother in Wilkes-Barre had been very anxious about mak-ing the sale, as he himself was, and that he had seen Judge Wheaton, of Wilkes-Barre, and Judge Wheaton had suggested that some one should see Maj. Warren, who was the attorney for the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co., and suggested my name, so Mr. Boland said, with a view that the sale might be made, and that, as that was the bone of contention in this mat-ter, this trial here might be obviated and done away with, and I should also see Judge Archbald and tell him for Mr. Boland what his feelings were in the matter.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, do you think that shows bias?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not for the Chair to deter-

It is for the Senate to determine. mine.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask you to rule out the answer. It does not show bias, and is not the way to show bias if it did

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I had supposed, as the Chair ruled a few moments ago, it had been settled for the purposes of this case we might show bias in the way indicated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will proceed.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Woodruff, you made a statement to me in Scranton about this proposition, did you not?-A. I did.

Q. On the 22d of November last?-A. Some time; I do not know just when it was.

Q. About the 22d of November?—A. Yes, sir; about that time.

Q. In the Hotel Casey in Scranton?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Simpson was present?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And Mr. R. W. Archbald, jr.?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. I want to know whether or not at that time you did not tell us that what Christopher G. Boland said on that occasion

Mr. Manager WEBB. We object to that, Mr. President. The counsel is going to impeach his own witness now.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I listened to my friends the managers arguing the other day when their witness was upon the stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will confine his question.

Mr. Manager WEBB. He could only be permitted to do it on the ground that the witness is unfriendly, but he has no unfriendly witness before him now.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Nearly every witness examined in this case on behalf of the managers, as soon as he did not say anything, was hauled up by what he said before the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to that kind of a

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will proceed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I wish to read this question to the witness and refresh his memory by it, and then ask him if he did not say that and if it is not true. It is precisely the line of examination pursued by the managers, as to which we objected, but the Chair decided that it was proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks counsel has a right to question the witness along the line he is pursuing. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I will ask you whether or not you did, on the occasion I have referred to, at the Hotel Casey, on or about the 22d of November last, in the presence of the gentleman I have mentioned, say to me that on the occasion concerning which you have just testified, Christopher G. Boland said to you this in substance, that he was about to go on a trip, and he requested you to attend to the matter right away; that he requested you to see Judge Archbald and Maj. Warren and tell them that if the case of Boland against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad before the Interstate Commerce Commission could be settled, he and his brother, W. P. Boland, would withdraw from the impeachment proceedings against Judge Archbald?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we object to that on two grounds. First, it is a leading question; and it contradicts what the witness has already sworn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand it to be a leading question except that in so far as refreshing the memory of the witness there is necessarily always a and the memory of the witness there is necessarily always a suggestion to the witness. That can not be avoided. The latter question is not admissible, in the opinion of the Chair.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) In order that there may be no misunderstanding, Mr. Woodruff, I repeat the former questions. tion, and that is whether or no at the Hotel Casey in Scranton, at the time in question, November 22 last, or thereabouts—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the question should be put in a different way. That is not properly refreshing the witness. The counsel does not need any suggestion from the Chair as to putting it in such a shape as will make it admissible. Refresh the memory of the witness and then ask him what is the fact.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Well, Mr. Woodruff, to refresh your memory, I will ask you whether you did not tell me at the Hotel Casey, on the occasion in question, that Christopher G. Boland-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that is the proper question. The counsel can read to the witness the words before him, and then ask him, if his memory is refreshed, what does he now say as to the conversation.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Let me, as a preamble to that, ask the witness this question: Did you observe that while you were making the statement I was making notes and apparently writing down what you said—A. I did, sir.

Q. I will read this to you and see whether it refreshes your memory of it, so that you can recall what actually happened when you were talking with Christopher G. Boland:

He requested me to see Judge Archbald and Maj. Warren and tell them that if the case of Boland against the Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. before the Interstate Commerce Commission could be settled he and his brother, W. P. Boland, would withdraw from the impeachment proceedings against Judge Archbald.

A. I knew nothing from Christy Boland at the time about the case in the Interstate Commerce Commission at all. There was nothing of that sort mentioned. The only question was as to the sale being perfected of this Marian Coal Co. to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co., which he said had been going on for three or four months through Morgan Davis, and that if that could be accomplished, so that they would be wiped out entirely from that, the bone of contention in this case here would be ended.

Q. That is, if the Lackawanna Railroad Co. would buy their claim-

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, I object. Mr. WORTHINGTON. And buy their property-

The WITNESS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager objects to the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I should correct that. Mr. Manager WEBB. Let the witness explain what next he did, and let the Senate interpret what the words mean.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel has a right to interrogate him without putting a leading question.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did Christopher G. Boland at that time say anything to you about what would happen if the Lackawanna Railroad Co, would buy the property of the Marian Coal Co.?-A. He did not say what would happen, but he said he was sick and tired of this thing, and that he wanted to be entirely free from it, and that if that could be done he thought that the source of contention would be ended. I said to him, "Christy, does Will feel the same way?" and he said, "I think he does.

Q. Now, as to taking you into his room and shutting the door and having that conversation with you, did he not tell you to go and see Judge Archbald and make the proposition to him?—A. No; he said to make a proposition to Maj. Warren, as he was the attorney for the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Co., and then he said, "Go to see Judge Archbald about it. I want him to know just how I feel in this matter."

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understand, Mr. President, you have already held that I can not ask him whether he did go to Judge Archbald and what took place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that is material.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Very well, I will not press it. [To the witness:] What was it he said that he was sick and tired of?-A. I do not know what he said, but I inferred, and I think rightly, the impeachment proceedings.

Q. Did Mr. Christopher G. Boland tell you anything about going away-the trip he was about to make at that time?-A.

Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We object to that, as it comes within your honor's ruling as to showing bias.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is for the purpose of showing bias, the Chair will hold that it is in order.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Nothing that I have said will amount to much, unless I show that he did report to Christopher G. Boland after he came back from that trip and that his proposition of settling this case in that way would not be accepted or considered, and hence his bias and prejudice when he comes here on the stand as a witness against Judge Archbald. I think it is absolutely essential for me to show that. I do not ask him it is absolutely essential for me to show that. I do not ask him to say whether he saw Judge Archbald, but when Christopher G. Boland returned from that trip, what he did report to him about this matter. Then we have the foundations for the bias and prejudice of Christopher G. Boland in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks when testimony is admitted showing the proposition which has been testified to, the whole limit has been reached. The question what was afterwards done does not affect the question whether or not be was biased. The fact of him would be shown by or not he was biased. The fact of bias would be shown by testimony already adduced if it is sufficient for that purpose, and would not be added to by showing that it was communicated to the respondent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This was only a short time ago, and if nothing further transpires to show that the result was communicated to him it might be that he would still suppose there was a chance to effect a settlement in that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think it is admissible.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Well, I bow to the decision of the court. [To the witness, presenting paper.] I wish to show you the plan of the second floor of the Federal building which has been identified here and ask you to point out on is finally excused.

WORTHINGTON. Wait a moment. with the letter A the office Judge Archbald occupied before he changed last spring.

The WITNESS. I mark the "A" here.

Mr. WORTHINGTON (exhibiting). Mark "A" is the office formerly occupied. The witness marked with red pencil the letter "A." [To the witness.] Now, please mark with the letter "A." [To the witness.] Now, please mark with the letter "B" the office to which he changed last spring.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The document is not offered in evidence yet?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Not yet. As soon as I have exhibited these marks to you I propose to offer it in evidence.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Let us get through with the wit-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
Q. (By Mr. Manager CLAYTON.) Mr. President, I desire to ask the witness a question. [To the witness:] What is your feeling toward Judge Archbald?—A. Very friendly.
Q. Did you not intercede with the President to prevent an investigation.

investigation, which has led to these impeachment proceedings?-A. I wrote a letter to the President, but not until afterwards. I simply set forth the feeling that the community had as regards Judge Archbald in Scranton.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I think I will have to call for that letter unless

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I have not offered any letter. was just asking him about his feeling for Judge Archbald. never referred to the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager will proceed. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is all I desire to ask. witness has answered my question. I called for no letter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Unless he has stated the contents of the letter he may have to strike out what he has said as to what the letter was, on the ground that the letter is the proper

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We have no objection to that. We do not call for the letter. It was merely to show the friendly bias of this witness toward Judge Archbald. I have accomplished that, and I have no further question to ask.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. There is a question that I should have asked before I announced that I was through with this I want to ask him about his relation with Christopher G. Boland and William P. Boland up to the present, and to show that he is friendly to them.

The WITNESS. We have been the very best of friends always. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Let me ask you another question. Since Christopher G. Boland was asked this question. has he not been to talk with you about it?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we object to that. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Is not that to show bias, when our friends are trying to prevent this witness from giving testimony in this case-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand the question to be of that character.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is the question I do mean to ask him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the proper way to ask it. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Has Christopher G. Boland approached you since he testified in this case in reference to the question which I asked about-this conversation with you?-A. No, sir.

Q. He has not?—A. No, sir. Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is suggested—and I think it is wisely suggested-that the witness mark the position on this map of the office of William P. Boland.

(The map was handed to the witness.)

Mr. WORTHINGTON (to the witness). Put the letter "C" on it.

The witness marked the letter "C" on the paper.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The managers were unable to hear the conversation between the respondent's counsel and the witness. As he was doing something there on the suggestion of respondent's counsel, I would like to know what it was.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The nefarious suggestion I made was to put the letter "C" on this map about where the office of Boland would be. I think the President heard me. I will submit the nefarious result to the managers,

(The paper was handed to the managers.)
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire. He

TESTIMONY OF CHARLES B. WITMER.

Charles B. Witmer appeared, and having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Judge Witmer, you are the United States district judge for the middle district of Pennsylvania? A. I am.

Q. When were you sworn in as such judge?-A. On the 8th of March, 1911.

Q. You have been such district judge ever since?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Before you were appointed district judge what office in connection with the administration of justice in the United States courts in that place did you hold?—A. I was United States marshal from July, 1906, until December, 1908, and district attorney from 1908 until I was appointed to the district bench.

Q. United States district attorney?—A. Yes, sir. I was also assistant United States district attorney in the Department of Justice before I was appointed marshal, in the administration of Attorney General Knox.

Q. Now, will you please tell us during the time you were United States marshal who it was that drew from the jury wheel the names of jurors who served in that court?-A. I did so.

Q. That was in every instance, was it?-A. In every instance. Q. There is a question I am going to ask, Judge Witmer, which kindly do not answer until there is an opportunity to object to it. It has been testified here that in the case of Peale against the Marian Coal Co. the decision-

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to that question. It is wholly immaterial what has been testified to here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel has already cautioned the witness not to answer until objection may be made.

Mr. SIMPSON. It has been testified here that in the case of Peale against the Marian Coal Co. the decision of that case, which was rendered by you on August 24, 1911, was so rendered at the dictation or under the direction or influence in some way of Judge Archbald. Now, do not answer, please, until the managers can object. Will you please tell us whether that is so?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear from counsel for the respondent.

Mr. SIMPSON. If the Chair please, the managers have put in evidence in this case the docket entries in this particular matter—in the matter, I mean, of Peale against the Marian Coal Co. They have asked Mr. Boland in their own case whether or not-I want to put that accurately, and it is a little difficult to do it-they have asked Mr. Boland in their own case whether the decision of that case did not affect him in that which he did in relation to this particular matter-I mean the matter which has resulted in this impeachment. When he was turned over for cross-examination, he himself then volunteered, not in answer to any question which Mr. Worthington had asked, but, in fact, volunteered-and it remains upon this record-the statement that I have embodied in the question which is now before the witness. It seems to us that it ought to be known, so that the Senators may give such effect to it as to them seems best, whether or not there was any such influence brought to bear against the Bolands as was intimated or stated in that That is the reason for asking this particular question of the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the testimony was brought out by the counsel for the respondent, and the respondent's counsel now state that the evidence was volunteered. That evidence would have been ruled out by the Chair as immaterial if counsel had so requested. It being immaterial and having been brought out in that way, the Chair does not think that the question as now propounded is admissible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On another ground, Mr. President, I ask that the witness be allowed to answer this question. honorable managers produced as a witness here Mr. Meyer, and proved by him the steps which were taken in the Interstate Commerce Commission, between the Interstate Commerce Commission and the President, for the purpose, they said, of giving the Senate the history of this transaction. In the memorandum made by Mr. Cockrell, Mr. Meyer's confidential clerk, and which Mr. Meyer, on behalf of himself and the other members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, took to the President, there Boland says the litigation referred to by Seager is the suit filed by Peale, and that Seager has inside advance information of the decision of the court, which has not yet been handed down.

allowed to show that they took to the President that astounding piece of information, which was wholly untrue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not evidence in this case as to any matter in issue; that is simply the history of the steps taken which resulted in this proceeding on the part of the House of Representatives. It is not in any manner evidence as to any issue here. The Chair still thinks the question is inadmissible.

Mr. SIMPSON. There is no other question we desire to ask, in view of the Chair's ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire, unless the managers desire to question him.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We do not care to ask the witness any questions.

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) There is one other question which I had overlooked. Can you tell us when it was that the room which was formerly occupied by Judge Archbald in the Federal Building in Scranton was changed so that you thereafter occupied it?-A. I do not believe that I am able to state that correctly.

Q. Can you approximate it?-A. It was done about nine months after I was appointed to the office and accepted the posi-

Q. About nine months after?-A. About nine months after I entered upon the duties of my appointment.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is all. Thank you.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF FRANK E. DONNELLY.

Frank E. Donnelly, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Donnelly, you are a lawyer, practicing in Scranton, Pa., I believe?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been doing so?—A. Since 1900.
Q. You were attorney for the Marian Coal Co. in the case of Peale against the Marian Coal Co., which has been referred to here?-A. I was.

Q. During what period did you act as attorney for the Marian Coal Co. in that case?—A. The suit started in the early part of March, 1909, and I continued to act as attorney for the Marian Coal Co. until the 31st of July, 1912.

Q. Do not answer the question I am about to put to you until we see whether or not it is objected to, Mr. Donnelly. It has been stated here that you were in collusion with Judge Archbald against your own clients in that case. I want to ask you what you have to say about it?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. It is very apparent counsel knows it is improper, or he would not have presented

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not quite like that statement, Mr. President. I had anticipated that the Chair would rule out this conversation, but I thought, in view of what had been stated in this public place and practically all over the country about this gentlemen, that I would not do my duty by him unless L gave him a chance on the stand to say what he has to

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that counsel have the right to ask the question. The managers having objected, does counsel for the respondent desire to say anything further on the question of admissibility?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; I think we have argued that

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Conforming to the prior ruling, the Chair will rule out the testimony.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then, we have nothing further to ask this witness, Mr. President.
Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF C. E. SPEGUT.

C. E. Sprout, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Sprout, what is your business or profession?-A. I am a practicing lawyer.

Q. Where?-A. At Williamsport, Pa.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald ?- A. I know Judge Archbald.

Q. Were you one of the contributors to a purse given to him at the time of his going to Europe a few years ago?-A. I was.

Q. Will you tell us, please, how you became such contributor?-A. The matter was first brought to my attention at the of the court, which has not yet been handed down.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. President, since the managers have introduced the history of the case for the purpose of showing that it was properly and fairly presented, we ought to be friends in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre to give him a complimentary dinner in New York prior to his sailing. He asked me whether I would see one or two of the prominent lawyers in Williamsport and ascertain whether they wanted to participate in this function. Subsequent to that time I had one or two telephonic conferences with Maj. Warren, and one also, I think, with Judge Frank Wheaton, of Wilkes-Barre. In those conferences we ascertained that the plan had been changed; that, instead of giving him the complimentary dinner as originally contemplated, on account of the difficulty of getting a sufficient number to attend, they would put into a purse or a fund the amount of money which it was thought the dinner would cost and give it to Judge Archbald prior to his sailing under such circumstances as would not disclose to Judge Archbald what had been done nor the names of the donors until after he had sailed from New York Harbor.

Q. Did you contribute?-A. I did.

Q. How much?-A. $25.

Q. Did you know that the names of the contributors were to be told to him?—A. On the contrary, I was informed that the names of the contributors were not to be told or to be disclosed to Judge Archbald at all.

Q. Do you know C. La Rue Munson?-A. Very well, sir. Q. Was he one of those to whom you made application after the plan had been changed from a dinner to a contribution?-A. I did see Mr. Munson.

Q. And he declined to make any contribution?-A. And he declined to make any contribution.

Q. What were your relations with Judge Archbald?-A. My relations were those of a practicing attorney in his court.

Q. Had you known him long?-A. I had known him since

Mr. SIMPSON. Cross-examine, gentlemen,

Cross-examination:

- Q. (By Mr. Manager NORRIS.) To whom did you give your contribution?—A. I am not certain about that; but my best recollection is that I gave it to Mr. Searle, the clerk.
- Q. The clerk of the court?-A. The clerk of the court Q. There are two Searles. To whom did you give it? You do not mean Judge Searle?-A. Not Judge Searle. I gave it either to Maj. Warren or to Ed. Searle, the clerk of the court.

Q. How much was your contribution?-A. $25. Q. Did you give a check for it or the cash?-A. I think I gave a check; I am certain that I gave a check. Q. Where do you reside?-A. Williamsport, Pa.

Q. Did you talk with Mr. Munson, of Williamsport, about it?-A. Since the occurrence?

Q. Well, I had reference to about the time of the occurrence .-A. As I said a moment ago, I did see Mr. Munson and requested him to make a contribution, telling him that I intended doing so and that other members of the bar in Scranton and Wilkes-Barre were doing likewise. I did not speak to him at the time when it was contemplated giving the judge c. Ginner.

Q. Your contribution was made with the understanding that it was going to be a cash contribution, was it not?-A. At the time given; yes, sir.

Q. Did you learn that Mr. Searle, the clerk of the court, had put in the envelope containing the contributions the names of those who had subscribed to the fund?—A. I did not learn that until a long time after the occurrence. After Judge Archbald had sailed and while he was abroad I received a letter from him. That was the first intimation I had that he had any knowledge of the fact that I had been one of the contributors

Q. Was your first conversation with anyone in regard to this with Mr. Searle, the clerk of the court?-A. My first conversation was with Maj. Warren.

Q. He did not live at Williamsport, did he?—A. He lived at Scranton; I lived at Williamsport, and we met in Philadelphia. We were both there attending court at that time—the supreme

Q. But that conversation had no relation to a cash contribution to the judge, did it? Was that not in reference to a dinner?—A. That was entirely in reference to a dinner; but, of course, that transaction was the initiative of the movement which resulted in the cash contribution.

O. Well, so far as the cash contribution was concerned, was not that initiated by the clerk of the court?-A. So far as I know, it was initiated by Maj. Warren himself.

Q. At your meeting in Philadelphia?—A. No; subsequently, when I telephoned him. The first information I had of it was in a telephonic conversation with Maj. Warren, I being at Williamsport and he at Scranton. He told me that they had found it impossible to get a sufficient number of Judge Archbald's friends to go to New York to the dinner, and that they had therefore modified the plan.

Q. How did you happen to get in communication with the clerk about it? Do you remember that?-A. I think I had a letter from Maj. Warren, or information by telephone, that he had turned the matter over to Clerk Searle, to gather contributions, and that I should send mine to him.

Q. And you acted accordingly?-A. And I think I acted accordingly.

Mr. Manager NORRIS. That is all. Mr. SIMPSON. That is all, Mr. President.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the witness a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas submits a question which he wishes to have propounded to the witness. The Secretary will read the question.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. What was the purpose in raising the fund? What was it to be used for? What was the fund actually used for by Judge Archbald?

The WITNESS. Of course, I can only answer that question in part. I am not able to say how Judge Archbald used the fund. It was contemplated to give Judge Archbald a complimentary

The PRESIDING OFFICER (to the Secretary). Hand the witness the question.

The Secretary handed the witness the question.

The Witness (after examining the question). I will answer the questions in their order. "What was the purpose in raising the fund?" It was supposed to be a testimonial of respect to Judge Archbald by a number of his friends who had been practicing in his court. "What was it to be used for?" I apprehend that I could not answer that. "What was the fund actually used for by Judge Archbald?" I experience the same difficulty in answering that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any other question for the witness? If not, he may retire.

Mr. SIMPSON. And he may be discharged, sir. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is The witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM G. VANDEWATER.

William G. Vandewater, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Mr. Vandewater, what is your business?—A. Auditor of the coal department of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co.

Q. What are your duties as such auditor?-A. To keep account of the production of the coal mined.

Q. Will your books show the extent of the coal shipped by the Marian Coal Co.?-A. Our books will show the production of the Marian Coal Co. and certain of their shipments; yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell us what the amount of-

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object, Mr. President. Mr. SIMPSON. Wait until I finish the question and then object to it, if you please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (to the witness). Do not answer the question until directed so to do.

O. (By Mr. SIMPSON.) Will you tell us, please, from your books what was the production of the Marian Coal Co. Now, do not answer until directed to do so.

Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object, Mr. President; we do not think the question is relevant.

Will counsel please state the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. materiality of that question?

Mr. SIMPSON. There was a letter, Mr. President, offered in evidence by the managers, under date of September 1, 1911, written by Mr. Phillips, of this same company, to Mr. Loomis, of the company, setting forth what Mr. Watson's claim was, which is the matter referred to in the second of the articles of impeachment. I desire to show how that claim was made up. The purpose of this offer is to show that the books of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. show that the production of this washery was in accord with the amount stated in that letter, for the purpose of showing that Mr. Watson did not present, as is claimed by the managers, a highly exorbitant claim, but that he presented a claim in accordance with the figures which appeared upon the books of this particular company.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the question of whether or not Mr. Watson's claim was an exorbitant one can elucidate the issue at all.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is one of the very contentions that is made here, and that is a contention in regard to which we hada very considerable argument at length the other day, as the Presiding Officer may remember. The contention of the manngers is that Mr. Watson was directed in presenting his claim to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. to claim only $100,000, but that, in point of fact, he presented a claim for a very considerably larger amount, and that the amount above the amount which he was originally directed to present was to be divided up in the way that is stated in the testimony, without referring further to it here.

The purpose of this evidence is to show that that claim was made up in fact from the figures which appear in the letter which the managers themselves offered in evidence, in order to avoid the contention that it was then an exorbitant claim, in the way which the managers stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has counsel finished?

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes, sir; I have finished.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand that the contention was as to the exorbitancy of the demand, but as to the difference between the amount agreed upon and the amount which the lawyer afterwards demanded. The Chair does not think it relevant to this issue.

Mr. SIMPSON. Of course, sir, if the managers take the view that the Chair does upon that main question, then this question would not be admissible at all and would not be thought of, and if that is a matter disclaimed, of course, I am content and do not wish to ask this witness any question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair can not rule on anything except the testimony. The Chair does not recall any testimony to the effect of any issue being raised as to whether or not $161,000 was, in fact, more than the party was entitled to receive. The previous testimony was as to the discrepancy between the amount which was originally agreed upon as that to be demanded and that which was ultimately demanded.

Mr. SIMPSON. It is unfortunate, perhaps, that counsel understood it differently from the way the Chair does. If that is the situation, of course this witness ought not to be called. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, excuse me a moment; was out of the Chamber at the time this question was asked. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no knowledge as to the purpose of the managers. The Chair was simply going on what evidence has been adduced.

Mr. SIMPSON. I understand the Chair's position exactly, but I want to avoid argument if I can when the final argument comes in this case. It will be long enough, in all conscience, even then.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, may I add one word to what has been said? We are here in the very embarrassing position of having this testimony given against Mr. Watson, when he is, as I think everybody understands, on his deathbed, and it is impossible even to communicate with him. It does seem to me that if we can show, as we offer to show, that the reduction per ton which was claimed on the part of the Bolands amounted to $161,000, it would be a very important piece of circumstantial evidence which the Senate ought to have for the purpose of considering its weight along with the other evidence. Of course, I recognize the fact that a man may have a claim of $300,000 or $400,000 against somebody and be willing to compromise it for $100,000, but when it is denied that there was any such difference and, as we contend, that there is no truth in the statement, it seems to me the Senate ought to have the information as to what the facts are out of which the claim

There is in evidence, I think, a letter to which Mr. Simpson was referring as I was coming into the Chamber, from Mr. Phillips to Mr. Loomis, dated in September, in which he says he has seen Mr. Watson and the claim which Mr. Watson has obtained from the Bolands is a claim for 43 cents a ton for 376,000 tons of coal which they had shipped. It seems to me we ought to be permitted to show that that was a fact so as to indicate that Watson got these figures immediately from the Bolands and could not have got them anywhere else. It is not conclusive one way or the other, but in the situation in which we are placed, where Mr. Watson is as incapable of being used as a witness here as if he were in his grave, that fact ought to be known to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is whether or not the issue can properly be raised and determined in this case as to the output of the Marian Coal Co. If so, it could be gone into fully, just as fully as we have gone into the question of the contents of the culm dump, and there would be no end to it. If the witness is authorized to give his testimony as to what the output was, the managers will have a right to join issue on that, and to go just as fully into that question as we have gone into the question of the contents of the culm bank, which would be manifestly improper; and if it is improper to go into it fully, it is improper to go into it at all. The Chair excludes the evidence.

Mr. SIMPSON. There is no other question we want to ask this witness, then.

Mr. Manager WEBB. The witness may be excused, so far as we are concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF MISS MARY F. BOLAND.

Miss Mary F. Boland, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You are the niece of William P. Boland and Christopher Boland, are you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And have been a stenographer, I believe, in William P.

Boland's office for some years?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you there in September, 1911?—A. Yes, sir. Q. I will ask you whether or not on or about the 18th day of September, 1911, Mr. Edward J. Williams in that office made the following statement in substance-

Mr. Manager WEBB. What page is that? Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am looking at the page in the proceedings of the Judiciary Committee for the purpose of getting those notes

Mr. SIMPSON. About page 1087. Mr. Manager FLOYD. We object to any such statement, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When Mr. Williams was on the stand he testified that after his visit to Capt. May on the 31st of March, when he took that letter from Judge Archbald, which is in evidence, he went back at once to Judge Archbald, and that while there on Judge Archbald's desk he saw a paper, which he has referred to as a brief and sometimes as a trial list, upon which there was the word "lighterage," and then that the conversation followed, which the Chair will remember.

It has already appeared that that lighterage case was not in the Commerce Court until the middle of the month of April, and also that the trial list on which it appeared was made up about the middle of the month of September following, after Judge Archbald's interview with Mr. Brownell and after Capt. May had given the paper here, which is called an option, dated the 30th day of August, 1911.

Now, I propose to show that it is a mistake entirely of dates on the part of Mr. Williams as to that, and to show that he ap-peared in the office of Mr. William P. Boland first on the 18th of September, and then on the 28th of September, and then said that he had then just seen that paper; so as to show that if this conversation did occur and this thing happened, it had no possible effect upon what is in dispute here about Capt. May's action.

I laid the foundation by asking Mr. Williams the question when he was on the stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the manager desire to say anything on the subject?

Mr. Manager FLOYD. Mr. President, our objection to that is this: That they are attempting to contradict Mr. Williams, not by any fact within the knowledge of this witness, but by proving by this witness that at some time Mr. Williams came in there and had some conversation which she, as a stenographer, noted in her notebook. We do not object to his asking this witness about any facts within her knowledge that may contradict Mr. Williams; but it might be that the first conversation was never noted; it might be that he had a dozen conversations on the same subject, and that some subsequent conversation was noted. So we object to it as hearsay and as not tending to contradict the proposition by any knowledge within the mind of this witness referred to by counsel for the respondent. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Reporter will please read the question.

The Reporter read as follows:

I will ask you whether or not on or about the 18th day of September, 1911, Mr. Edward J. Williams, in that office, made the following statement, in substance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not pass on the question whether or not the substance of the conversation can be read, but the Chair thinks it is admissible to prove what Mr. Williams then said. The objection of counsel is a legitimate argument as to the weight of it, but it does not affect the question of its admissibility.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Then, Miss Boland, I will ask you whether on or about the 18th day of September, in Mr.
William P. Boland's office in Scranton, Mr. E. J. Williams said in your hearing, "I was in this morning"; that he had seen the judge, Judge Archbald, and he showed him a brief he was pre-paring for the Eric Railroad Co.?—A. My recollection is that he did tell me that.

Q. I beg your pardon .- A. My recollection is that he did tell me that.

Q. I will ask you whether or not on the 28th of September, 1911, Mr. E. J. Williams was again in the office, and said he was going to the judge's office to look at a brief the judge was preparing for the Erie Railroad Co., and said he would see it that afternoon?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And whether later in the day he came back and said he saw the brief and that it was about a case against the Erie Railroad Co., about a lighterage charge?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That happened?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Now, Miss Boland, did you make note of those conversations at the time, so that you are sure of the date?-A. Yes, sir;

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all. Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you make this additional note at the same time-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that. I have asked the witness everything on the subject of the brief. Miss Boland made a great many notes and, of course, they are not competent evidence in this case, unless they are made competent by something brought out by us. If they can find anything in these notes which refers to the matter concerning which I have asked the witness, that I have not read, I will consider it a part of the evidence introduced by us. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was this on the same occa-

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes; on the same occasion and on the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Oh, that is an entirely different matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does it relate to the same matter?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No.
Mr. Manager WEBB. I do not know that I can say that.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. If not, the manager will have to introduce this witness as his own witness. He can only interrogate the witness-and that is the rule the manager himself has invoked-about matters inquired about on direct examination. If the manager desires to inquire further as to the continuance of this conversation, he will have to introduce the witness as his own.

Mr. Manager WEBB. The way I look at it is this: The respondent's counsel has shown about four lines of a notation the stenographer has made. There are three or four more lines

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it relates to the same subject matter, the manager has a right to ask the witness about it; but if it does not relate to the same subject matter, then he has not such a right.

Mr. Manager WEBB. It relates to the relationship she noted, or what Mr. Williams said of the relationship, between him and the judge. It is immediately following her notation of the visit to the judge's office to see the brief, and is part of the same conversation—the same minute.

That would make it admissible The PRESIDING OFFICER. whenever the manager recalls the witness. The rule is plain that the counsel can only cross-examine the witness about matters upon which the witness has been interrogated on direct

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Is that all? Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes; I think that is all. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then the witness may be finally dis-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the witness will not be finally discharged. The witness can retire, subject to call.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I suggest that counsel permit us to make her our witness now, so as to save this young lady from coming back.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent may proceed with their case.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask by way of inquiry why the Senate has not now the right to make an order-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Missouri has any order to propose to the Senate, the Chair will submit it to the Senate. That is the only way it can be brought to the attention of the Senate under the rule.

Mr. REED. Is there a rule which denies a Senator the right to propound an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Except in writing.

Mr. REED. I mean to the Chair. I am not asking the witness a question; I am asking the Chair.—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is a question or order.

Mr. REED. Very well; that is what I am inquiring—whether it is not within the power of the Senate to direct by a vote at this time that this witness shall be examined by the managers without requiring her to return at a subsequent time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Undoubtedly the Senate has a right to do whatever it sees fit to do.

Mr. REED. Very well.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Another objection, Mr. President, to what the counsel is about to ask is that it is a matter about which the learned manager-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not now before the Senate.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. If it is not before the Senate, I will not occupy the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri

[Mr. Repp] presents an order, which he asks the Senate now to adopt. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the witness now on the stand, Miss Mary F. Boland, be at this time interrogated by the managers relative to that part of the conversation sought to be elicited.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, if the order asked for were that the managers be now allowed to make her their own witness, without waiting for their turn, we should say nothing; but that determines the question of the admissibility of the evidence, and certainly the Senate is not going to say whether the evidence shall be admitted before it finds out whether it is competent. The evidence is as to the declaration of Williams with respect to his relations with Judge Archbald.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand it to go further than the right of the manager to now examine

Mr. WORTHINGTON. And not to pass upon the question of whether or not the testimony is competent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that it includes that question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the pleasure of the Senate; does the Chair hear objection to the adoption of the order? [A pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and the order read will be considered unanimously adopted. Counsel will proceed with the examination.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) On September 18, 1911, Mr.

Worthington has asked if you made this notation:

E. J. W. was in this morning and said he saw the judge, who showed him a brief he was preparing for the Erie Railroad Co.

I ask you if that is all of that notation as to what Mr. Williams said about the judge?—A. I really could not say without looking at it. I could not recall it now.

Q. We can not hear you.—A. I say I do not recall it just now.

Q. Can you look at your notes and tell—September 18, 1911?—

Yes, sir. Do you want me to read it?

Q. I will ask you, first, if what Mr. Worthington asked you as to what Mr. Williams said about seeing the brief in the judge's office was all the notation on that day?—A. I just do not remember Mr. Worthington's question. I thought he asked me if Mr. Williams did not tell me that on that day.

Q. Yes.—A. And I answered him "yes, sir."
Q. Will you tell us what the notation is you have on that day that Mr. Worthington asked you about?—A. He asked me about the first part of the notation.

Q. Well, read that first part, then.—A. "E. J. W. was in this morning and said he saw the judge, who showed him a brief he was preparing for the Erie Railroad Co." That is all he asked me about.

Q. That is all Mr. Worthington asked you about?—A. Yes.

Q. I ask you to read, if it is another two lines or more, the remainder of the notation.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object, on the ground that it is not at all pertinent to the part of the conversation I have introduced in evidence; on the ground that the managers had their time to offer any evidence they pleased as to the relation between Judge Archbald and Mr. Williams, and they exhausted that subject; and on the further ground that there is no rule of evidence in any court of the United States that makes it competent evidence to prove the relations between A and B by offering evidence as to what A said about it somewhere when B was not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would undoubtedly hold that to be correct if it was not a part of the same conversation. If it is a part of the same conversation, the Chair would consider it competent.

Mr. OLIVER rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to propound a question before the other question is answered?

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is proper that it should be propounded now. It is something that occurs to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania submits a question which will be propounded to the

The Secretary read as follows:

Are you reading from your original notes or from a transcript?

The WITNESS. From a transcript. Do you want me to read from the notes now?

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Have you your original notes with you now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please read from your original notes the conversation with Mr. Williams which you noted. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am obje

I am objecting to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. Wait a moment.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Does the Chair rule that because it was said in the same conversation it may be read, no matter what it relates to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; if it is related in any manner to this matter. Of course if it relates to a matter entirely foreign to the subject it would not be admissible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Chair has not been advised what it is. How can the Chair rule upon the question whether it is a part of the same subject matter when the Chair has not heard what it is? It is a statement that Mr. Williams was said to have made as to the relation between him and Judge Archbald. Does the Chair hold it is admissible?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The Chair thinks it is sufficiently cognate to make it a part of the conversation.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Read the note.—A. The whole

Q. Yes.—A. "E. J. W. called this morning. Said he talked with Judge A. He showed him a brief he was preparing for the Eric Railroad Co. He said the judge would tell him most anything. He has no confidence in John Henry Jones."

Mr. Manager STERLING. Some of the Senators did not hear the witness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the witness is through the Chair will direct the Reporter to read it to the Senate.

Mr. Manager STERLING. It is suggested that the clerk read from the transcript.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I would like to have it read so that the Senate can hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has just stated that that would be done.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Excuse me; I did not hear it.

The Reporter read the answer, as follows:

E. J. W. called this morning. Said he talked with Judge A. He showed him a brief he was preparing for the Eric Railroad Co. He said the judge would tell him most anything. He has no confidence in John Henry Jones.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Miss Boland, do you remember anything about writing the contract in which the words "silent party" were used?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that. That was all gone into—about that silent-party paper—through W. P. Boland and Mr. Pryor. Are we to reopen the whole case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know what the question is to be. The Senate has ordered that this witness be interrogated in chief by the managers. Of course, the question of the admissibility of any evidence is open under the understanding at that time. But unless the question is proposed to elicit evidence that is not properly admissible, the Chair will hold that the manager may proceed.

Chair will hold that the manager may proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Do you remember drawing a contract dated September 5, 1911, signed by E. J. Williams, to W. P. Boland and a silent party?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object. All about that silent-party paper was asked of Mr. W. P. Boland and of Mr. Pryor, who was examined as a witness, and Miss Mary Boland was here at the time under subpæna of the managers and was not called and asked about that paper.

I submit that under such circumstances, unless there be some extraordinary and good reason for it, the case ought not now to be reopened for the purpose of starting the trial over again. Of course, it is a matter entirely within the discretion of the Senate, as it is of any court, to hear evidence at any stage of the case; but I have heard no reason why the managers, who knew all about the connection of the witness with reference who knew an about the confection of the writes with reference to that paper, when they were putting in their case, before we were called upon to reply, did not examine her then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has counsel finished?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This particular contract has been inquired about by the respondent, and evidence has been introduced in response to the evidence introduced by the managers. The Chair can not tell what question is going to be asked by managers; but witnesses on the part of the respondent have been asked as to this contract.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It is my recollection and that of my associates that we have not introduced a particle of evidence about the "silent party" contract.

Mr. Manager WEBB. You asked Mr. E. J. Williams about it, and brought out the response that he did not know anything about it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Oh, that was on cross-examination.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Certainly. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Williams is not our witness; he is the managers' witness.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We disclaim him.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You disclaim him? I did not know whether the remark was intended for me or for the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Chair to have the order which was just adopted by the Senate read again to see whether the case was opened simply for that subject matter or whether it was opened up for the whole

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The attention of the Chair has been called to the wording of the order. The Chair thinks the Senator from North Dakota is right in thinking that the order extended only to the notation made of the conversation at the particular time referred to.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes; I think that is true. My purpose was simply to ask this witness one or two questions about this contract, and finally dismiss her, without having to call her

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Consequently the witness will not now be examined upon any other matter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Is the witness to be retained? She is anxious to get away, and I ask on her account.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes; we do not excuse the witness at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is temporarily excused.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES E. HECKEL

James E. Heckel, being duly sworn, was examined, and testified as follows

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) What is your full name?-A. James E. Heckel.

Q. Where do you live?-A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your business?-A. Manufacturing.

Q. Manufacturing what?—A. Brass; mine and mill supplies. Q. Have you any connection with a family known here as the Everharts?-A. I have.

Q. In a brief way what is your relation to that family?—A. Administrator.

Q. Of whom?-A. Five twenty-fourths interest of the James Everhart heirs.

Q. And as such administrator have you at any time set up a claim to an interest in the Katydid culm dump near Moosic, Pa.?-A. I have.

Q. I wish you would look at "U. S. S. Exhibit E" in this case, a letter dated April 11, 1912, addressed to Capt. May of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and purporting to be signed by you as administrator; and I ask you whether that is your signature?—A. (After examination.) It is.

Q. Did you send that notice?—A. I did.
Q. I also show you another exhibit, "U. S. S. Exhibit P," in this case, being a letter of the same date, addressed to Robertson & Law, and purporting to be signed by you, and ask you if that is your signature?—A. (After examination.) That is.

Q. Will you tell us under what circumstances you sent those notices to Robertson & Law?—A. To protect the five twentyfourths interest that I represented in the Katydid dump.

Q. Were these notices mailed on the day they are dated?-A. They were mailed, I think, on the day they are dated.

Q. Why did you send those notices on that particular day? How did it happen?—A. Happen? On consultation with my bookkeeper, Mr. Holden, and myself we thought it was best to send them-not just at that time, but it happened to be that time-April 11.

Q. I wish you would tell us fully-because there is some question made here, I understand, about the honesty of these notices-how they happened to be sent on that day .- A. As a matter of business we sent the notices.

Q. But what brought the subject to your attention at that

Q. Who is Mr. Holden?—A. C. P. Holden, of Boston, Mass. Q. Who is he, and what is his connection with this business?—A. He represents a one twenty-fourth interest.

Q. Of the Everhart heirs?-A. His wife.

Q. His wife is one of the Everhart heirs?-A. Yes.

Q. Did you see him the day these letters were written?-A. I saw him that day.

Q. Where ?-A. In the office and at the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western depot in Scranton.

Q. In what office?—A. My office.
Q. What took place between you and him that resulted in the sending of these notices?—A. We thought it best to send the notices to the different parties who were selling the dump.

Q. What was said about the sale of the dump or the sale that was about to be made?-A. In what way?

Q. Well, you referred to selling the dump. I want to know what sale was talked about?—A. A sale of the Katydid dump on lot 46.

Q. The sale by whom?-A. By the Hillside and Robertson & Law.

Q. It was Mr. Holden, then, coming to your office that brought the matter to your attention at that time, was it?-A. He brought the matter to my attention then.

Q. At that time what did you know, if anything, of the investigation that was soon afterwards made public in regard to the conduct of Judge Archbald?-A. At that time, nothing; it had not come out then.

Q. When did you first hear in any way of the charges against Judge Archbald?—A. That was a month later, I think, and only by the papers.

Q. Only by the papers?—A. Only by the papers. Q. In what paper did you see it?—A. I think in the Scranton Tribune. It was in all the papers.

Q. Are you able to say, then, that when it first appeared in the Scranton papers was when you first learned about it?—A. That was about the first.

Q. About the time of these notices?-A. I could not give the exact date, but about that time. It was about a month after this notice was given.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to all this testimony. It can not possibly be material in this case. No one on this side of the case has intimated that he ever knew anything about it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. With that disclaimer, I have no further question to ask this witness on that subject.
Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) What is your name?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. But on another subject. Mr. Manager STERLING. Excuse me.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you have any dealings with Judge Archbald himself about this Katydid culm dump or your interest in it?-A. I did.

Q. Was that before or after these letters which I have just called your attention to were written?-A. Before.

Q. How long before?—A. Four months.

Q. What did you have to do with Judge Archbald about that Katydid dump or your interest in it?-A. He inquired of the heirs of that interest, who they were, their names, and ad-

Q. Did he make that inquiry of you?—A. He did.

Q. Did he tell you why he was making the inquiry?—A. In order to purchase the interest.

Q. Did he make any offer in reference to the interest?—A. There was no amount decided upon.

There was no amount decided upon.

Q. Did he say why he was making those inquiries, why he wanted to get that information?—A. No, sir; not just exactly.

Q. Just what did he say?—A. Well, what did he say?

Q. Yes; if you remember?—A. I think in order to buy the Katydid dump. I think so.

Q. Now, when he was making that proposition to you to buy the Katydid dump and if he could get the interest of the Everhart heirs, what, if anything, did he say about keeping quiet the fact that he was making this offer or having the conversation?—A. He did not say anything about keeping quiet tion?-A. He did not say anything about keeping quiet.

Q. Was any suggestion of any kind made not to speak about it to anybody?-A. Not that I know of.

Q. Do you know Capt. May?—A. I do. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not see any necessity of pursuing that in view of the disclaimer made by the managers a moment ago.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Your name is Heckel?-A. Yes, sir.
Q. You are administrator of the Everhart estate?—A. Of the Everhart estate.

Q. And Mr. Holden's wife is one of the Everhart heirs?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you and he talked about sending these notices. That was immediately after Holden had been down to Scranton? A. At the same time he was there.

Q. How?-A. We talked about these notices the same day they were sent.

Q. Do you live at Scranton?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do wish to ask the witness about the matter I started to ask him. Would the manager prefer that I should do it now or that I should wait until he gets through?

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will wait.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You say you know Capt. May?—A. I do.

Q. Did you have any communication with him of any kind before sending out these notices?—A. None whatever.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) But Mr. Holden did have communication with him, did he not?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did not Holden come to the office and tell you he had just been to Capt. May's office, and Capt. May told him they were about to sell this property?—A. He did not.

Q. Who was it first introduced the subject of sending these notices?-A. I think Holden.

Q. Who told you that the sale was pending?-A. The sale was pending, I learned from Judge Archbald.
Q. How is that?—A. I learned the sale was pending from Judge Archbald.

Q. When did you learn it was pending?-A. I think the last of December.

Q. And it was on the 11th of April-A. That the notices were given.

Q. And it was on the 11th of April that Holden went to May's office?-A. I do not know if he did.

Q. Do you know whether May sent for Holden to come down?-A. I do not.

Q. You do not know?-A. I do not.

Q. But you do know he was down there and talked with May?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did not Holden tell you he had been to May's office and May had talked about the contract that was then on his desk for the sale of this property to Bradley?—A. He did not.

Q. He did not tell you about that?-A. No, sir.

Q. How did you happen to write on the 11th, the day that contract was sent out?-A. By the consultation we had.

Q. You had the consultation on that day?-A. Yes; on

Q. And the consultation was just after Holden's visit to May's office?—A. If it was, I do not know anything about it. Q. Are you sure Holden did not tell you he had been to

Q. Are you sure Holden did not tell you he had been to May's office?—A. I am sure he did not.
Q. And May had told him that this was about to be consummated, and had the contract on his table?—A. He did not tell me that about his visit in the office.
Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.
Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Do you know anything about Mr. Holden's condition of health now?—A. I understand he is very sick very sick.

Q. He lives in Boston?—A. He lives in Boston.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I move to exclude that as irrelevant testimony, which has no bearing on this case. The PRESIDING OFFICER. This testimony, if objected to, must go out.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I wish to show why the witness is not here to-day. He has been subpœnaed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not the way to show it. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well; if the managers object, we will try to send evidential evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire. He is finally excused.

TESTIMONY OF WALTER S. BEVAN.

Walter S. Bevan appeared, and having been duly sworn was examined, and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Bevan, give your full name.—A. Walter S. Bevan.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Scranton, Pa. Q. What is your business?—A. Practicing attorney.

Q. Have you any relations with what are known as the Everhart heirs?—A. I represented Mr. Charles P. Holden, who is married to one of the Everhart heirs.

Q. You represented him as his attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Look at this paper [presenting paper], which is in evidence here, "U. S. S. Exhibit F," a letter, dated April 11, 1912, to Capt. May, purporting to be sent by you as attorney for Charles P. Holden. State whether that is your signature.—A. (Examining.) It is.

Q. Did you sign that letter and send it on the day it bears date?—A. I did.

Q. Why?-A. At the request of Mr. Charles P. Holden.

Q. Did he make any explanation as to the circumstances which he thought required the notice to be sent?-A. He told me that he had learned that the Hillside and the other interests in the Katydid culm bank were about to be sold. He said he m the Ratydid culm bank were about to be sold. He said he was in a hurry to go to New York, and asked me if I would not write these letters to Capt. May and Robertson and Law.

Q. Please look at "U. S. S. Exhibit O," in this case [presenting paper], and tell me whether that is a letter which you sent to Robertson & Law at the same time and with your signature as attorney?-A. (Examining paper.) It is.

Q. At that time what, if anything, did you know about the investigation or charges against Judge Archbald which have resulted in this trial? Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, we object to that as wholly immaterial.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You do not claim that he had an interest?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We do not claim it, and we never have claimed it

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. We are getting wiser as we go along, Mr. President.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Is that all you want to ask the witness?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) You say Mr. Holden first told you about this sale?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. He said he had just been down to May's office, and May told him about the closed deal with Bradley?-A. No; he did not say that.

Q. Where did he say he had learned it?-A. He did not say where he had learned it.

Q. Did you ask him where he had learned it?-A. I did not.

Q. That was on the 11th of April?-A. It was.

- Q. Did you learn afterwards that that was the day Holden went down there to May's office?-A. I did not. I did not know he had been there.
- Q. Did you learn that May had sent for Holden and told him that they were about to sell and he had better get these notices in?-A. I did not.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is finally excused. TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM A. MAY-CONTINUED.

William A. May was recalled.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Capt. May, is it a fact that you turned over some papers relating to this matter to the managers when you were here before the Judiciary Committee?—A. I did.

Mr. WORTHINGTON (to the managers). Have you the papers now, gentlemen?

Manager CLAYTON. Will you indicate them. Mr. Mr. Worthington?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I want all the papers that were turned over by Capt. May that relate to this matter of the Katydid dump.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Some of the papers have already been introduced in evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The blue print of the Katydid dump is the particular paper I was looking for.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We have just found that. be glad to oblige you by giving all of them to you. Will you indicate them? We have so many papers turned over to us that I do not recall just what papers Mr. May turned over.

Mr. WORTHINGTON (examining papers). This is a very large Katydid dump according to this map. It begins at Maine and ends in Missouri. I think it must be the wrong production.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I see this is a topographical map. Mr. Manager FLOYD (handing papers to Mr. Worthington). See if these are the papers.

Mr. WORTHINGTON (examining). These have been offered in evidence, have they not?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, we have looked through the papers here, and I think possibly the particular papers the counsel has referred to may be at the room of the Committee on the Judiciary. I have sent word to ascertain whether they are there or not, and as soon as I can get them, if I have them, they shall be produced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Can counsel proceed with other parts of the examination? The managers have indicated that they purpose to produce the papers if possible.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. It would be somewhat difficult, Mr. President. I probably can supply the place with a paper in the possession of another witness, Mr. President. (Robert W. Archbald, jr., left the Chamber and, returning, handed a paper to Mr. Worthington.)

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I wish you would look at this paper [presenting paper], which purports to be a map of the Katydid culm bank, and tell me if you recognize that and know whence it comes .- A. (Examining.) That is a sketch of the Katydid dump, I presume, from which the blue print was made that they are searching for.

Q. This is the original, then, from which that blue print was made?-A. So far as I know, it is the original sketch.

Q. Do you know who made that paper?—A. It was found among Mr. Merriman's papers, the man who made the survey of the dump.

Mr. Manager WEBB. The witness is not answering the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He says it was found among the papers of Mr. Merriman. [To the witness:] Mr. Merriman was what?-A. He was surveyor for the land department.

Q. Of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-A. Yes, sir; of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. He is now dead?—A. He is now dead.

Q. It was found among the papers in his office?-A. Yes;

among the papers in his office.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. May I not inquire of counsel whether the document now before the witness is not the original of the document of which the committee was furnished a copy?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes; we have stated that.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. You had that in your possession

Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am informed, however, I will say in reply to the suggestion my respected friend has just made. that there are notations on that blue print which was given to the managers which are not on the original. We would like to have it.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I think we will be able to produce the copy in a few moments.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I want to have that offered in evidence. Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, I believe we will object unless this witness knows who made it.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did Mr. Merriman at any time for you make an investigation as to the Katydid dump? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Wait a moment.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am not going on with the paper, but I want to lay a further foundation for the introduction of it. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel for the respondent will proceed.

- The Witness. What was the question? Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I ask you whether Mr. Merriman at any time for you or under your directions made an investigation of the Katydid dump to ascertain its cubical contents?-A. Mr. Merriman made an investigation at my direction.
- Q. And did he make any report to you?-A. The only report was the blue print that-

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. The WITNESS. We made no—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Wait a moment. What is the objection?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We do not object to that statement, but the witness was going on to state what the report was, as I understood it. That is what I object to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that the objection relates to the testimony as far as it has been elicited.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The fact about it, as I understand it, Mr. President, is that the blue print was what the official gave to his superior, Capt. May, and Capt. May says he has turned that paper over to the managers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is evidence already in. Mr. WORTHINGTON. And he finds the original, from which the official made the blue print. The managers said they would find the blue print, and when they have not found it they object to our using that which had been made.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We have not objected. We do not know the purport. We have just objected to the witness giving this report. That is all we objected to.

giving this report. That is all we objected to.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The purpose is to show the amount of material in the dump which was reported at that time by this official of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., who is now dead, and that investigation as has already appeared we made in connection with the proposal to sell this Katydid dump to the Du Pont Powder Co. [To the witness:] I am right about that, Capt. May, am I not?

The Wayness Evense me I did not get your question

The WITNESS. Excuse me, I did not get your question.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I say this examination and report was made with reference to this proposed sale to Judge Archbald and Mr. Williams. That is true, is it, Capt. May?-A.

Q. Did you see this paper at the time, after his investiga-tion?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. What he gave to you was a blue print?-A. It was a blue print.

Q. Was the blue print a copy of this? Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the witness can state whether it is a copy of that or not.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let me make sure, Mr. President. [To the witness:] That blue print, you say, you did turn over to the managers?-A. It was in my file that I turned over to

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We seem to be blocked. Evidently we have traced the paper into the hands of the managers and the managers say that they have it not, and they object to our using the original.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers expect to produce the copy in a short time.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I understand. I am not suggesting any concealment of anything on the part of the managers, of course. I should say we gave notice to the managers yesterday that we understood the papers had been turned over to them and that we would like to have them to-day.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Counsel did not specify yesterday what particular papers, but spoke in a general way, and we loaded down one messenger with every conceivable paper that I thought related to the subject and brought them here. Unfortunately, the particular paper now specified is not in the bundle that we have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Can the counsel for the respondent proceed further without the production of the paper?

- Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) When you were here before you testified as to the information you had showing 85,000 tons of material in this dump. Where did you get that?—A. I did not testify that we had $5,000; I testified $0,000.
- Q. Eighty thousand; I beg your pardon.—A. The S0,000 tons, that amount, I got from what Mr. Robertson said in his letter. The engineer had made an estimate of about 80,000 tons. Q. And who was that engineer?—A. The engineer I think he referred to was Yewens.

Q. So you only know as to that what Mr. Robertson and Mr. Yewens reported to him?—A. And Mr. Yewens reported to him.

- Q. Your testimony in that regard was based upon hearsay information?-A. It was based upon the information in that letter.
- Q. Did Yewens make any report to you?—A. He did not.
- Q. Was he in the employ of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.? A. He was.
- Q. How did he come then to make a report to Robertson and not to you?-A. He did Robertson's work as well as ours.
- Q. When you turned this blue print over to the managers were there any other papers attached to it?-A. I turned my file, that I had with me, over to them. I do not know now what papers were in it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think that is as far, Mr. President, as we can proceed with this witness until we learn whether the blue print can be produced.

to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the counsel for the respondent care to withdraw the witness temporarily and proceed with other matters?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes; Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. That being the case, the crossexamination had better be postponed until the witness can again be put upon the stand. He will retire temporarily.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Capt. May is very anxious to get away.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I have a suggestion to make to counsel which, I believe, will shorten all this matter. I procounsel which, I believe, will shorten all this matter. I propose that we put in the evidence the report made by the engineer, Rittenhouse; the report made by Mr. Saums, the Du Pont engineer; the report made by Mr. Marion, the Katydid engineer; and the report made by Mr. Yewens, who made the report for Robertson & Law. There are the reports of four The Rittenhouse report has been ruled out, and I engineers. suppose they had better all be ruled out; but I suggest that all four go in together in the record now, if counsel will agree

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I decline to accept that suggestion, Mr. President. The Rittenhouse report was ruled out as a report, but he was allowed to read from it to refresh his recollection, and it practically went in.

I find Capt. May exceedingly anxious to get away to-day, if that paper could be found.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Possibly within a few moments it can be produced.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We will proceed with Mr. Saums, whose testimony was interrupted when we adjourned day before

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I have now the papers which the counsel wanted. I deliver them [handing papers to Mr. Worthington]. There is the envelope addressed to Capt. May, with certain writing on it, and here is the blue print I presume you were talking about. In fact, this is the lot of papers that I suppose Capt. May referred to as his file; and they, together with the papers which have already been introduced in evidence, are all the papers that came into the possession of the committee or the managers from Capt. May that I can now recall. I think I may state as a fact that they are all. They are all, to my best recollection.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Capt. May, I now show you the paper which the managers have found [presenting paper], which purports to be a blue print representing the Katydid culm dump. I ask if that is the paper which your engineer gave to you as indicating, so far as it goes, what he found at the Katy-did culm dump?—A. (Examining.) That is the blue print that he turned in to me.

Q. And was that the paper before you and a part of the information upon which you acted?-A. It was,

Q. When you wrote the letter of August 30, stating that you would recommend the sale of your company's interest in that dump for $4,500?—A. It was.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I offer that in evidence.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Let me see it, please, Mr. Worthington.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You have had time enough to see it.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I know, but it is some time since we examined it critically. Give us the jacket the papers were in.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to the introduction of the blue print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear from counsel for the respondent, if he desires.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, the claim here is that Capt. May, because of Judge Archbald's position on the Commerce Court, agreed to recommend the sale of this dump for less than it was worth. Is it not competent to show what Capt. May had before him when he said he would make the recommendation, so that the Senate may determine whether it was made in good faith or with a view of giving a benefit to Judge Archbald? So far as article 1 is concerned, this is the gist of the whole matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel is undoubtedly entitled to show by the witness that he made the report or based his action, whatever that might be, upon the fact that he received information from a certain party; but the rule does not go to the extent of saying that that information can be introduced in evidence. If that were the case, any secondary evidence would always be introduced. The fact that some one acted upon that report does not make it evidence any more than the report of any other man would be evidence. It may be a reason why he acted, but that does not go to the extent of saving that the paper itself should be put in evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, if this report had shown that Capt. May was informed by his engineer that this culm dump was of such kind and quality and size that it was worth $100,000, would it not be competent for the managers to put it in evidence to show that he did not make that recom-mendation to sell it for $4,500 in good faith? The mere fact that that report was made upon it helps us in no wise to determine whether Capt. May was acting in good faith or bad faith, unless we know what the information was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not think that secondary evidence may be gotten in in that way. The only object of the evidence at all is in explanation of why a certain thing was done by a witness, as illustrated by the books as referred to by the Chair on another occasion of this trial. A witness may say that, in consequence of certain information given to him by a certain party, he went to a certain place; but he can not state what that statement was. It would be the introduction of secondary evidence, if he did.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think, perhaps, the indication of the Chair prevents me from asking the question in any form, but I should like, in order to make sure of that, to put it in another form. [To the witness.] Capt. May, I will ask you the question in another way, but you will not answer until you find out whether you are permitted to answer it. I want to ask, when you said in your letter of August 31, 1911, in evidence, to Mr. Williams that you would recommend the sale of the interest of your company in the Katydid culm dump for $4,500, what was your knowledge at that time as to quantity of material in that dump?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks counsel can ask the witness whether or not he knew it of his own knowledge, but secondary evidence can not be gotten in by that form of question.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Well, captain, what did you know of your own knowledge about the Katydid dump?-A. I had seen the dump. I had never made a measurement of it. I had seen it a number of times, but took no measurement of any kind.

Q. You had made no measurement of any kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you formed, from your examination of it, any estimate as to the quantity of material in it?—A. I did not. Q. None at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you made that recommendation, then, you were guided entirely by information you had received from your engineers, were you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the question of whether you made it in good faith or bad faith depends upon that information?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the question?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is a question of law, perhaps. If that is the ruling of the Chair, and the Senate does not think it of sufficient importance—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are four reports here, and it is sought to introduce one of them as evidence simply because it has been seen by this witness.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I am not concerned about what was in that dump, but I am concerned about what Capt. May thought was in it and what his information was when he agreed-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness has testified fully as to that, that he did not act upon his own personal knowledge.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not know of anything else I can ask this witness, Mr. President, under the rule which has been laid down.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, is it in order to submit an order that this evidence be admitted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. OLIVER. I submit the order, which I send to the desk. The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it is the desire of the Senate that the question be submitted, it is not necessary to pass an order. The Chair will submit it to the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I suggest that the question desired to be asked by the counsel for the respondent be submitted to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit to the Senate, at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the question whether or not the paper now offered in evidence shall be admissible in evidence.

Mr. OLIVER. It is only, Mr. President, for the purpose of showing the basis upon which he made his offer of $4,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the right of the Senate, and the Chair will always submit a question when any Senator so desires.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to make an inquiry. Is this one of the four reports?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is one.

Mr. LODGE. Have all the reports been admitted? The PRESIDING OFFICER. None has been.

Mr. OLIVER. But, Mr. President, if I may be allowed to state, as I understand this is the only report that was submitted to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to discuss the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. May I state to the Senate what is the purpose of this question?

Yes. The PRESIDING OFFICER.

WORTHINGTON. The purpose of this question is to have the Senate see the only report which was before this witness, which was the report of his proper officer, made after investigation, under his direction, for the purpose of letting him know what this dump was worth before he decided what he would ask for it. The Rittenhouse report, which has been referred to, was made long afterwards by instructions of somebody representing the Department of Justice. No one of them was before him or known to him at the time that he made this recommendation or agreed to make a recommendation. We offer the report which was made to him by his engineer for the purposes of showing that he acted honestly, in good faith, when he made the recommendation that he did.

It will be remembered—and the Senate must remember this in order to pass intelligently upon the question—that when Judge Archbald wrote his letter of the 31st of March to Capt. May, asking him whether the dump would be sold; and if so, at what figure, Capt. May has already testified that he then directed an investigation to be made so that he might know what the dump was worth. This is the result of the first the country was a result. what the dump was worth. This is the result of that examina-tion accordingly made and submitted to Capt. May by his officer. After receiving that, he then decided what in his mind was a proper sum to ask for the dump. The other reports have nothing to do with the question whether in making that recommendation or agreeing to make it he acted in good faith or in bad faith.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I trust I may be permitted to say word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager will proceed. Mr. Manager STERLING. Counsel say that the question is whether Mr. May acted in good faith. The question is not whether Mr. May acted in good faith, but, although we have said all along whether he was paying less or more than the dump was worth was not material, if we go into the question of the value of the dump, the question is what Judge Archbald thought about it, whether, by committing the offense which is charged in the article—that is, unduly influencing these railroad companies to sell the dump—he expected to make a profit out of it. It is not a question as to what Mr. May thought about it at all; the only question is, if we are going into the value of the dump, whether Judge Archbald thought he was getting it for less than it was worth. Mr. May is not on trial at all. If there is any question that is important here as to the value of this dump, it is to find out the real value of the dump, and we can best get it from all of these reports.

It was suggested yesterday by counsel on the other side that this Rittenhouse report was manufactured for the purpose of evidence, and it was proven on the witness stand that Mr. Rittenhouse did not know for whom he was making the report

I suggest, in all fairness, that if this report goes in, all of these other three reports should also go in. We have made the proposition to let them all go in, and I trust that the Senate will permit the other three reports to go in in the same connection, so that the Senate can see side by side the estimates of these three engineers.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I do not know what reports the honorable manager is speaking of, except three. So far as the Rittenhouse report is concerned, Mr. Rittenhouse, with his report before him, read into the record its contents, refreshing his recollection by having the report before him.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Then, may I state, the other two?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let me finish. Another report was one made by Mr. Saums, who investigated the dump for the purpose of informing the Du Pont Powder Co. as to what it was worth when that company proposed to buy it early in 1909. We have Mr. Saums on the stand now, with this interruption, for the purpose of putting that report in evidence.

The third report is the one which is now before this witness, which we are proposing to put in evidence. If there is any other I do not know what it is.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I merely want to say to the counsel that the other two reports are the report made by Mr. Saums for the Du Pont Powder people when they were about to buy it and the report made by Yewens.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Where is Yewens's report.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Your witness just testified about it awhile ago. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Just one moment on this point, please. Perhaps this matter can be settled right here. Capt. May has testified that his officer, Yewens, made an investiga-tion of this dump for Mr. Robertson, and made a report to Mr. Robertson, he being also in the employ of Robertson. That report has not been produced. It is not in evidence and nobody has seen it, so far as I know.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Then, confine it to the other three reports, if that report can not be had.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have just stated that the Rittenhouse report is already in evidence. We have Mr. Saums here for the purpose of putting his report in evidence, and had offered it day before yesterday, when the managers asked to examine the report before they passed on the question of whether they would object to it; and this is the third one.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, the counsel is entirely mistaken about the Rittenhouse report being in evidence. We offered it, but it was objected to and ruled out.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As to the material in the dump and the value thereof?

Mr. Manager STERLING. The written report which we are presenting and have here now.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. He made a report on a good many other things besides the value and material of the dump. far as that is concerned, we have no objection at all to his report. He has already testified fully in regard to it.

Mr. Manager STERLANG. Then, what do you say about Mr.

Saums's report?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I had Mr. Saums on the stand for the purpose of putting his report in evidence, but it was objected to by the managers, and the matter held up here the night before last until they could examine the reports.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Then, I understand counsel accepts the proposition to put the Rittenhouse report, the Saums report—that is, the report Saums made after his investiga-tion—and the report of Mr. Merriman in the record.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the manager confines himself to the report Rittenhouse made as to the quality and quantity of material in this dump and its value, we consent

Mr. Manager STERLING. If there is anything else in the report except that we might, on inspection, strike out some of it, but it relates to that matter entirely. It was made for no other purpose than to find the value of the dump.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have stated, Mr. President, what we are perfectly willing to do, what we understand is proposed, and what we understand is practically done, that the Rittenhouse report as to the quantity of material in that dump and its value, if it is not in evidence, shall go in evidence. I am about to offer the Saums report in evidence, and had Mr. Saums on the stand for that purpose when interrupted, and this is the third report which we are now offering.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, here is the report which Mr. Rittenhouse made. It covers the subject and nothing also.

ing else. It all goes to the value of the dump, the quantity of coal in it, and the different grades of coal.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I find, Mr. President, on examination, that a matter which I had supposed was in the Rittenhouse report is not in it; so we have no objection to the whole report going in, but we had supposed that it was already in substance before the Senate.

Mr. Manager STERLING. It is just as he made it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Mr. Manager STERLING. Then, Mr. Saums's last report and the report of Mr. Merriman-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I propose to examine Mr. Saums on direct examination and will bring his report in in connection with his testimony.

Mr. Manager STERLING. In order that the Presiding Officer and the Senate may understand our proposition, it will be remembered that Mr. Saums made two reports. One was after he had gone out and stepped the dump and then estimated it. We object to that report. He afterwards measured the dump definitely and tested it mechanically. As to that report, we have no objection.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well; but as to the first report he has already testified, and we were about to prove the second one when the interruption occurred day before yesterday

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it agreed that the four reports shall go in?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The three reports. There is no fourth report.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. Yewen's report does not seem

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then it is agreed that the three reports shall go into the record?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is agreed.

Mr. Manager STERLING. It is agreed that those three reports shall be admitted.

Mr. OLIVER. I withdraw the order which I submitted, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania withdraws the order submitted by him, and the three reports will be put into the record.

Mr. Manager STERLING. With the understanding that it does not apply to the first report which Mr. Saums made.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is already in evidence.

Mr. Manager STERLING. The report is not in evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. His figures are. Mr. Manager STERLING. He testified from it, but the report was not submitted as an exhibit.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Now, may I have this blue print [exhibiting] marked as an exhibit?

The paper was handed to the Secretary and marked "U.S.S. Exhibit V."

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This map, Mr. President, contains what purport to be the outlines of the Katydid culm dump, with a number of figures which I will not read, and below is the in-Katydid culm dump, near Consol, BR. Avoca, Pa., April 15, 1911. Estimate, 55,000 gross tons (available), exclusive of slush, rock, dirt, etc., of no value, as per Mr. Johnson, inspector.

To Mr. Manager Sterling.] Do you want to see this?

Mr. Manager STERLING. I want it when I cross-examine. Mr. Manager CLAYTON (to Mr. Worthington). Are you through with the witness?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, that is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, you testified before the Judiciary Committee that there were from 80,000 to 85,000 gross tons in this culm dump, did you not?-A. I stated that an engineer made an estimate of 80,000 tons.

Q. You meant Merriman?—A. No.

Q. You did understand, then, that an engineer had estimated it at 80,000 tons?—A. Yes, sir; that was based upon-Q. What does that mean—80,000 gross tons?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. One moment, Mr. President, the witness was in the midst of answering the question when the manager interrupted him with another.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question was answered, and the witness went on as to another matter. The manager desires to interrogate him on that particular line. The witness will have an opportunity before he gets through to state fully anything he wishes.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I did not think the manager knew the witness was still answering the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the witness started on an explanation.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) You read the notation on the bottom of this plat marked "Exhibit V," did you not?—A. I

Q. And it says "estimate 55,000 gross tons." By "gross tons" did you understand is meant all the material in the bank?-A. I did.

Q. Well, do you not think that has a different meaning here?—A. No; I do not think it has.

Q. All the material in the bank means the rock, the dirt, the slush, the coal, and the slate, does it not?-A. I think he referred to-

Q. I am not asking what he referred to, but in ordinary lan-guage, when you speak of gross tons, it means everything in the culm dump, including dirt and everything else?—A. No, sir.
Q. What does it mean?—A. What he meant——

Q. I am not asking you what he meant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness ought to be permitted to answer.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I did not ask him that question. My question is what does it ordinarily mean?

The Witness. It ordinarily means a ton of 2,240 pounds. Q. And the term "gross material in the bank" includes all of it, does it not?-A. It would include 55,000 tons of material of 2,240 pounds to the ton.

Q. Do you not think it has a different meaning here for this reason? The notation is "Estimate 55,000 gross tons (available)"?—A. No; I do not.

Q. He means that there are 55,000 gross tons of coal, does he not?-A. No; I do not think so.

Q. Then, let us add the next clause, "Exclusive of slush, rock, dirt, etc., of no value."—A. Well, he meant—
Q. Taking that in connection with the "55,000 gross tons (available)" it means that he thought that there were 55,000 gross tons of coal; do you not think so?—A. No, sir.
Q. When you exclude the "slush, rock, dirt, etc., of no value," what else is there left in the dump?—A. Culm.

Q. What is culm?—A. Culm is the material that is made from breaking down the coal.

Q. Well, do they not generally call that slush?-A. No, sir. Q. So you think that includes everything, then, except what you call the culm? It is fine coal, is it not?—A. Fine coal.

Q. And it is used?—A. It is sized and marketed.
Q. And used and marketed, is it not?—A. Yes.
Q. So you think he means there 55,000 tons, exclusive of everything in the dump, excepting the culm?—A. He means 55,000 tons of culm. Q. How is that?-A. In my opinion, he means 55,000 tons of culm; that is before it is sized. It is the gross material. Q. Not including rock?-A. No, sir; not including rock.

Q. Not including dirt?—A. Nor including dirt. Q. It includes all the coal material?—A. All the coal material.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you understand by that that there were 55,000 tons of coal there which could be utilized and sold?-A. Of culm before it was sized.

Q. What percentage of that would be waste? How does it run in these dumps?—A. It runs differently in different dumps. Mr. Johnson's test shows just how much slush there would be in it. They call it that; it is the material that would pass through a three thirty-second inch mesh; that would be waste, and that was included in this.

Q. That was included?—A. Yes.

- Q. Mr. Johnson has given us the figures as to what proportion of this 55,000 tons would be material that could be sold?-A. I think that is in evidence.
- Q. I know it is. Now, did you talk with Mr. Merriman when he made this report to you?—A. Not particularly. I took his report because we always make our reports in gross—I mean taking the entire culm bank-and I took that as the quantity there.
- Q. When you received that, you understood it to mean 55,000 tons of culm?—A. I did.

Q. And not 55,000 tons of coal?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. The witness has just said that that meant all coal material in the culm.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes; but I submit, Mr. President, that is not fair to the witness, because, while he says it means culm, he says a large part of that would be waste which would not be available at all. That is what you say, is it not, Capt. May?

A. Yes; that it is culm; but in that culm there would be material that would pass through a three-thirty-second-inch mesh which we could not market. That means the gross amount of culm. I can not make it any plainer than that.

Recross-examination:

- Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) But this report of your engineer says 55,000 tons are available. That is what you had before you when you made this offer, is it not—that 55,000 gross tons were available?—A. Of culm; not of marketable material.
- Q. What does he mean by "available," Mr. May?-A. Well, I understood that he meant material that could be used.

 Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Capt. May.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is an, capt. May.
The Witness. May I be excused?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. So far as we are concerned, we will be very glad to have Capt. May finally discharged.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do the managers desire that the witness shall be detained further?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness may be discharged, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is finally discharged.

TESTIMONY OF H. W. SAUMS-CONTINUED.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Now, we should like to have Mr. Saums recalled, if we may.

H. W. Saums, having been previously sworn, was recalled and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Will you look at this letter, dated February 12, 1900, purporting to bear your signature, and addressed to Mr. Henry Belin, jr., president of the E. I. Du Pont Powder Co.? Is that your signature?—A. (After examining letter.) It is; yes, sir.
Q. Is that the letter which you sent to Mr. Belin at that time, after you had made an investigation of the Katydid dump?-

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will show you another paper dated February 12, 1909, addressed "Dear Sir" only, and purporting to be signed by you. Is that your signature and your report in this matter?-A. (After examining paper.) Yes, sir.

Q. I show you another paper, without date, which is entitled "Estimate of different sizes of coal and value of same contained in the Katydid culm dump," purporting to have your signature. Is that your signature?—A. (After examining paper.) It is;

Q. Do these several papers contain the result of your investigations into the Katydid dump or only the result of the first investigation and not the second?-A. This last [indicating] has reference to the second examination that I made, and this [indicating] has reference to the first.

Q. That is the letter to Mr. Belin of February 12, 1909, and the paper addressed "Dear Sir" of that date referred to the first investigation .- A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Now, Mr. President, conforming to our understanding of a few moments ago, I first offer in evidence his report after the second examination, as to which we agreed.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is included in the agreement. We do not object to that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Then I will ask to have that marked and read now, and then we will see whether we can get the rest of it in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the paper, marked "U. S. S. Exhibit W," as follows:

H. W. SAUMS.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Saums, from your investigation of this dump and your knowledge of the subject, what do you say as to whether or not that dump at the time you made that investigation which resulted in the report just read was one that would pay to put a washery to work?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. It is wholly imma-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I suppose the question whether this dump was worth anything would depend, in the first place, upon the material in it and the value of that material, and then what it would cost to get it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon that the witness would be justified in testifying as to what he thought was the value of the dump, and he could give as his reason the amount of material to be found there and the cost of extracting it. other words, the Chair thinks the question of counsel asks him to testify to a conclusion. He ought to state the facts and let the Senate find the conclusion.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I am asking him what would be the cost of a proper washery to take out that dump and wash the material in it.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that that is legitimate. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Answer my question .- A.

Shall I answer that question?

Q. Yes; the President rules that you may answer the question.—A. May I ask whether you refer to the washery alone or the complete plant?

Q. I mean the complete plant.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will answer the question as asked.

Q. I mean whatever construction would be necessary to get the coal that is merchantable out of the material that was not merchantable, separate it, and have it ready to sell .- A. In the neighborhood of $35,000.

Q. Have you given any consideration to the question of a scraper line to take that material—you have seen the consolidated washery near the Katydid dump?-A. Yes.

Q. You know all about that situation, do you?-A. I am somewhat familiar with the location there; yes, sir.

Q. Have you made any calculation as to whether or not a scraper line from the Katydid dump could be utilized in connection with that Consolidated washery?-A. Oh, yes; it could be done. What would the cost of a conveyer line be from the Katydid bank to the consolidated breaker?

Q. Yes; that is the first question.—A. About $4.50 a foot. In other words; between eight and ten thousand dollars.

Q. And that scraper line would be valuable for what when you got through with it?-A. Scrap, generally.

Would you require anything but the mere track itself?-A. Yes. The $8,000 to $10,000 would be exclusive of the pump

- and water pipes.

 Q. Well, what would the whole thing cost? I mean, to do whatever was necessary to get the culm from the Katydid dump to the Consolidated washery.—A. Between $10,000 and
- Q. Do you know whether or not when you get the coal there to the Consolidated washery it is equipped to get out the larger sizes of coal above pea?-A. I do not.

Q. You do not know?-A. No.

Q. In the calculation that you have made in the report which is in evidence, "U. S. S. Exhibit W," what size mesh did you have in mind when you put the item "barley" at 18,873 tons?— A. Through three-sixteenths round and over one-sixteenth

Q. Is that the customary size of the mesh?-A. It is what we

Q. There is another subject I wish to ask you about, Mr. Saums, and that is as to what extent, if at all, you can get out chestnut coal-coal of the chestnut size and above-in a dump like this, or in this particular dump?—A. You can get a certain per cent of chestnut, but not prepared so it will enter into com-

- petition with freshly mined chestnut.
 Q. Why is that?—A. Owing to its appearance. The larger size—nut coal—for instance, made from the washery is composed largely of different grades of bone with some pure coal, of course, and it carries a much larger per cent of ash than the freshly mined coal. Therefore we have never found it practicable to prepare this coal clean enough to have it compete with freshly mined coal. We sell it for from 75 cents to $1 a ton less than the circular price for freshly mined coal of that size.
- Q. I notice in this report of yours, which is in evidence, you have put this "coal larger than pea, 3,164 tons," at $1.80. Why do you put it at $1.80, in view of what you have just said?—A.

 In making that report for Mr. Belin he gave me to understand that he did not wish to erect a washery there, but he wished to use this fuel for a power plant he proposed to locate back across the hill.

Q. Of the Du Pont Powder Co.?-A. Yes, sir. And he wanted to use this material-coal, slate, and culm all mixed togetherand he asked me to put a value on it. Therefore I had to classify it to a certain extent, you see.

Q. In reference to his use?—A. In reference to his use; yes.

Q. If you were computing it with reference to putting it on the market generally-A. (Interrupting.) I would have computed it as per my first report.

Q. And what would that be?-A. $2.30, I believe I used for

Q. Suppose the scraper line to have been constructed as you have estimated, from the Katydid dump to the consolidated washery, what would be the cost of operation? You have told us now what would be the cost of the construction required to get the coal from the Katydid dump to the consolidated washery. What would be the cost of operation per ton?—A. I think 30 cents would be about right.

Q. According to your estimate that would cost how much-30 cents a ton for how many tons? Let us see what the ultimate result would be.—A. (After calculation.) $15,685.50.

Q. Does that estimate include the cost of operating the

- scraper line or the scraper line and the washery, both?-A. That includes all of the operating expense.
- Q. Now, in reference to the map to which you referred yesterday, you see in the southwest corner of it, as it hangs on the wall, is a part called the conical dump. Do you see that?-A. Yes.
 - Q. Did you include that in your estimate?-A. Yes.
- Q. As of the same average quality as the rest of it?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. You knew nothing, as a matter of fact, as to what was in the core of that conical dump?-A. No, sir; I did not. I assumed that everything that could be seen was coal.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) And if your assumption was correct, and according to the testimony in the case, you think that your estimate of the amount of the coal in that conical dump is correct, do you not?-A. According to my test;

Q. You did not test the material that was down in the draw there, did you? The testimony is that they filled up a draw There was a fill there under the conical dump. You there.

did not test anything down there?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you did not estimate for it, did you?—A. No, sir; because I knew nothing about it.

Q. You made this investigation for the Du Pont Powder Co.?—A. For Mr. Belin, of the Du Pont Powder Co.; yes, sir. Q. And at that time the Du Pont Powder Co. was a prospective purchaser?—A. I presumed so.

Q. And you estimated the value of this coal at what you thought it would be worth to them for their use?-A. I estimated what I thought it would be worth on the ground, the cost of picking it up.

Q. I understood you to say that this coal, which you estimated at $1.80 a ton, would be worth $2.30 on the market? -A.

Yes, sir.

Q. It would be worth 50 cents more a ton, would it, on the market than your estimate here?-A. Allow me to explain, if I may.

Q. Answer my question first and then you may explain. Is that what I am to understand?—A. Not in that size, sir.

Q. The size that you have estimated at $1.80, I understand you say, would be worth $2.30 on the market; is that right?—A. That represents sizes from what we call broken—

Q. I am not asking you what sizes. But this coal which in your report you estimated at $1.80, for the Du Pont Powder Co. purposes, you would consider worth $2.30 on the market?—
A. If it was reduced to nut coal; yes, sir.

- Q. Now you may make any explanation you see fit about sizes.—A. Very well, sir. This coal larger than pea is composed of various sizes, from what we call steamer and broken size down to nut size. In washery practice, all these sizes, promiscuously, are run through a set of rolls and reduced down to nut. We do not find it practicable to make any size larger than put coal from a washery. In this process of wind larger than nut coal from a washery. In this process of grinding a great deal of it, of course, is reduced into small sizes, and some goes off in dirt, in waste. That is why I made that difference of 50 cents—the difference between $1.80 and $2.30 a ton.
- Q. And you say chestnut coal is not worth so much when you get it from a culm dump as when you get it from the mine?— A. No. sir.
- Q. That it is worth 75 cents to $1 less per ton on account of its appearance. Now, what was chestnut worth at that time in Scranton from the mine?-A. I can not answer that question. The circular price at that time was about $3 a ton, I think.
- Q. About $3 a ton there?—A. At tide; I am speaking of tide. Q. Mr. Saums, you have divided the culm dump into two parts. I wish you would add the percentages in both parts, of everything except what you have marked as slate. That is, all the different kinds of coal; add the percentages in both parts. What is the percentage of coal in the old part, that which you have marked the old part of the culm; what is the total of the percentages of coal material in the old part of the dump, according to your report?-A. I do not think I understood you right at first.
 Q. Well, I will ask you to add the percentages.—A. The total percentage is 100 per cent.

Q. I said of the coal; I said excepting slate.-A. Oh, I beg your pardon.

Q. Just deduct the slate from 100.—A. All right, sir.

Q. How much is the percentage in the old part?-A. 82.30 per cent.

Q. What is the percentage in the new part?-A. Sixty-seven per cent.

Q. What is the total number of tons of coal in both parts, according to your report; that is, of everything—of all the kinds of coal material in the dump?—A. Exclusive of the—

Q. Exclusive of the slate. That is the only thing you marked there as waste, I think. How many tons of coal are there in the dump, according to your report?—A. In both dumps?

Q. In both of them together?-A. (After calculation.) 52,285 tons.

Redirect examination:

(By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Does that mean coal or culm ?-A. Coal.

Q. Can you tell us what proportion of that would be of a size under pea?-A. Seventy-six and a fraction per cent of that would be under pen size. Mr. WORTHINGTON.

That is all. Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. This witness may be discharged, as far as we are concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness is discharged finally.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Now, we will call Mr. Jennings. TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH P. JENNINGS-RECALLED.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Since you were upon the stand have you obtained the original figures of the engineer who made the estimate upon which you based your figures?-A. Yes, sir: I have.

Q. Have you it with you?-A. I have the notebook.

Whose figures are those; whose book?-A. That book was used by Mr. Merriman.

Q. Where did you get it?-A. I sent to Scranton and got it from the office.

Q. From the Hillside Co.'s office, where you were employed?-A. Yes.

Q. From where he was employed?-A. Yes.

Q. I wish you would go on with the calculation you were making when you were on the stand and was stopped because we did not have the original document here. Have you gone over his figures?-A. I had that map.

Q. That is the map of which a blue print copy is in evidence.-A. And Mr. Merriman's notes as he made them on the field at the time he made the survey of the dump.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The map to which the witness refers is the one identified by Capt. May, which was left at the office of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. when Mr. Merriman died. Mr. Manager STERLING. We object to this witness testify ing from those notes, for the reason that we have Mr. Merriman's report in there, and this is purely secondary evidence. He does not know whether they are correct or not. Inasmuch as Mr. Merriman's report itself is in evidence, I can see no purpose in offering any secondary testimony, even if it was competent.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If the objection is insisted upon, as I understand, Mr. President, we will have to ask the witness to step down once more and take that blue print, which the witness could not use because it was in the possession of the managers, and have him go over the calculation which he has made, based on the plat from which the blue print was made and the original figures. The question was made in the cross-examination of Capt. May by the manager who has just been speaking for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the 55,000 tons reported by Mr. Merriman on the blue print, or stated on the blue print, was coal. This witness has gone over the figures which Mr. Merriman put upon his map and which are upon the blue print of the dump, and has gone over the calculations to verify them. He has made the calculation himself, and finds that it means the cubical contents of the pile and not the coal. He has found some slight errors in the calculation, making the total cubic content of it a little more than that figured out by Mr. Merriman himself on the blue print which is in evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. And, further, that Mr. Jennings has testified already that he went upon the ground himself and examined the dump, so that he is in a position to determine with absolute certainty the question whether 55,000 means coal or means culm.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is a different question, what he saw personally. The other question puts them in this attitude-of putting in the report of Mr. Merriman, the engineer, and then he being dead they bring some one else on to contradict him; and it being purely secondary evidence, we object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness could be used to testify to anything on that paper which is in

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not understand the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness can be interrogated as to any matter on the paper which is already in evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Then we will ask him to step aside and give him that paper, and ask him to make his calculation from that paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course, so far as his calculations are based on any paper in evidence, he can testify to that. The Chair does not think that loose notes are admissible. There is no evidence that those are the notes on which the cal- rect?-A. Yes, sir.

culation was based. They may or may not be. It would be secondary evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Without pressing that matter now, and without abandoning our claim that the book might be put in evidence, we will pass the matter until he has an opportunity to look at the blue print in evidence and see whether we can get along with that and without the other.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I will say to the counsel that we shall certainly object to this witness interpreting what is on the blue print. The Chair and the Senate can interpret that as well as the witness. We shall certainly object to that testimony.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Here is a memorandum at the bottom of the blue print, which says "55,000 tons available"; and the man who made it is not alive, and the managers contend that it means 55,000 tons of coal, Capt. May says that the notation on it means 55,000 tons of crim, and this engineer, having the figures from which the calculation was made, has gone over it and can show it means culm and not coal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The figures founded on that report, of course, are subject to examination, but not otherwise, in the opinion of the Chair, and the calculations can be made by counsel and used in the argument as well as if produced by the witness

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) While the witness is here there is another matter about which I wish to examine him. You have examined this dump, Mr. Jennings?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you make an examination of it and in what way?—A. Do you mean an examination as to this map?

Q. No; I mean the dump itself. Did you go on the ground and examine the Katydid dump itself?—A. Yes, sir; I went there over a year ago with Mr. May, and I went there in November of this year. Mr. Manager WEBB. I think the witness has testified to that already

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That was my recollection, but my associate thought he had not.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think he had.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) How long ago was your last visit?-A. Two or three days before Thanksgiving Day.

Q. You had information at that time that there were 55,000 tons of culm in it?

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I want to ask him if he made a calculation as to the portion of culm, assuming that it was culm.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the question?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The question is, from the examination this witness made of the pile, assuming that there were 55,000 tons of culm in it, what proportion of it was coal of different sizes and what proportion was culm. It is in evidence that there were 55,000 tons of something there, according to the report of a man who is dead, and it is a question for the Senate to pass upon, probably, whether that means 55,000 tons of culm, as Capt. May says he understood it, or 55,000 tons of available coal, as the managers seem to contend. We have a right, and I am only asking this witness

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may testify as to anything within his own knowledge.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are asking him upon an examination made of the dump to testify as to the proportions of the different kinds of coal in it. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of his own knowledge?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes, Mr. Manager STERLING. The question involves this: The counsel asked the witness to assume that there were 55,000 cons of gross material, and for him to make an estimate on that assumption is simply for the witness to interpret the meaning of the report made by Mr. Merriman, in which he undertakes to assume that that was gross material, when, as we insist, the report plainly shows it was available coal. For him to make an estimate of the coal on the assumption that that report means that there were 55,000 tons of gross material would simply be interpreting that for the Senate which we say the Senate themselves must interpret.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness ought to limit his testimony to what he knows from his own knowledge of the case.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Perhaps we can work this out. [To the witness:] Did you have this paper with you when you went on the dump?—A. I did.

Q. Did you find stakes there?-A. I did.

Q. Agreeing with those indicated on the map?—A. I did. I found nearly all of them. There are one or two I could not find, but I found nearly all of them.

Q. So you are able to say that the map is substantially cor-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I offer that map in evidence.
Mr. Manager STERLING. It is offered in evidence?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes. The witness says he took it to the dump and saw the stakes there and compared them with those on the map, and he told us of his own knowledge that the map is substantially correct. I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the ground of the objection?

jection?

Mr. Manager STERLING. For the reason that this witness testified he has no knowledge. He only found that in the office of the engineer. We think that because a man found certain stakes on this culm dump, and the stakes are correct as indicated on the map, does not indicate anything about whether the map is correct otherwise or not. It is purely secondary evi-You are proving a map by some one who knows nothing dence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the witness must prove the correctness of the map, as to the measurements and everything else, if the map is to be introduced in evidence.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) To what extent, Mr. Jennings, can you state whether that map is or is not a correct representation of the dump?-A. I took these notes and worked

Mr. Manager WEBB. The notes are not in evidence and have been excluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may testify as to whether or not he has verified all the details of the map, and if

A could not go and measure all those distances.

One of the mass that the three of the map of the m

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless he has done so, the map is not admissible in evidence. If he has, it is.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Let us see the memorandum book. [To the witness, handing book:] Do you know whether or not that is in the handwriting of Mr. Merriman and that is the book he kept while in the performance of his duties?-A. (Examining.) Yes, sir; that is the book.

Q. It was his custom to make those entries at that time?-

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the course of his business, at the time he made the inestigations?—A. Yes, sir; that is the book. He itemized it. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think, under all the rules of evivestigations?-

dence, that book, being a record made in the course of the performance of the duties of Mr. Merriman while making this investigation, and which were among his papers found in the office of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. after his death, is competent evidence of the facts stated in it just as much as the book entries of a bookkeeper or a record of marriages made by one whose business it was to keep an account of marriages or the performance of any other thousand and one things for which books are put in evidence to prove the truth of the facts stated

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that it is perfectly competent for parties who desire to prove the correctness of that map to have those measurements verified by a living witness, and unless that is done, in the opinion of the Chair, the map is not admissible in evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. • Very well. That is all, Mr. Presi-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not a case of proof as to a matter which rested within the knowledge of somebody now dead and where the proof could not be made by others. perfectly competent to have the measurement now made to verify that map.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. Jennings. I should like to have it understood that this witness is not discharged. The PRESIDING OFFICER. He will be so notified.

TESTIMONY OF V. L. PETERSEN.

V. L. Petersen appeared and, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Petersen, your full name, please.—A. V. L. Petersen.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Scranton, Pa.

Q. What is your business?—A. Mining and real estate.

Q. Mining what?—A. Coal.

Q. In what department of mining have you been engaged?-All departments.

Q. Including washeries?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you any personal knowledge of the Consolidated washery, which is situated in the neighborhood of the Katydid culm dump?-A. That was built after I left the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. When were you connected with the Consolidated, or with the Hillside, so that you knew about the operations of the Consolidated?-A. Up until 1909-June, 1909.

Q. How many years had you been there prior to June, 1909?— I had been in the employ of the Hillside Iron Co. for something better than 25 years.

Q. Did you have charge of that particular plant, the Consolidated?-A. It is one of the plants I had charge of.

Q. Were you engaged there at the time Mr. Robertson was working or washing the Katydid dump?-A. I was.

Q. What can you tell us, of your own knowledge, as to whether or not in that operation he did not win chestnut coal from that dump?-A. When they first started to work the Katydid dump they tried to win chestnut and other sizes, but found that that was not commercially practicable.

Why?-A. Because they could not make it pay.

Q. Why could they not make it pay?—A. Because there was so much impurity and waste to be handled in proportion to the small amount of coal that could be won, that it was not commercially feasible.

Q. What sizes then could be commercially produced from that dump?-A. From No. 1 buckwheat down.

Q. Now, can you tell us from your observation there whether he was working an average part of the dump or the better part of it, or the worst part of it?—A. He was working the better part of the dump.

Q. What would you say as to the part of the dump which remained there, as to whether it is possible to win chestnut coal from it to any extent or of any value?—A. Not commercially. Q. What do you mean by "not commercially?"—A. That you can not make it pay.

Q. Did you have any connection with the negotiations for the purchase of the dump known here as Packer No. 3, near the Oxford washery?—A. Not the negotiations; no.

Q. Did you have anything to do with that business in connection with Judge Archbald?—A. I went down twice to examine the dumps.

Q. The Packer No. 3?—A. Packer Nos. 3 and 4. Q. Well, go on and tell just what you had to do with that, Mr. Petersen, as your name figures here in the matter?-A. A friend of mine, Mr. J. F. Bell, an attorney in Scranton, I think, was the first one who spoke to me about this dump or these dumps, and asked me if I would go down and look them over, which I did in company with Mr. Jones.

Q. Which Jones?-A. His first name is Thomas, Thomas

Jones.

Q. Thomas H. Jones?—A. I think that is it.

Q. Very well.-A. I made an examination, a cursory examination, not a thorough one, and came back and reported to Mr. Bell on the contents of the dump as I found them and the estimated amount of coal.

Q. Do you remember what your estimate was?-A. I took some notes, but I have not been able to lay my hands on them.

Q. You do not recollect, do you, right now, what conclusion you reached?—A. Not definitely, I think.

Q. Very well; I will not ask you to guess it. Go on, then, and tell what followed. We want to know what your connection was with this proposed purchase of Packer No. 3 from the beginning to the end.—A. I told Mr. Bell I would like to go down again, before the matter was finally determined, to look over the dump again, which I did. After I came back I was asked by Mr. Bell or Mr. Jones, I do not know who, to meet Judge Archbald in his office in Scranton, in the Federal The three of us met Judge Archbald there one forebuilding. noon.

Q. The three of you were whom?-A. Mr. Bell, Mr. Jones, and myself.

Q. All right. Proceed .- A. While there we spoke about the dump and about the proposed organization of a company to wash it out, and I was asked whether I would take charge of the operation if a lease were consummated for the dump. I said I would, provided the salary, and so forth, was satisfactory That was all until some time later another meeting was held in Judge Archbald's office, where Mr. Bell, Mr. Jones, and two gentlemen from New York, Judge Archbald, and myself were present.

Q. Do you remember the names of the gentleman from New York? Was Mr. Farrell one?—A. Mr. Farrell was one—the coal dealer. I do not remember the name of the other gentle-

Q. Very well.-A. We spoke about the selling of coal and about the financing of the undertaking. Mr. Farrell said that he would finance it with the understanding that I was to handle it on the ground. That is all that I know about it.

Q. Do you remember signing an application to Judge Archbald and Mr. Jones and Mr. Bell?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. For that lease?-A. Yes, sir,

Q. I should like to ask you if anything was said about that time about keeping quiet or concealing Judge Archbald's connection with that proposed purchase?-A. Not at all.

Q. Did you ever hear from any source any suggestion or intimation of that kind?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge as to whether this was an unusual or a usual transaction, having one man put up all the money-

Mr. Manager WEBB. We object to that, Mr. President. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Will you not allow me to ask the question?

Mr. Manager WEBB. You have asked it. It is for the Senate to say whether it is unusual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The counsel will complete the question.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On that question, Mr. President, when Mr. Farrell was on the stand he was asked precisely the same question and gave testimony. I do not remember whether we had any contention then about it or not.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We did. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Manager Webb says we did. The question was answered and Mr. Farrell told what he knew about it.

Mr. Manager WEBB. No; Mr. Farrell finally said he had but two transactions of the same kind, and that is all he said. The counsel for the respondent asked him what the general custom or habit was, and the reply was that he had had only two transactions like it. He never did answer the counsel's question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the question put by counsel?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The question is if he knows whether it is a usual or an unusual thing in that anthracite country, of which Scranton is the center, for one person to put up all the money for exploiting a coal operation and others who produce the property and find it to share with him in the benefits of it? I understand the suggestion to be made here that Judge Archbald has done something that he ought not to have done, something criminal, because he did not put any money into this

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the counsel can lay the foundation for that question by asking to what extent the witness has knowledge of other transactions or how general his knowledge might be.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is what I am asking him. I may call attention here to the previous ruling upon this question. Mr. Farrell was on the stand. It is at the top of page 805:

The Chair thinks, under the circumstances, that counsel is justified in bringing out the fact that there are such other transactions, but the Chair would hardly consider it proper to go into details.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the question ought to be as to how many transactions of this kind he has known or as to which he has knowledge.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) How many other similar transactions have you known about, Mr. Petersen; that is, similar in the respect that one man puts up the money and others share the benefits?-A. I know of two quite recently.

Q. And have you known of others?-A. Yes; but I do not know that I could recall them.

Q. You have known of others, but you can not recall now who they were?-A. Not just who they were.

Q. Can you give us any idea?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that it would be better to ask the witness how many he has known of that kind.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) How many altogether would you say you have known of?

Mr. Manager WEBB. He has said two.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. He says two recently, and others the details of which he could not remember. [To the witness.] About how many would you say you have known of altogether, Mr. Petersen?

The WITNESS. Why, I should think possibly a half dozen at

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Cross-examination:
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You say you remember two recently? When were the other four?—A. Some time in the

Q. What were they?—A. What were they?

Q. Yes; the other four .- A. Money put up for the purpose of developing coal lands.

Q. What was the name of the company, corporation, or jointstock company of each of the four?—A. Pardon me, I told the counsel that I could not recollect.

Q. Then you only recollect two; that is the fact, is it not?-

A. I could not recollect the names of them.

Q. Well, can you recollect the amounts of the other four?—A. I may not have known the amounts.

Q. Can you recollect the men who were in them?-A. Yes; I recollect, for instance, one.

Q. Well, now, one; who was that?—A. That is a coal company up at Peckville.

Q. Were you in that company?-A. No; I have been employed by them.

Q. That is one. Now, do you remember any other?—A. I do not know that I can give it offhand.

Q. Are you a partner or a stockholder in the two recent ones ?-A. I am not.

Q. Were you interested in the formation of the recent ones?-A. Not in their formation.

Q. So all you can remember now are three companies where some other man has put up the money-that is, three definite ones?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have been in the coal business 25 or 30 years?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, getting to the Katydid dump, Mr. Petersen-you do not think the Katydid dump is worth anything, do you?-A. Oh, yes; it is worth something.

Q. You think it is worth something?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you think it is worth?-A. Offhand, not having measured it or tested it, I would not pay $10,000 for it.

Q. You would not pay $10,000. Would you pay $5,000?-A. Yes; I would pay $5,000.

Would you pay $6,000?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much do you think it is worth?—A. Well, I think five or six thousand dollars is all it is worth.

Q. That is all it is worth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have never measured it; you have never examined it; you have never had an engineer to survey it?-A. No; but I know it quite well.

Q. Now, coming to Packer No. 3, when was the first time you saw Judge Archbald with reference to the corporation that was to be known as the Jones Coal Co.—or did you know that it was to be called that?—A. Yes, sir; I heard that. Q. You heard it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not know it when you signed your application to the Girard estate?—A. Possibly; I do not know whether that was mentioned in there or not.

Q. When was the first time you talked to Judge Archbald about it?-A. Some time in the late spring or early summer of

Q. In the spring or summer of 1911?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it you made your application finally to the Girard estate?—A. All I know about that application is that letter that I signed there.

O. That is, the application of December 19, 1911. Then, if your application was signed December 19, 1911, Judge Archbald and you had been negotiating or had been discussing the formation of a coal company to take over Packers Nos. 3 and 4 from the spring of 1911 until December, 1911; is that right?-A. Possibly you are right. It might have been later than that. I thought it was early in the summer; but it might have been later than that. I am not positive about that.

Q. When you and Mr. Farrell and Mr. Thomas Howell Jones met in Judge Archbald's office one night in Scranton about this matter, it was agreed that you should supervise the work of the corporation?-A. Yes, sir. Q. It was agreed that Farrell should put up the money?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was agreed that James F. Bell should be the attorney to look after the legal business?-A. I am not positive as to that.

Q. That is the only reason you know of why he would have been in it, is it not-he is an attorney at law?-A. It is possible that was spoken of there; I do not know.

Q. And that Judge Archbald should secure the consent of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. to sublease it? Is not that what he was to do?-A. No; he was to get the lease, if possible, from the Girard estate.

Q. They had already gotten it from Mr. Warrher, acting for the Lehigh Valley people?—A. That I do not know. Q. Who was to get it from the Lehigh Valley people, Mr. Petersen?—A. I do not know that.

Q. Was Farrell to get it?-A. I can not tell you.

Q. You knew he was not, but that he was to put up the money?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit, Mr. President, that the witness should do the testifying and not the manager.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I am asking the question on cross-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The manager said "You knew he was not."

Mr. Manager WEBB. I raised my voice, Mr. President, indicating it was a question. [To the witness:] I say you knew that Mr. Farrell was to put up the money and that that was the end of his connection with the business, because he was not one of the incorporators?-A. No; I did not know that that was to end it.

Q. Do you know what Farrell was to do?—A. I know that he was to put up the money, but I do not know anything else.
Q. Do you know what Judge Archbald was to do then?—A. Only that he was to try to get the lease from the Girard estate.

Q. Did you know at that time that it was necessary to get the consent of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. from Mr. Warriner before you could get it from the Girard estate, or vice versa? A. No; I understood that the Lehigh Valley were quite willing to consent to the re-leasing of the dump, not only to the proposed Jones Coal Co., but to all others, provided the coal was shipped over their road.

Q. You need not go outside of that to make a defense. Who told you that? Did Judge Archbald tell you that he had gotten the consent of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. to sublease it in case the Girard estate agreed to it?-A. No; I do not recollect that

Q. Then did you not know when you signed that application that Mr. Warriner or the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. had already agreed to sublease it if the Girard estate were willing?-A. I did not; no, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will ask the Secretary to give me the number of the exhibit showing the application.

The Secretary. It is Exhibit No. 27.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I believe you said that you did not know at the time you signed this application to the Girard estate that the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. had agreed to sublease to you?-A. I do not remember that I did; no.

Q. I will ask you if you did not sign this statement, which is directed to the Girard estate:

But we have the assurance of that company-Referring to the Lehigh Valley Coal Co .-

But we have the assurance of that company that on certain terms and conditions, which have practically been agreed upon between us, it will be satisfactory to them to have us lease from you to the extent suggested. * * *

R. W. ARCHBALD. JAMES F. BELL. V. L. PETERSEN. T. H. JONES.

Q. Did you not sign that?-A. I have no doubt I did, if my signature is there; but I do not remember what was in that

Q. Do you mean to say you signed an important application for a culm bank containing about 500,000 tons of coal without knowing what you were stating to the Girard estate?-A. As to that part of it, yes.

Q. Run over the application, Mr. Petersen, and see if that is what you signed. [Handing paper to witness.]-A. (After examining paper.) Yes, sir.

Q. Now, do you tell us that you do not remember that the expression that you had the assurance of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. that their consent could be gotten was not in this application when you signed it?-A. I say that I do not remem-

Q. You do not remember ?- A. Of course, it was there; cer- tainly.

 Q. Now, perhaps, you can refresh your recollection after you have read that. Do you not remember that Judge Archbald told you that he had already secured the consent of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., and that the next step was to get the consent of the Girard estate, and that is why you signed this application in this form and made that statement in it?-A. He may have said that.
 - Q. Did he not say it?-A. I would not be positive that he did. Q. Was anything like that said?-A. Possibly, but I am not - sure. Q. You are an old coal miner there and know that the railroads or coal companies own these banks, and do you mean to say that you would have applied to the Girard estate without first knowing that you had assurances from the coal company that you could get the sublease?—A. I think that ought to have been the first step taken.

Q. The first step that was taken?-A. No; the first step that ought to have been taken-to apply to the Girard estate.

Q. Precisely, but it was not. Evidently somebody had gotten the consent of the coal company for their lease before you applied. Now, who was it that got that consent?-A. I do not know; I did not.

Q. You do not know?—A. No, sir.
Q. Then, you do not know why you signed such a statement as that to the Girard estate, telling them that you had already received assurances from the Lehigh Valley Coal Co.?—A. I was asked to sign that paper there, and that is all that I know about it.

Q. Did you read it over at all?—A. I think I did. Q. But you do not remember that statement?—A. No; I have no recollection of it.

Q. Is it not a fact, Mr. Petersen, that you do remember that statement very well and remember the fact that Judge Archbald's part in this transaction was, first, that he had received the consent of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. to sublease it, and the next step was to apply to his nephew, Col. James Archbald, to receive the consent of the Girard estate, and then the matter would be complete, and you would go to work?-A. I believe there was some such understanding as that, but I am not positive about it.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think you can stand aside, Mr.

Petersen.

Redirect examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) One moment. Have you any recollection at all as to what was said about Mr. Bell's consideration for his interest in the proposed company? You said it might have been stated that he was to act as attorney; that that is what he was to do. Do you recollect that anything was said on the subject?—A. No; I am not sure about that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Recross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you state that you had been in the employ of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for 25 years?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the company that is owned by the Erie Railroad?-A. It is a subsidiary company of the Eric Railroad;

Q. Have you been employed by any other railroad or coal company during that time?—A. I was superintendent of the New York, Susquehanna & Western Coal Co., which was also a subsidiary.

Q. All of the companies you have been employed by belong to the Erie Railroad Co.?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all. Mr. WORTHINGTON (to the witness). How are you employed now?

The WITNESS. I am in business for myself. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness may retire.

TESTIMONY OF HENRY E. MEEKER,

Henry E. Meeker, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Meeker, will you give us your full name?-A. Henry Eugene Meeker.

Q. Where do you live?—A. New York, Q. And your business?—A. Coal merchant.

Q. How long have you been a coal merchant?-A. For 22

Q. In that business have you had dealings with people who furnish coal in the anthracite region around Scranton?-A. Yes.

Q. What can you tell us, if anything, as to transactions in which persons in New York put up all the money to operate some coal plant, and other persons who find the plant share with the persons who put up the money in the profits of the operation?

Mr. Manager WEBB. We object to that on the ground that counsel has not asked the question based upon a similar transaction to this. We do not deny that independent coal companies may be formed when coal land is bought, but counsel certainly can not ask a question on all fours, as we would say, with this proposition, where it has been shown in evidence that it required some effort or influence to secure from a coal-owning railroad their consent to sublease their coal land.

think the case can possibly be parallel and therefore in point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness can testify generally; and then it will be competent for counsel to show in what respect this particular case is to be differentiated from the general rule. The Chair thinks it is better, however, for counsel to ask the witness as to his particular knowledge of such cases, instead of as to his general knowledge.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Well, Mr. Meeker, do you know of your own knowledge of cases in which that has been done?-A. I do.

Q. How many ?-A. Well, I know of three of my own knowledge; that I have done myself. I know of several outside of that from hearsay.

Q. Are any of those cases in which the coal property was owned or controlled by a railroad company?—A. In one case part of the property was controlled by a coal company which was owned by a railroad company.

Q. What coal company was that?—A. The Pennsylvania

Coal Co.

Q. That is the one of which Capt. May is the vice president, is it not?—A. I think so; I do not know.

Q. Owned by the Erie Railroad Co.?—A. Yes.

Q. How long ago was that transaction?-A. That was about 18 months ago.

Q. How large an operation was it?-A. Well, I think we have about 200,000 tons of coal there.

Q. Now, tell us the others of which you have personal knowledge.—A. The other two were 15 years ago. They were down near Plymouth. One was a mining proposition and the other was a washery proposition.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President. I do not care to go into the details of any of these transactions. The managers can ask for them if they so desire.

Cross-examination:

- Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Meeker, what did the company you formed 18 months ago propose to work-a culm bank or coal property?—A. They proposed to work what is called a fill, which was composed of coal that was dumped by the Pennsylvania Coal Co. many years ago to make the gravity
- Q. And abandoned when the old gravity railroad was taken up?-A. Yes.
- Q. And, therefore, the Pennsylvania Coal Co. did not own an interest in it, because it had abandoned it 25 or 30 or 40 years ago. Is not that true?—A. One bank, as I understand, was leased by the Pennsylvania Co. to an individual, and the people who came to me had bought from that individual their lease.
 Q. Who was that individual—V. L. Petersen?—A. I could not say off hand; I think it was, but I am not sure.

Q. He was the man who was on the stand awhile ago and employed——A. I would not want to say that. I have the papers, and I can find out for you. My recollection is that there is a Petersen fill there, or what is known as "Petersen's fill," but whether Petersen was the individual who had the lease that was sold to a man named Mumford I do not know.

Q. You know, as a matter of fact, do you not, that the old fills along the gravity railroad were abandoned by the Penn- sylvania Coal Co. many years ago?—A. I do.

 Q. And that when they abandoned the fills they lost possession of them?—A. I do not know that as a matter of fact.

 Q. Well, did anybody else claim this fill, or did you get a lease from anybody else, besides the Pennsylvania Coal Co.?—

 A. I did not get any lease. Mr. Mumford and others had a lease.
- Q. Did you see the lease?-A. I saw the lease, or my attorney saw the lease.

Q. Whom was it from-who made the lease?-A. The Pennsylvania Coal Co. made the lease.

Q. To whom?-A. You say it was to Mr. Petersen. I can not give you the name now.

Q. I ask you if it was not Petersen, and Petersen leased or deeded it to some trustees, did he?—A. No; he leased—no; Mr. Petersen did not lease to anybody. To be perfectly frank with you, I have forgotten entirely. I have the papers; if you would like me to give those names, I could give that to you from the papers.

Q. Have you them here?—A. Upstairs; yes, sir.

- Q. I will be glad to see them after you stand aside to-night. Do you know anything about the title to the old gravity fill?-
- Q. You do not know what interest the Pennsylvania Coal Co. had in it after it was abandoned, but you do know it was abandoned by them years ago?-A. I do know that from general knowledge

Redirect examination:

- Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) You do know that this lease under which this operation was to be carried on was a lease from the Pennsylvania Coal Co. on the-—A. Part of the lease;
- Q. Is it not a fact that the dump was called not the Petersen dump but the Patterson dump; was not that the dump?—
 A. No; the Patterson fill is the name; I know that.
- Q. What kind of material was the fill?-A. It was all culm, It was culm?-A. Yes. But I do not believe the lease was in Mr. Petersen's name, as I recollect it.

Recross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) How far is this fill from the Q. What railroad?—A. From the Eric road.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Was the coal that was made from the fill shipped by the Eric?—A. Yes. The washery is on the Erie. The culm is moved to the washery.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I will ask you if you do not know that it is a universal policy of the coal-owning roads in Pennsylvania not to sell or lease their properties?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that as not being cross-examination. I did not ask him anything about that. I ask that the cross-examination be confined to the subject to which the direct examination was addressed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point is well taken.

Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all we care to ask him.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I will ask you one other question. Are you the Mr. Meeker of the Meeker case that we have heard something before the Interstate Commerce Commission?-A. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

The Witness. May I be excused?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes; so far as we are concerned.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it desired that this witness should be retained for any purpose?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes, sir; it is, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The witness will be temporarily excused but not finally discharged.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If after reading the papers the managers do not want him, he may be discharged so far as we are concerned. He need not wait on our account.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Very well, then; the arrangement is satisfactory.

TESTIMONY OF MORITZ RICHARD HELLBUT.

Moritz Richard Hellbut, having been duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Please give us your full nme.—A. Moritz Richard Hellbut.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Red Bank, N. J. Q. What is your business?—A. Coal business.

Q. What branch of the coal business?—A. Selling coal. Q. How long have you been engaged in that business?—A. Nearly all my life-for 25 years.

Q. Did you have any connection with the proposed purchase. in the year 1911, of what is known as Packer No. 3 dump?-A. I did.

Q. Near the Oxford washery?-A. I did.

Q. Tell us about that, please.—A. I was trying to get a dump for Robertson, Haydon & Co., the firm in which I was interested, and I tried to find a good dump. I was told about this dump through a man named T. H. Jones.

Q. T. H. Jones?—A. T. H. Jones. He wrote me a letter about it, and I told him that if the dump was as he represented it I could find him some money to get this dump. He asked me, then, on the 20th of December last year to come to Scranton with my party and see Judge Archbald about it, who was partly interested in this dump. We got to Scranton and saw the judge at his office in Scranton that evening. We spoke over the proposition, talked it all over, and decided to go the next day up to Shenandoah, where the dump is, and inspect it. After we inspected it we considered spected it we considered-

Q. Who inspected it with you?—A. Mr. Farrell was with me, and Mr. Jones and Mr. Farrell's son, and we measured the dump and found, I think, it was about 700 square feet. We considered that it was a safe proposition to put in the amount of money that was to be required to build the washery.

Q. You say, "We considered it a safe proposition." Whom do you mean by "we"?—A. Mr. Farrell asked my advice on it. That is the reason I say "we."

Q. And you did agree then to put in the money?-A. Yes.

Q. What were you to get for your money?-A. Mr. Farrell put in also some money and he was to get 20 per cent of the profits of the company and 6 per cent on his money.

Q. And the rest was to go to whom?—A. The rest was to go to the stockholders. Mr. Jones proposed to give him a share of the stock, but he said he would not take it. He said he did not want any stock, only wanted a profit in the company.

Q. He did not want to become a stockholder?—A. He did not want to become a stockholder.

Q. Do you know of other transactions of that kind—I mean where one person or a set of persons find a coal property and other persons put up all the money necessary to operate it?-A. I am interested in another one now where exactly the same thing happened.

Q. Where is that?—A. At Hawley, Pa.

Q. In a general way, what is the extent of that operation; is that a large or small operation?-A. Quite a large one, considerably more than $30,000.

Q. And from what company or concern does that property come?-A. In some part directly from the Pennsylvania Coal Co., and in some part from sublessees of the Pennsylvania Coal

Q. Is that the operation in which Mr. Farrell is interested with you, too?-A. Yes.

Q. And as to which he has testified?—A. Yes; I guess he has. Q. Do you know through what party or parties that interest comes from the Pennsylvania Coal Co.?-A. I think through Mr. Petersen.

Q. You think through Petersen?-A. I think so, but-Q. You know Mr. Petersen has been on the stand?-A. Yes.

Is that the man?—A. Yes; that is the man.

Q. Do you know of any other cases of this kind, where one person or party finds the property and gets somebody else to put up the money?-A. I know of Mr. Meeker-

Q. Do you know of any others?-A. I only have heard about other cases. I could not say positively.

Do you know of a case in which a man named Hildebrand was concerned?-A. His case is a little different from that. We had a case-

Mr. Manager WEBB. Never mind about that, unless the counsel wants it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No; I do not care about troubling you about that, Mr. Hellbut.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) I want to know if anything was said at the meeting where you met Judge Archbald or at any other time, for that matter, by anybody about keeping quiet the fact that Judge Archbald was an interested party in this transaction?—A. Not at all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. Manager.

Cross-examination:

- Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) The reason why you put your money in it was because Judge Archbald was one of the in-corporators?—A. I did not put my money in. You mean Mr. Farrell?
 - Q. You found the man who put his money in?-A. Yes.

Q. That is the reason why he put his money into the proposition?-A. Oh, no.

Q. Because Judge Archbald was interested in it?-A. No, sir; he did not put his money in for that reason. He put it in because he thought the proposition was a good one.

Q. But he had to have somebody back of the proposition before he would get his money out of it?-A. He had full se-We had to hold the stock in escrow until all his money was paid back. The whole stock was in escrow until his money was paid back at 20 cents a ton, with interest.

Q. I understood that Mr. Jones found you and you found Mr. Farrell and Mr. Farrell furnished the money. Is that right?-A. That is right.

Q. You spoke about a fill containing something like 200,000 Is that one of the old gravity railroad fills?-A. Yes: one of the old gravity railroad fills.

Q. One of the old fills that the Pennsylvania Coal Co. abandoned?-A. It is 12, 13, and 14, and, I think, 15, too.

Q. An abandoned gravity fill?-A. Yes; an abandoned gravity fill; one of the best coals in the market.

Q. Abandoned 35 or 40 years ago?-A. Abandoned, I think, 30 years ago-about.

Q. Do you not know that the Pennsylvania Coal Co. does not own the land or the coal that you are working now?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit this witness can hardly be expected to know.

Mr. WEBB. I ask him if he does, and he can answer that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is put interrogatively. The Witness. May I have that question asked again?

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Do you not know that the Pennsylvania Coal Co. does not now own either the land on which this fill is or the culm in it?-A. No; I do not. Q. You do not know whether it owns it or not?-A. I am told-and I have leased of the Pennsylvania Coal Co .- I have seen a lease of the Pennsylvania Coal Co. where they claimed to own it.

Q. They claimed to own it?-A. Yes.

Q. And the lease you have is through this man Petersen, who has been employed by them for 25 years?—A. I have not the lease from Petersen; I have the lease from the Pennsylvania Coal Co. Mr. Beyea signed the lease as land agent.

Q. How does Mr. Petersen figure in it?-A. There was some part of the fills which was sublet locally, and he got them all together so as to make a tonnage which would justify building a washery to take care of any amount of coal.

Q. Have you a lease from Petersen?—A. We have no lease from Petersen.

Q. What has he to do with, or did he have to do with, the forming of the company?-A. The forming of the company he had nothing to do with. Q. How did he figure in the transaction, then? You spoke of him a while ago. - A. Mr. Petersen figured in the transaction in this way: He has gotten together from four or five people there the leases which they owned.

Q. Four or five people, you say?—A. Yes; four or five different people—the leases which they owned.

Q. And Petersen leases to you?—A. No. He had the people turn the leases over to us direct. Mr. Petersen is not in it at

Q. He turns these leases over to you directly?—A. Yes. Q. And if the Pennsylvania Coal Co. had any interest, they have leased that to you, too?-A. They approve the leases, and they were turned over to us.

Q. Do you not know that those individuals that leased to Petersen owned the land, and because the Pennsylvania Coal Co. abandoned it 35 or 40 years ago they also abandoned their right to the culm, and those individuals own both the culm and the land?-A. That is new to me.

Q. Do you know what proportion the Pennsylvania Coal Co. claims in the bank-what interest they claim?-A. What interest, you mean, they own in the land?

Q. I want to know if you know what interest the Pennsylvania Coal Co. claims in this old gravity fill that you are working?—A. That they own it all.

Q. What interest do the individuals have who give you the lease?-A. They did not claim to own anything. The Pennsylvania Coal Co. has the right of way, as I understand, on each side for 25 feet. They own the actual land, I am told.

Q. What did the individual own?-A. The individual had a lease from the Pennsylvania Coal Co.

Q. When were these leases made?—A. Ten years ago, think, some; eight years ago. They screened it locally, with hand screens, for local consumption, and left everything below pea and even pea in that screening.

Q. Then if individuals were leased this fill by the Pennsylvania Coal Co. and you owned the individuals' leases, why did the Pennsylvania Coal Co. make you a lease direct?—A. On part of it the Pennsylvania Coal Co. did not have any leases given out.

Q. What part? That is what I asked you awhile ago .- A. I think it was the twelfth level. I will have to look that up.

And the thirteenth and fourteenth plane. Q. What proportion in decimal figures would that be of the dump, if you know?-A. I never have figured it all together. I did not figure it especially, you know.

Q. All you know is, then, that the Pennsylvania Coal Co. claimed an interest in the fill; you do not know what it is?—A. I know we have the fill from the Pennsylvania Coal Co. direct and the re-lease from others, with the consent of the Pennsylvania Coal Co., which is required.

Mr. Manager WEBB. All right, sir; stand aside. Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Who do you say signed the lease for the Pennsylvania Coal Co.?—A. Mr. Beyea, the land agent.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Have you that lease with you?—A. No; there is a set of leases. There is not only one lease; there are quite a few leases.

Mr. Manager WEBB. All right, sir. Stand aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a desire to retain this witness?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He may be finally excused.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The examination of the next witness will probably take somewhat longer than the time we have remaining before 6 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It lacks three minutes of the adjourning time, or two minutes and a half. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. NELSON. I offer the following order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota offers the following order, which will be read by the Secretary. The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered. That the proceedings in this case, printed in pamphlet form, be indexed and bound, for the use of the Senate, during the holiday recess of Congress, ready to be furnished Senators, managers, and counsel for the respondent by the 2d of January, 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state for the information of the Senate that the committee which has had charge of the details of this proceeding has already had a clerk engaged in the work of indexing. In view of that fact, it may not be necessary that the full order be adopted as written, unless it is made to cover the work already done.

Mr. NELSON. It will cover that, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the order just read. Is there objection?

Mr. REED. Is it not possible to have the time of delivery shortened, so that we can have that record to read before the Senate reconvenes and the trial is resumed? Will it not be possible to have it delivered five or six days sooner than the time stated?

Mr. NELSON. I do not know as to that. I presume it can

Mr. NELSON. I do not know as to that. I presume it can be printed as soon as it is ready. The object is to have these loose copies bound in a book with an index for our use. I will ask to have the words "as soon as possible" substituted for the words "by the 2d of January, 1913."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the adoption of the order as modified? If not, it will be considered as unanimously ordered by the Senate. The hour of 6 o'clock has anxiety and the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment arrived and the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment stands adjourned until 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. to-morrow.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives and the respondent and his counsel retired.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 6283) increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash., and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the immigration bill as amended by the House of Representatives, which has just been received, may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I ask that this action be not taken at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—
Mr. STONE. Just a moment. I do not care to move, at least I would rather not now move, that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House. I should like to have the bill as passed by the House lie on the table until to-morrow

Mr. LODGE. The House has struck out all of the Senate bill except the illiteracy test, and that the House has inserted in a slightly different form, but in substance the same. Unless we are prepared to abandon all the administrative features of the bill, which no one suggests, I think concurrence is out of the question. We adjourn to-morrow for the holiday recess, and it is very important that the House should have the opportunity to appoint their conferees to-morrow. They have sent the bill here to-day on that account.

Mr. STONE. Of course, we can not dispose of the bill at this session. Mr. LODGE. At this session of Congress?

I mean before the holiday recess. Mr. STONE.

There is not the slightest intent of even taking Mr. LODGE. it into conference before that time. The object is merely to get conferees appointed.

Mr. STONE. They can be appointed to-morrow, perhaps, as well as to-day. I should like to have the bill go over, so that I may confer with several Senators who have spoken to me about it on this side before that action is taken. I ask that it may lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not want to assent to that delay in action on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri raises the question of a quorum. The roll will be called. The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Bacon Gallinger Hitchcock Nelson Smith, S. C. Oliver Overman Page Pomerene Root Smoot Thornton Johnston, Ala. Jones Lodge Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Brandegee Bristow Bryan Crawford 'ownsend Warren

Smith, Ga. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll 26 Senators have answered to their names-not a quorum.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 19, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, December 18, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Fletcher

Our Father in heaven, keep us, we beseech Thee, in all our intercourse with our fellow men in touch with Thee, lest we forget the admonition, "Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged; and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again"; that we may put into our daily life that sublime injunction, "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets."

Thus may we hallow Thy name, in the spirit of the Lord

Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF PEACE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave to print in the RECORD an address on One Hundred Years of Peace Among English-Speaking People, delivered in New York recently by the Hon. WILLIAM D. B. AINEY, a Member of this House from the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print in the Record the address by his colleague [Mr. Ainey] on One Hundred Years of Peace. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Address of Hon. WILLIAM D. B. AINEY. Member of Congress, at the dinner given by the American committee for the celebration of one hundred years of peace among English-speaking people to Ambassador Bryce, Hotel Astor, New York, December 13, 1912, Hon. Alton B. Parker, presiding.

Parker, presiding.

Your Excellency, Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, it affords me a high sense of privilege to be present with you on this occasion, distinguished and graced by the British ambassador, who has consented to be your guest, and to unite with you in behalf of my colleagues in the Congress of the United States in expressions of felicitation and encomium and in conveying to him America's tribute of great affection. I am deeply appreciative of the harmonious blending of thought and expression, of person and place, of illustrious guest and purposeful host in this complimentary dinner tendered to Ambassador Bryce by the American committee for the celebration of one hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples.

America is not unmindful of the diplomatic brilliancy of the distinguished guest; it will not forget him as one deeply versed in history—a man of letters. He will be remembered for his charm of manners and engaging personality, but the emphasis of his accomplished work among us has been in a sense, perhaps, to him unknown. He has interwoven the fibers of his own generous sympathies into the very fabric of American heart life and bound the English-speaking peoples by the cords of love.

can heart life and bound the English-speaking peoples by the cords of love.

A hundred years of peace between elbow-touching nations, wherein the thoughts and purposes of each have run in parallel lines in unbroken course, notes a great era of the world.

The signing of the treaty of Ghent marks a new source from whence spring the fountains of English-speaking history. Since that day the two mighty rivers of Anglo-Saxon life and influence have flowed steadily on and, side by side, never overflowing their banks, but in their onward course bound in the very nature of things to mingle their waters in the great ocean of a common destiny and accomplishment.

It would be interesting to follow them in their history under this figure of speech from small beginnings to the mighty present, and peer, as far as the mere human may, into the region of the coming days.

The similarity is so apparent that it has been ofttimes remarked, common in language, literature, history, and traditions, with similar religious and ethical conceptions, possessed of the same ideas as to the fundamentals in government, they have both sought, through all these means of expression, to obtain and give that liberty which means the exaltation of the individual life to a place where it may fulfill the duty of its created purpose.

The common goal is quite apparent, the waters may overflow the banks, and, God forbid it, wars may come to hinder and delay; but as surely as the day is day, as right is right, and rivers flow to ocean, the Anglo-Saxon problem will ultimately find solution in the broadest and deepest unity of purpose.

Among the world's great thinkers of other races the peculiar aptitude of the Anglo-Saxon to grasp the thought of his own and others' rights in his quest for liberty has been pointed out. He has been intensely but not selfshily individualistic in his views. To him personal liberty has meant Individual liberty, if one may here differentiate in terms. Not merely the liberty to throw off restraint, but liberty to do and be and think and to acquire; liberty to express himself in life and influence, to reach, the topmost rung, to climb the highest peak, to fulli with himself the topmost rung, to climb the highest peak, to fulli with himself the person of peak of the peak of peak of the himself in life and influence, to reach, the topmost rung, to climb the highest peak, to fulli with himself peak of peak of the himself himself and these in turn have made new problems, have been met and solved, and these in turn have made new problems, and the has a statished it and has increased in stature by the attainment. With liberty came enlightenment, and this gave him a vision of opportunity, and he has attained it and has increased in stature by the attainment. With liberty came enlightenment, and this gave him a vision of opportunity, and he has seized upon it.

The rank and file have answered to the Anglo-Saxot cry to step up higher. Thus far their destiny is accomplished. It has brought an important of the himself of the himself and the himself and himself and the himself and himself and the himself and h

To bring about an international understanding, using the apt term formulated by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, so freighted in meaning as to be quickly seized by the English world, we need an "international mind."

We may not stop here, else we fail in our philosophy to realize how much the great world hangs its activities upon the broad sympathies of mankind; the potency of the emotional in man; its quick response to words of love or hate, to kiss or blow; the ready yielding of both men and nations to the common influence of a kindred feeling.

Some years ago an article touching the relations between the United States and Great Britain appeared in the Atlantic Monthly. It closed with a sentiment so high and exalted that I bring it here:

"Though our countries may have no formal alliance, They have a league of hearts."

The author was your distinguished guest, the sentiment a page from is great heart and life and work.

Let it be paraphrased and then enthroned beside the other one.

Give us then—

An international mind to understand, An international heart to feel, and our hundred years of peace are but the beginning of an endless day of peace on earth, good will to men.

DIRECT ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record a report of the committee on resolutions, adopted by the General Assembly of Georgia, relative to the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the direct election of United States Senators by the people. It is the official action of the Legislature of Georgia on that question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to print in the Congressional Record the proceedings of the Georgia Legislature on the subject of the constitutional amendment affecting the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

Report of the joint committee of the Legislature of Georgia relative to the resolutions of Congress proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the people of the several States.

the resolutions of Congress proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of Senators by the people of the several States.

To the General Assembly of Georgia:

Your committee to whom was referred the resolution of the Congress proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States in the matter of the election of the Senators, with instructions to inquire and report whether the amendment is proposed according to the terms of the Constitution report as follows:

In the year 1776 the 13 American Colonies, then subject to the British Crown, jointly published to the nations of the world a declaration of their purpose to sever their connection with the mother country for reasons fully set forth in that instrument. The declaration made was in these words:

"That these United Colonies are and of right ought to be free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britain is and ought to be totally dissolved, and that as free and independent States they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do."

The Colonies were not at that time united by any other bond than as allies in war.

Upon the issue made by this declaration wager of battle was joined with the State of Great Britain, and the war terminated by a treaty of peace signed at Paris in the year 1783, whereof the first article was as follows:

"His Britannic Majesty acknowledges the sald United States, viz. New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia to be free, sovereign, and independent States; that he treats with them as such, and, for himself, his heirs, and successors, relinquishes all claim to the government, propriety (?), and territor ence, and every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not by this consederation expressly delegated to the United States in Congress assembled."

By the fifth of these articles it was provided that each State should annually, and in such manner as its own legislature should determine, appoint delegates to a Congress of the United States "for the more convenient management" of their general interests, the number so selected by any one State to be not less than two nor more than seven, each State maintaining its own delegates, and each State having one vote in the Congress and no more.

The government created by these articles did not prove adequate to its own necessities, and in the year 1787 delegates were selected from the several States to meet in convention at Philadelphia under a resolution of the Congress adopted February 1, 1787, in these words:

"Resolved, That in the opinion of Congress it is expedient that on the second Monday in May next a convention of delegates, who shall have been appointed by the several States, be held at Philadelphia for the sole and express purpose of revising the Articles of Confederation, and reporting to Congress and the several legislatures such alteration and provisions therein as shall, when agreed to in Congress and confirmed by the States, render the Federal Constitution adequate to the exigencies of Government and the preservation of the Union."

In response to this expression from the Congress 12 of the States did send delegates to such a convention, and the present Constitution, except the amendments thereto, was the result of its deliberations, being proposed by the convention in September, 1787, and afterwards, and before the end of the year 1788, ratified and agreed to by 11 of the States, and the new Government put into operation between them. Afterwards, in November, 1789, the States all showed during the entire the new government, and Rhode Island did likewise in May of the year 1790.

There can be no doubt that the States all showed during the entire period of the negotiations and proceedings extreme solicitude for the preservation unimpaired of their respective sovereignties and an almost jealous apprehension of any possible assumption by the Federal Government of any authority not expressly delegated to it by the free consent of all the States. This solicitude, indeed, found expression in an amendment agreed to so early and so earnestly insisted upon in the ratification of many of the States as a condition upon their consent as to be practically a part of the original Constitution. That amendment stands in these words:

"The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

Nor can there be any doubt that prior to the final adoption of the Constitution no State could be subjected to any new subtraction from its sovereignty except by its own free consent. That is to say, no change in the Constitution could be imposed upon any State prior to that time without its own consent, even though all other States so decreed; a principle clearly illustrated in the fact that, although 11 States agreed at first to the new Constitution as a substitute for the dld, no attempt was made to impose its obligation upon Rhode Island or North Carolina.

This principle that no State could ever have any alteration of the States agreed at first to the new Constitution as a substitute for the old, no attempt was made to impose its obligation upon Rhode Island or North Carolina.

This principle that no State could ever have any alteration of the Constitution imposed on it except by its own consent was departed from for the first time by the terms of the Constitution of 1787, and then only by the free consent of every State. It is therefore pertinent to look to the question of how this alteration occurred, and see to it that no extension be consented to by implication beyond the exact terms of the original grant.

When the convention of delegates, representing only 12 States, formulated the Constitution, they fully recognized their own want of authority to impose its changes upon any State, and took notice at the same time of the fact that it was impossible to foresee which States would and which would not accede to the new Government. Therefore they wrote into it as the last article this provision:

"The ratification of the convention of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifywould and which would not accede to the new Government. Therefore they wrote into it as the last article this provision:

"The ratification of the convention of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same."

The inith State to ratify the Constitution, New Hampshire, did so on June 21, 1788, but Virginia and New York did likewise on June 26, and the new Government went into operation between 11 States.

The fifth article of this Constitution made the first provision ever contemplated by the United States or any of them for the amendment thereof without the unanimous consent of the States, and therefore was the first authority that the States ever consented to for the Imposition upon any one of them of any dereliction from its own sovereignty by a vote of the others or of any number of the others. That provision remains of force.

Bearing in mind the histore reluctance of the several States to part with any of their reserved powers, or to permit any impairment of the sovereignty and independence or to permit any impairment of the sovereignty and independence or to permit any impairment of the sovereignty and independence safeguarded in the formation of this Government, it seems but a prudent and proper adherence to our just and honorable traditions to make no further concessions upon this subject, and consent to no changes in the fundamental law except such as are made in strict conformity to its terms.

The provisions on this subject to which our fathers agreed are expressed in the following words:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress; provided that no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the

be a fair argument to contend that if the framers had intended "two-thirds of those present" they would have said so in unambiguous words.

But it happens that there is other light in that great instrument, for by the third section of the first article, dealing with the question of impeachment, it provides that "no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present." In like manner the power to make treaties, granted to the President in the second section of the second article, has this condition, "Provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur." By all the approved rules of legal construction, sanctioned by the wise experience of a thousand years, these passages ought to solve all doubts unless some other clause be found to raise a just renewal of the question.

The provision in the fifth section of the first article which constitutes a majority of each House a quorum to do business can not be considered to raise such question, for, obviously, that section refers only to the general ordinary course of normal legislation, and if it had any application to extraordinary matters no necessity would have existed for the provision that in case of impeachment the two-thirds required to convict means two-thirds of those "present."

Impeachments are in the nature of bills of attainder, of such high authority as are not necessary to be based on previous statute defining and prohibiting the offense, and are therefore extraordinary in their nature. The treaty power is perhaps most dangerous to the reserved sovereignty of the States, for under it the President, with the requisite advice and consent, may exercise fur-reaching power over them. Amendment of the Constitution, for reasons already stated, is in much higher degree an extraordinary power. Indeed, we feel safe in saving, in view of the history herein set forth, that to no subject whatever did the prudent men who framed the Government give more cautious attention than to the fixed purpose that each State should reserve its sown that the difference in the isinglange used by the exact their who who who constitution was designed.

These considerations, it seems to us, are greatly emphasized by the fact that, if the meaning we have attached to the Constitution in this regard be not the true one, then it follows that barely more than one-third of each House could set in motion the extraordinary machinery which might result in the subtraction from a State of some vital portion of its sovereignty without its own consent. Such a possibility

In wholly inconceivable as having been consented to by the grave and cautious man who framed the Constitution of so jestionsity guarded the sourceignty of the several States therein.

The amendment proposed by the Congress and referred, to this committee did not seed to the committee of the com

2d. That the governor be, and he is hereby, directed to return to the proper office of the United States from which it emanated, the communication proposing an amendment as to the election of Senators, with the respectful protest of this State against the proposal as having been made by less than the requisite vote and therefore in derogation of the Constitution.

3d. That a copy of these resolutions and of the report in which the same are embodied be communicated to our Senators and Representatives in the Congress, with the request that the same be brought to the attention of that body.

4th. That the governor be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate like copies to the governors of the several States of the Union, with the request that the same be laid before their respective legislatures as an expression of the sentiment of this State, and in the hope that all the States may join with Georgia in earnest insistence that the Congress do not hereafter propose amendments to the Federal Constitution otherwise than upon the vote of two-thirds of the entire membership of each House thereof.

5th. That in the interest of candor we conceive it proper to say that the State of Georgia will be prompt to agree to the election of Senators by the people of the respective States, if the proposal therefor be made in what we conceive to be the method provided by the Constitution for its own amendment, but not in any terms which derogate in any degree whatsoever, directly or consequentially, from our reserved right of entire and unqualified control over our own suffrage, registration, and elections.

Respectfully submitted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2118) to aid in the erection of a monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va., in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 2118. An act to aid in the erection of a monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va.; to the Committee on the Library.

BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, JACKSON HOLE, WYO.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 3947) to provide for a bridge across Snake River, Jackson Hole, Wyo., with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 3947, with House amendments thereto, insist on the House amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. SMITH of Texas, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, and Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday.
Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House dispense with Calendar Wednesday for this day.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, on various occasions there have seemed to be reasons for dispensing with Calendar Wednesday. I remember when the railroad bill was before the House in 1910 the House was very anxious to proceed with the consideration of that bill. The House was considering it on a sideration of that bill. The House was considering it on a Tuesday. I desired to obtain the consent of gentlemen on the Democratic side to dispense with Calendar Wednesday on the following day, in order that we might proceed with the rail-Objection was made by gentlemen at that time. think it was the understanding at that time, although that bill was of the greatest importance, that the House ought not to break down the rule for Calendar Wednesday. It is quite certain that if the House, because it has a bill under consideration that it desires to pass, begins to dispense with Calendar Wednesday when Calendar Wednesday stands in the way, that Calendar Wednesday will have passed out of existence, practically, because it will seldom happen that Tuesday night will come without some measure under consideration which might be continued on Wednesday morning. The country hailed with delight the reform in the rules providing for Calendar Wednesday, for the purpose of insuring one day in the week on which bills reported from committees might be con-sidered without either asking the Speaker for recognition or the Committee on Rules for a special rule.

Now it is proposed by the gentleman to dispense with Calendar Wednesday. The gentleman who makes the motion might | Butler have called up his bill on Calendar Wednesday. Instead of that he chose to resort to the Committee on Rules, and he now proposes to take a step backward and abolish Calendar Wednes-As long as the rules provide for a calendar day called Wednesday it seems to me the House ought to stand in favor of maintaining the integrity of that rule and that day. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman has the right to proceed with his bill to-morrow, and it is not necessary in order to pass the immigration bill to break down this day. I regret that some gentlemen may assume that my opposition to the motion now is because I have not favored the House amendment to the immigration bill; but we have had this question up in the House on several occasions when the House desired to pass a bill and yet refused to break down the rule for Calendar Wednesday. All of the reforms proposed by the other side of the House to the rules they are gradually dispensing with. We had a great reform in a rule for a committee discharge. They have taken out of that all that amounts to anything. There has been no opportunity in this House for a year to move to discharge a committee from further consideration of a bill. You have ruined that reform that you proposed and you now propose to take the bowels, the whole life, out of the rule providing for Calendar Wednesday, and I protest against that Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. And the distinguished gentleman from Massa-chusetts [Mr. GARDNER] who now interrupts me was one of the men favoring the rule then and now proposes to knife it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, it comes with poor grace from the gentleman from Illinois, after the motion he made and the attempt he made yesterday to prevent the consideration of the immigration bill, for him to talk about it being an outrage to dispense with Calendar Wednesday and call up this bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We were right on the eve of the passage of the bill. Many gentlemen made their arrangements to go to their homes last night and to-night. Now, if we pass this bill over until Thursday, there might not be a quorum here. I do not say that is the motive of the gentleman, but that would practically be the result. Calendar Wednesday is no more sacred than the rule which provides for dispensing with Calendar Wednesday by a two-thirds vote. It is part of the rule creating Calendar Wednesday, and there is no more important measure, Mr. Speaker, before this Congress or before the American people [applause on the Democratic side] than this immigration bill. We have had a six-year filibuster against this bill, and now we have come to the point of its passage, concerning which the country is so insistent and so urgent, and therefore I insist that we can certainly suspend one Calendar Wednesday in order that we may meet the demands of the people and of right for the passage of this bill. Mr. Speaker, I ask [Applause on the Democratic side.] for a vote.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the pending motion prevails, will the call on next Wednesday morning be precisely where it is this morning?

The SPEAKER. It would, undoubtedly.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division. The House divided; and there were—ayes 71, noes 33, Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 67, answered "present" 8, not voting 157, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 6283. An act increasing the cost of erecting a public building at Olympia, Wash.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Arid Lands was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12826) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as

To Mr. Scott, for two days, on account of illness.

To Mr. Cooper, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family. To Mr. WARDURTON, until January 10, in order to visit the Panama Canal.

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business yesterday was the demand of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for the reading of the engrossed copy of the immigration bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand for the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and residence of aliens in the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, with instructions to that committee to report the bill back forthwith with an amendment striking out all after the word "That" and inserting the language which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to re-

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of the bill after the word "That" and inserting the following:

"The word 'alien' wherever used in this act shall include foreign-born, unnaturalized seamen. That the term 'United States,' as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act, shall be construed to mean the United States, including the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii; and if any alien shall attempt to enter the United States from the Canal Zone, the Philippines, Porto Rico, or any other place outside of the United States but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, such alien shall be permitted to enter only on the conditions applicable to aliens entering the United States from a foreign country. That the term 'seaman' as used in this act shall include every person signed on the ship's articles and employed in any capacity on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place. That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign Governments nor to their suites, families, or guests.

"Sec. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $5 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then to the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that it is not permissible, by a motion to recommit, to attempt to adopt that which was not germane when considered by the House in the first place. I make the point of order that the bill has been read sufficiently far to show that it is not germane to the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the rule that was adopted by the House in reference to the consideration of this bill does not affect the present situation at all. The only application of that rule was that the previous question should be ordered on the bill when reported from the committee. It is true that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union ruled that any amendment which was offered to the committee amendment must be germane to the committee amendment, but he expressly stated that he made that ruling because of the rule that had been adopted by the House governing the action of the Committee of the Whole. That rule applied only to the action of the Committee of the Whole in the committee.

Here is the situation: Here is a bill, a Senate bill, to regulate the immigration of aliens and the residence of aliens in the United States-a general bill. The Committee of the Whole has out all of the original bill and inserting other language. I recommended and the House has agreed to that bill, striking claim that the entire subject is before the House now. House is not cut off from the consideration of any portion of it by the rule, because the rule limiting consideration to the committee amendment applied only in the Committee of the Whole. The rule limiting the consideration does not apply to the House. The whole bill is before the House.

I am surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] should make the point of order as to a bill covering the entire subject of immigration pending before the House that it is improper in the House to offer to that bill an amendment which relates to any portion of the immigration subject at all. The whole subject is before the House.

Under the rule that the House has adopted it is true that in accordance with the ruling of the Chair you could only add, by way of amendment, something which was germane to the committee amendment. But here the rule provides that there may be a motion to recommit. We have the entire subject before the House. I do not believe that the Speaker will rule that when a Senate bill covering the entire subject of immigration is under consideration by the House a motion to recommit must apply only to something germane to an amendment which the House has adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, not having anticipated this situation, I have not been able to consult Hinds' Precedents with regard to a motion to recommit; but I am very clear in my own mind that the whole principle of that motion lies in a purpose of giving the House a final review of that which it has decided upon. That which is not permis-sible for the House to do directly, either in committee or in the House itself, may not subsequently be done under the guise of a motion to recommit. The recommittal stage is in the nature of a fourth reading.

I can not quote the precedents in this case, but I am very confident that the general principle that you may not seek to accomplish by a motion to recommit that which you could not have accomplished directly, either in the Committee of the Whole or in the House, is based on many decisions, which I suppose are easily available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the Speaker to this fact: The gentleman says that a motion to recommit is not in order which could not have been offered by way of amendment. I agree with that proposition; but the right of amendment in this case was cut off by the previous question. If the previous question had not been operating, it is perfectly clear to anyone that when it was proposed to strike out all of the bill and insert other language any amendment germane to the original bill would have been in order in the The previous question being in operation, no such amendment could be proposed; but any motion to recommit is in order, which would have been in order as an amendment if the previous question had not been operating. The proposition here was to strike out the entire Senate bill, a bill covering the general subject of immigration. It is true that no amendment could be offered in the House, because the previous question would shut out the right; but the motion to recommit was preserved, because the Committee on Rules could not report differently.

Under section 5873 of Hinds' Precedents an amendment providing for an educational test for immigration was held to be germane to a bill to regulate the immigration of aliens into the The Chair, in ruling upon it, stated that it United States.

being-a general bill on the subject of immigration, it is not the province of the Chair to pass on the merits or demerits of any amendment or its wisdom or justice. It appears to the Chair that this amendment is clearly, distinctly, and logically connected with the general scope of a bill regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, and under these circumstances the Chair feels constrained to overrule the point of order and hold that the amendment is germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. What was the amendment?

Mr. MANN. The amendment was to apply the educational test to a bill regulating the immigration of aliens.

The SPEAKER. That was a general bill regulating immigration.

That was a general bill regulating immigration, Mr. MANN. just exactly like this one.

The SPEAKER, And the educational test was offered as an amendment.

Mr. MANN. The educational test was offered as an amend-

The SPEAKER: What section of Hinds' Precedents did the gentleman read from?

Mr. MANN. Section 5873. Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman's motion a motion to direct the committee to report the text of the Senate bill?

Mr. MANN. It is not the text of the Senate bill. Even I would know better than to try to do that. [Laughter.] It is very largely similar in many provisions, and is certainly germane to the provisions of the Senate bill and certainly germane to the general subject of immigration.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call attention to what seems to me to be a parallel case. In 1909 the gentleman from New York brought in what was known as the Payne tariff bill, and by a vote of the House certain portions of it were allowed to be voted upon and the rest were not. Of course, those portions only were subject to amendment in the consideration of the bill in accordance with the vote of the House, but when the bill came back into the House the gentleman now occupying the chair [Mr. Clark of Missouri] offered a motion to recommit proposing an entirely different policy, and it was admitted and voted on. It seems to me that the case is almost

The SPEAKER. The Chair will jog the gentleman's memory a little by stating that nobody raised a point of order against it. Mr. HILL. I admit it, but the principle is the same, and in this case the same policy is pursued.

The SPEAKER. In that case the gentleman from Connecticut and his confrères were so sure that they could vote down the motion to recommit that they never took the trouble to make a point of order against it.

Mr. HILL. Is not that the condition now?

The SPEAKER. No; the situation is different. The Chair thinks, to add to the story, that if anybody had raised the point of order against the motion to recommit the Speaker would have been compelled to bowl it out and give permission to offer one that was in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I invite the attention of the Chair to a ruling made on the 8th of May, 1911, by Speaker Clark. It will be found on page 1120 of the Record of the first session of this Congress. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] offered a motion to recommit a tariff bill—the farmers' free-list bill, I think—inserting as section 2 of the bill a certain paragraph. After a good deal of discussion the Speaker decided the question as follows:

It is not necessary for the Chair to pass any opinion on the wisdom or unwisdom of this new rule. It is his duty to decide according to the rule. It is clear that the amendment offered by way of a motion to recommit under this rule would not have been in order if offered as an amendment, and on the high authorities of Speaker Reed and Speaker Cannon, I sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Ala-

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] appealed from the decision of the Chair, and the Chair was sustained by a vote of 200 as against 129. The gentleman from Massachusetts voted

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts is in error as to what rule the Speaker was referring to when he referred to this new rule. The gentleman from Massachusetts says he had reference to the motion to recommit; that was not the case, as I remember it. The gentleman has the papers before him, and I do not have, but he can correct me if I am in error. My recollection is that the Speaker had reference to this rule, which was a new rule, the motion to recommit being as old as the hills. It is the rule under which the Speaker decided that question:

No amendment shall be in order to any bill affecting revenue which is not germane to the subject matter in the bill; nor shall any amendment to any item of such bill be in order which does not directly relate to the item to which the amendment is proposed.

When I offered the motion to recommit at that time I did it for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that a rule had been adopted specially relating to tariff legislation which took that kind of legislation out from the general provision in reference to offering amendments and motions to recommit.

The Speaker was probably right in his ruling on that question, but that was under the special rule limiting the right of amendment on tariff legislation, and by itself indicates that without that special rule the motion to recommit, such as I have offered, is germane on other matters.

This is not an entirely new proposition. When the immigra-tion bill was before the House in the Fifty-ninth Congress there was a provision in it with reference to an educational test. The bill was considered under a special rule providing for amendment, I believe, to two sections of the bill, one of them being the educational test. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Grosvenor, proposed an amendment to strike out the section providing for the educational test and to insert in place of it a new section providing for a commission to study the whole, subject of immigration. The gentleman from Massachusetts at that time made the same point of order which he makes now, that the proposed amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Grosvenor, was not germane. But the Chairman ruled that it was germane, and held it in order, and it was adopted, although it was not germane to the particular section. It was germane to this bill, it being a general immigration bill, and on the strength of that the Chair held, and properly held, that it was a proper amendment. The same kind of amendment would have been in order in Committee of the Whole at this time if it had not been for the gag rule which was passed to prevent amendments except the one that the Committee on Rules favored. But the operation of that rule has ceased, except so far as the previous question applies.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the decision to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes is distinctly the worst decision I ever heard made in that chair.

Mr. MANN. Many people think that when they are overruled. They always "cuss" the court.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman desires, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman, although I dislike to hear him libel a splendid former Member of Congress and one of the greatest Chairmen we ever had.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with that decision, because it was at the time of the hair-pulling match six years ago upon this educational test. By the terms of the special rule under which we were operating at that time only 2 sections of the long bill of 38 or more sections were open to amendment. Nobody on earth thinks a provision for an immigration commission is germane to an educational test, and yet it was practically so decided at the educational test, and yet it was practically so decided at the time. The Chair in his ruling began by saying that inasmuch as no one had seen fit to raise a point of order against a certain previous amendment offered by Mr. Littauer, therefore Members were estopped in the case of the Grosvenor amendment. The Chair admitted that the Littauer amendment was not strictly in order, and clearly indicated his belief that the Littauer amendment and the Grosvenor amendment involved the same question of order. Then he went on to say that owing to the exceptionally narrow rule under which the bill was being considered, permitting, as it did, amendments to only 2 out of some 38 sections, he considered the case worthy of exception, and so he held the Grosvenor amendment to be in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair indulge me for moment upon this question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly, although the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this matter is very clear. The House is about to vote on the bill S. 3175, an act to regulate the immigration of immigrants into the United States-an act covering the entire subject. A motion to recommit is offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] under paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Wyoming say is before the House?

Mr MONDELL. The bill S. 3175.

The SPEAKER. Is that whole bill before the House? Mr. MONDELL. Clearly, Mr. Speaker, it is, as I was going on to elucidate. Assuming that the statement I have made is a correct statement, that the House has before it this bill and is about to vote upon it, the gentleman offers a motion to recommit under the rule. That motion is in order if germane to this bill and its provisions, and clearly the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois is germane to the general provisions of the bill. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that we considered this bill under a special rule, but that special rule can not be construed to in any way affect paragraph 4 of Rule XVI. There is a provision of the rules that no special rule shall take away or modify the rights under the motion to recommit. After the motion for the previous question prevailed the special rule ceased to operate. The House is now considering this measure as though it had been taken up in the usual way under the rules. As a matter of fact, if we are to assume that the special rule still operates, still the motion is in order, because the special rule simply gave precedence to a certain amendment and did not, as the gentleman from Wisconsin assured us, and as the gentleman from Massachusetts assured us, prevent the House from the consideration of the entire subject matter contained in the Senate bill after the privileged amendment offered by the committee had been considered. The fact that the House did not see fit to consider the Senate bill does not change the situation. So whichever way you take it, even assuming that we are operating under the rule, and I do not believe we are, the gentlemen who defend that rule all insist that the rule has no other effect, that nothing else was intended but to give the House an opportunity to first take up a certain amendment, and then, if it so desired, to consider the entire matter. But if we take the other horn of the dilemma, assume the other, which I believe to be the correct view of the matter, that we are now proceeding under paragraph 4, Rule XVI, independent of the special rule, then clearly the House has before it this bill and all it contains and any motion to recommit germane to the general proposition contained in the bill is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The rule about motions to recommit is simple enough in its statement, though it is sometimes difficult to apply it. It is that the propositions contained in a motion to recommit must have been germane to the subject matter of the bill if offered as an amendment. The special provision which the gentleman from Illinois has cited on two or three occasions in his argument, that in revenue bills the amendment must be germane both to the particular item that is pending as well as to the general bill, has nothing to do with this controversy. That was a special provision, made for special reasons. The situation in this case is very peculiar. The Chair does not believe that a similar situation has arisen in the 18 years he has been in the House. In the first place, this special rule is peculiar. It contains a provision that the Chair does not remember ever to have seen in one before; and while the House got out from under that rule when it got back the House was trying to do and what the House intended to do: Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3175, with the amendment reported by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

into the House, still the Chair will read the rule and see what

Of course, everybody who paid any attention to the debate knows the amendment was a substitute and covered everything the House wanted to do.

That there shall be four hours' general debate, to be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the measure. At the expiration of said four hours' general debate the same shall be considered under the five-minute rule as follows: The amendment proposed by the House committee shall be first read for amendment and perfected. After same has been so perfected the vote shall be taken upon the question of the adoption of said amendment. If same shall be adopted, then the Senate bill shall not be read—

That is the remarkable statement in that rule. If it ever was in any other, the Chair has forgotten it-

Was in any other, the chair has forgotten it—

If same shall be adopted, then the Senate bill shall not be read, but the committee shall rise and report the measure to the House. If it shall not be adopted, then the Senate bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule, and when perfected the committee shall rise and report the same to the House. Immediately upon the perfected measure being reported to the House the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the bill and all pending amendments to final passage amendments to final passage

And there was only one amendment, that is the committee amendment, and it was not changed in a single respectand all pending amendments to final passage without intervening motions, except one motion to recommit. But a separate vote may be demanded upon any amendment or amendments thereto adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The only purpose of reading that rule was to show what the louse was trying to get at. Evidently the intention of the House was trying to get at. Evidently the intention of the House was to consider the educational test and nothing else. The Senate bill has never even been read to the House. question before the House is evidently this educational test and nothing else.

Mr. MANN. Will the Speaker pardon me for making a sug-

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The rules reserve the right of the minority to make a motion to recommit. Under the rules the Committee on Rules can not even report a rule which affects the right of the minority to make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that, but that is a stringent provision to safeguard the rights of the minority-not the political minority but the legislative minority-on any particular

Mr. MANN. I understand; but the adoption of a rule by the House can not affect the right of the minority to make a motion to recommit, which they would have the right to make if no rule was adopted in the House, because the majority, under the rule, can not take away by special rule the right of the minority to test the sense of the House on a motion to recommit, but if the Speaker holds that having adopted a special rule whereby the minority lost a portion of its right to recommit, that rule will be rendered somewhat innocuous.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not mean to rule that the minority lost any of their rights. The Chair says this, that the propositions contained in a motion to recommit must have been propositions which would have been germane if offered as amendments.

The Senate bill discusses the whole question of immigration. It defines the terms to be used. It has a section in it as to what shall happen to people in the Philippines, and so on, and so on, to the end of the bill. But the House indicated its intentions to hold this matter down to the educational test. That is all the Chair reads this special rule for. Under the rule the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] could not offer the propositions in this motion to recommit as amendments in the Committee of the Whole. The House was so determined that it would not consider the Senate bill that it provided it should not be even read-a most extraordinary provision.

There is another thing about this. The Chair has heldthis occupant of the chair, and it was held before, although not quite so elaborately as the present Speaker stated it, because the matter had not been argued, I suppose, so vociferously-but on one occasion the Chair held that you could not do by indirection, in a motion to recommit, what you could not do by direction, and the Chair was backed up by the authority of a long line of illustrious Speakers. They did not go into it as fully as I did. You can not take a proposition that has been ruled out directly by the House and put it back again by a motion to recommit.

As far as the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] is concerned, when the Payne tariff bill reached the proper stage I offered a motion to recommit, largely for the sake of expressing my own opinion about the tariff subject, and I set forth in that motion to recommit most of the propositions that I thought ought to be put into a tariff bill. Some of them had nothing to do with the things which properly would have been in a motion to recommit, and I knew it as well as anybody else did when I offered it.

I supposed that somebody on that side would raise the parliamentary point against it. If that had been done, I had another motion in my pocket to recommit that would have been in order. But nobody raised the point, and consequently they voted on my motion to recommit and voted it down by a substantial majority, which I expected they would do.

In this case clearly the only thing about immigration before this House is the educational test. If the general Senate bill had been pending and the previous question had not been or-dered, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] or any other gentleman had offered the educational test as an amend-ment to a general immigration bill, the Chair would have held it in order, because it would have been in order. But this situation turns the question squarely around. The matter pending before this House is on the educational test. This motion of the gentleman proposes to recommit with an entire immigration bill as an amendment. Consequently the point of order is sustained. [Applause.] The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURNETT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 123, noes 37.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of no quorum. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr.

Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there is a call of the House now it would mean that we would vote "yea" or "nay," I understand, on the bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. Of course. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask whether the vote will be in favor of the Senate bill and the House amendment? The SPEAKER. The practical effect of it is to adopt the House bill, if you get a majority in favor of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Pardon me one moment, Mr. Speaker. Several times in the early stages of the discussion, and particularly in the Chair's announcement of his decision on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], the Speaker referred to the House amendment as a substitute to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair referred to it as being in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That left the impression upon the minds of many of the Members that they were to vote ultimately on the House amendment which embodied the educa-

The SPEAKER. That is all they are voting on,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then there is nothing-

Mr. GARRETT. Did the Chair announce that there was no quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not formally announce it. Mr. GARRETT. I understood the Chair announced that there was no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the bill as amended—that is, this House substitute—will vote "yea" and those opposed "nay."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When we vote now do we vote only upon the question of the educational test as embodied in the House amendment or does that vote include—

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what you vote upon.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And not upon the Senate bill, which has not been discussed?

The SPEAKER. Technically you are voting on the Senate bill, but really you are voting on the House bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course, everybody understands that this is the last vote on the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Does this vote pass the House bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the House amendment has already been adopted.

Mr. JAMES. The regular order, Mr. Speaker. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then we are compelled to vote on both bills.

The SPEAKER. If you are in favor of the educational test, on this roll call vote "yea"; and if you are opposed to it, vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 179, nays 52, answered "present" 8, not voting 150, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For this vote:

Mr. SWITZER (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. Berger (against)

Mr. Howard (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. THAYER (against)

Mr. Covington (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. Doremus (against)

Mr. PARRAN (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. WEDEMEYER

(against) Mr. LAFEAN (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. CONRY

(against) Mr. THOMAS (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. BOEHNE (against).

Only on final passage of bill:
Mr. McCall (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. Copley (against)

Mr. GUDGER (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. DANIEL A. DRISCOLL (against)

Mr. HARDWICK (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. VREELAND

Mr. GUERNSEY (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. McGilli-CUDDY (against).

Mr. Doughton (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. Kahn (against)

Mr. KITCHIN (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. LOBECK (against)

Mr. Palmer (in favor of Burnett bill) with Mr. Smith of New York (against)

Until further notice: Mr. Arkin of South Carolina with Mr. Fordney.

Mr. HARRISON of New York with Mr. DE FOREST.

Mr. CLINE with Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. GREGG of Texas with Mr. LAWRENCE.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana with Mr. Sulloway.

Mr. Robinson with Mr. Griest. Mr. Sisson with Mr. McKenzie.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York with Mr. LAFFERTY.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire if the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, voted?

The SPEAKER. He is not recorded.

Mr. MANN. I am paired with that gentleman. I voted "no." and I desire to withdraw my vote, and to be recorded "present." The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. BURNETT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unantmous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama who there is who has spoken who has not obtained leave to extend already? I think everybody who spoke has obtained leave to extend, with one excep-I should be glad to have leave extended to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. BURNETT. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

DYER] did not get leave.

Mr. MANN. I thought he did.

Mr. MANN. I thought he did. Mr. BURNETT. I think there are several gentlemen who did not, and I am not sure that I did.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman did.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. I shall object to the general request. I have no objection to specific requests.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I asked leave to extend there was objection. I now ask for leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DYER. I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] ask unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. In view of the lateness of the session I move that the House appoint a committee of conference.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is

Mr. BURNETT. The same course was pursued in the immigration bill when the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Watson, was in the chair.

The SPEAKER. For what reason does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Why is it not in order?

Mr. MANN. There is no disagreement as yet between the vo Houses. We have amended the Senate bill, but they have not disagreed, and until the point of disagreement is reached conferees can only be appointed by unanimous consent. It is sometimes done by unanimous consent, but conference comes from disagreement. Neither body can appoint a conference committee until there is a disagreement and an insistence upon the position which that body takes. The Senate may agree to the House amendment, but until the Senate hay agree to the House amendment, but until the Senate disagrees and in-sists upon that it is not in order to appoint conferees. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the rule is perfectly clear. There is no disagreement necessary. It is an old principle of parliamentary law that conferees may be appointed and a conference asked for before disagreement. I invite the attention of the Chair to Jefferson's Manual. I am vite the attention of the Chair to Jefferson's Manual. I am reading from paragraph 5264, volume 5, Hinds' Precedents, as follows:

A conference may be asked before the House asking it has come to a resolution of disagreement, insisting or adhering. In which case the papers are not left with the other conferees, but are brought back to be the foundation of the vote to be given.

This same question arose on the 25th of June, 1906. The point of order was not made against the motion of Mr. Watson, who, after being Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, moved to appoint conferees. But I, knowing that the motion was to be made at the time, had inquired in an informal way of parliamentarians in the House, and I found that there was no disagreement whatever as to the power of the House to appoint conferees before the resolution of disagreement had been arrived at. If the syllabus at the beginning of the paragraph 6254 in this precedent is read the third paragraph says distinctly:

conference may be asked before the House has come to a resolution A conference of disagreement.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Was that a case where the House that could disagree was asking for the conference? Is not this a case where the House has already acted?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; the case was absolutely parallel.

Mr. SHERLEY. What the gentleman read does not seem to indicate it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly; they have either got to insist, adhere, or recede.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is a case where the Senate might ask for a conference, but this is a case where the House asks for a conference on a bill of the Senate that it has amended.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have told the gentleman that that was an exactly parallel case. The House had amended a Senate bill by substitution.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand, and that was done by unanimous consent. I am asking the gentleman if what he reads from Jefferson's Manual-

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is the general principle; it says "the House," which means the Chamber, as the gentleman knows from his long familiarity with Jefferson's

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not know it, and if the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit me, I think he may get my point. The reference there to the House is to the House that may agree or disagree and not to the House that has acted on a matter, as this House has.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is especially after action, before coming to the resolution of disagreement. There is no intermediate stage. "A conference may be asked before the House asking it has come to a resolution of disagreement to insist or adhere."

Mr. SHERLEY. This is a case where the House has come to a resolution of disagreement by amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. All right. Then it is clearly a resolution of disagreement, and you can ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. SHERLEY. The point that I desire to suggest to the gentleman is this-

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, suppose the Senate should

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. One gentleman at a time. can not answer too many at once.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. The suggestion I desire to make is that the paragraph that the gentleman read from Jefferson's Manual indicates that the House would have before it the question of whether it would recede from its position or insist, and that in that case it could ask for a conference before acting om it by receding or further insisting.

This is a case of a House having a bill from the other body and having amended it. There is nothing that this House can now do until the Senate has asked for a conference or has receded from its position and agreed to the position of the House

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Not until I have answered the gentleman from Kentucky. There are only two possible stages in which a House can find itself—either that it has come to a resolution of disagreement or that it has not come to a resolution of disagreement. A mere disagreement is not a resolution of disagreement. After a resolution of disagreement had been arrived at, I have never heard it disputed that it was in order to ask for a conference. I have heard it disputed this morning by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], whether you might ask for a conference before a resolution of disagreement had been arrived at. There are three resolutions of disagreement, to wit, to insist, to adhere, or to recede. The question as to the ability of the House to ask for a committee of conference after one of those three votes has been taken is undoubted, and unquestionably, if we are to follow Jefferson's Manual, it is also in order to ask for a conference before it is arrived at.

To continue:

To continue:

A conference may be asked before the House asking of it has come to a resolution of disagreement, insisting or adhering, in which case the papers are not left with the other conferees, but are brought back to be the foundation of the vote to be given. And this is the most reasonable and respectful proceeding, for, as was urged by the Lords on a particular occasion, "it is held vain and below the wisdom of Parliament to reason or argue against reasonable resolutions and upon terms of impossibility to persuade." So the Commons say, "An adherence is never delivered at a free conference, which implies debate." And on another occasion the Lords made it an objection that the Commons had asked a free conference after they had made resolutions of adhering. It was then affirmed, however, on the part of the Commons that nothing was more parliamentary than to proceed with free conferences after adhering, etc.

Mr. Sherries of the Commons to the conferences after adhering, the conferences after adhering to the conference after the shear of the commons had asked a free conference after they had made resolutions of adhering.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that there is not presented to this House the question of whether the House shall recede or shall insist upon the disagreement. That question is presented to the Senate, and there the proposition that the gentleman is here presenting would be, under the authority he cites, in order; but it is not a condition that confronts this House at all.

The gentleman is famil-Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts.

iar with the reference to 3 Hatsell.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I know that particular reference, but I am familiar with what the gentleman has just read.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman ever known of an occasion where the right of the House to appoint conferees before arriving at a resolution of disagreement has before been questioned?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not recall any instance except the one that the gentleman recites. The absence of precedents would indicate that it was never before thought of.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Until the gentleman from Illinois suggested it, I thought it was an indisputable right. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I voted with the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I hope to see this measure enacted into law, but aside from the question of the regularity of procedure now proposed, is not the gentleman prejudicing his measure by what he proposes? I do not know anything as to the state of mind at the other end of the Capitol-

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It seems to me that the gentleman is discussing the merits of the motion and not the point of order. I am willing to discuss the point of order with the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me to make a very brief statement? It is altogether possible that the measure passed by the House might be acceptable at the other end of the Capitol. The motion proposed by the gentleman precludes the possibility of an agreement and postpones in any event the final enactment of the legislation.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I was simply going to ask if it was not possible that the Senate might accept the action of the House and in that case there would not be anything for a conference. In view of that possibility of the Senate accepting the action of the House, would it not be unwise to ask for a conference in advance of our knowledge of what the Senate will do?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The wisdom of the action is a question to be decided after the point of order is settled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I was waiting until I might say a word without offending the sensibilities of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I was waiting until the gentleman from Massachusetts had yielded the floor. He seems to dislike to have anyone interrupt him, and hence I did not interrupt him. The first object of a conference is that there should be a disagreement between the two bodies. It is true, as stated in Jefferson's Manual in one place, "A conference has been asked after the first reading of a bill. This is a singular instance." That is the language of Mr. Jefferson, not mine. Then preceding that is a footnote by the parliamentary clerk, "Obsolete provision as to a conference on first reading." What is a conference on matters pertaining to legislation on bills and amendments? It is to compose differences between the two bodies. The House may ask for a conference with the Senate on an immigration subject if it pleases. It is wholly within the power of the House to ask for a conference with the Senate on the subject of whether the President should be removed or whether his term should be extended or shortened, or a constitutional amendment, but the purpose of this conference is to compose differences relating to the amendments to the bill. There are no differences between the House and the Senate. The House has passed an amendment and until the Senate disagrees to that amendment there is no disagreement between the two bodies.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not bother the gentleman from Illinois for further argument. The proper function of a conference committee is to settle differences between the two Houses, and there are no differences between the two Houses as far as has been developed. For all the House knows or all the Chair knows the Senate will accept this amendment, and therefore the point of order is sustained. A motion to insist would have been in order, and the Chair will not say that in an emergency as to time or any other thing of the sort he would not hold the pending motion out of order, but no emergency exists, and this bill should take the usual course.

TOLLS ON PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an interview published in the New York Herald of Sunday, December 15 of this year, with the Hon. Steven B. Ayres, one of my colleagues from New York, on the subject of tolls on the Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks to have printed in the Congressional Record an editorial from the New York Herald of a certain date containing an interview with his colleague Mr. Ayres. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The interview is as follows:

The interview is as follows:

Great Britain's protest against the decision of Congress to give American vessels in the coastwise trade free passage through the Panama Canal has found strong support in the press of the United States. Many of the great newspapers are urging that the action of Congress be rescinded or that the question be sent to The Hague for arbitration. The reason given is that the word of the United States has been pledged by the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and that if we now do not live up scrupulously to the terms of that treaty we shall stand before the world a faithless Nation.

It is easy to sympathize with a sentiment so admirable, because every citizen desires to uphold the honor of his country. But in the present instance this sentiment is beside the mark; it is not properly called forth, since the honor of our Government is not involved.

Congress has in its action on this question followed a precedent long ago, established, well known to Great Britain, and acquiesced in by her Government for 95 years. The protest now lodged is specious and undoubtedly made in the same spirit which has animated Great Britain in all the marine treaties and conventions she has hitherto negotiated with us. And it is to be observed that the grounds upon which this formal protest are made are different from those stated last summer, when the tentative protest was filed. Then it was stated that a repayment by the United States of the toils charged to American vessels would be violative of the spirit of the treaty. But since then Great Britain has perceived that the temper of the American people is adverse to the repayment of toils or the payment of any subsidy whatever to our merchant vessels, and that the contention has therefore been abandoned as academic.

OPPOSES AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

OPPOSES AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

In considering this subject it must be remembered that Great Britain has always been hostile to any effort of ours to establish an American merchant marine and share with her the carrying thade of the world. After the formation of our Constitution the earliest measures adopted at the first session of Congress in 1789 were those granting differentials in duties and tonnage dues to American ships.

These differentials, and the fact that Great Britain was constantly involved in marine warfare with other European nations, so built up our merchant marine that by 1810 our ships not only carried 90 per cent of our own commerce but also a large percentage of the indirect trade of the world. And it was to drive our ships out of this indirect trade, where we were keen competitors, that the War of 1812 was forced upon us. That war was disastrous to us and absolutely successful to her, because it almost entirely destroyed our indirect carrying trade and we were compelled to negotiate and assent to the reciprocity treaty of 1815. This treaty declared, among other matters:

"There shall be between the territories of the United States of America and all the territories of His Britannic Majesty in Europe a reciprocal liberty of commerce.

"So higher or other duties or charges shall be imposed in any of the ports of the United States on British vessels than those payable in the same ports by vessels of the United States nor in the ports of any of His Britannic Majesty's territories in Europe on the vessels of the United States than shall be payable in the same ports on British vessels."

SAVING COASTWISE TRADE.

SAVING COASTWISH TRADE,

Now, this is absolutely the same spirit breathed in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty—equality of tolls and charges, the same to one country as to the other. Yet what followed? Our foreign commerce was prostrated at the termination of the war. Many of the vessels remaining lay rotting at the wharves of Boston and New York and Philadelphia.
Therefore, in 1817, Congress enacted a law which absolutely prohibited British vessels from engaging in our coastwise trade—the trade from one American port to another. This law reads:

"No merchandise shall be imported, under penalty of forfeiture thereof, from one port of the United States to another port of the United States in a vessel belonging wholly or in part to a subject of any foreign power."

This law was entirely subversive of that portion of the treaty of 1815 which stated that "no higher or other duties" shall be charged on British ships than on those of the United States. It established for the first time, and perhaps for all time, our own coastwise trade.
Yet the law stood, and it has been acquiesced in by Great Britain since that time.

since that time.

since that time.

Congress has now adopted the same policy precisely with regard to the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. As I view the matter, by the paragraph in the Panama Canal act granting free toils to our coastwise marine Congress abrogated such part of that treaty as conflicted with the Panama Canal act, just as the law of 1817 abrogated that part of the reciprocity treaty of 1815 with which it was in conflict.

STATUS OF A COMMERCIAL TREATY.

Now, those persons who believe that this conduct involves the honor of the Nation—and their motives are of the highest—do so from a misconception of what a commercial treaty really is. A commercial treaty is not a document like a promissory note, in which a promise is made for a consideration to do or perform certain acts. A commercial treaty is merely a statement, agreed to and signed by the agents of the contracting parties, of the terms upon which the contracting parties find it most desirable and most comfortable and most advantageous to have relations with each other. When either of the contracting parties finds that it is undesirable to continue such relations, it is its right to give notice of such fact and terminate such relations.

And by inserting the free-toll provision in the Panama Canal act Congress merely gave notice, at least two years before it became effective, of its intention to abrogate that portion of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. And the remission of tolls was not considered as a gift or subsidy to our domestic merchant marine, because it is well understood that competition between lines now in existence and those which will come into existence will lower the marine freight rates by precisely the amount of the remitted tolls.

What Congress then believed was that the lower the marine rates could be kept between the two coasts the better chance shippers would have of emancipation from transcontinental railroads and that farther inland would be moved the zone of competition between rail and marine rates. In other words, Congress believed that the remission of tolls was not to be so direct a benefit to the coastwise marine as to the merchants and consumers who pay the freights. The reason Great Britain protests against the remission of tolls is because her economists know, better than the great bulk of our people yet know, what an effect the Panama Canal is to have on our commerce with South America. That commerce is now largely carried by British ships, and her statesmen fear, and well may fear, the effect upon her indirect carrying trade of the opening of the Panama Canal with free tolls to vessels of the United States. Even the prospect of this condition has given an impetus to American shipbuilding that it has never had since steel vessels were built.

The interesting, the suggestive fact is that for the first time since the era of iron steamships began American capital has now just begun to take an interest in marine investments. In the last year, for the first time in our history, steam cargo vessels built in American shipyards, officered by American citizens, flying the American flag, have been chartered to carry American products to European ports. Great Britain has bested us in the past, with commercial treaties cleverly

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 26874, and move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. Saunders in the chair.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, we arrived at the end of line 20, page 4, and I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of school and agency buildings, and for sewerage, water supply, and lighting plants, $300,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I notice in the bill which was passed last year there was an appropriation of $480,000 for this same pur-pose. This year it is $300,000. Would the chairman of the committee permit a question upon the matter?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

I desire to ask why the reduction in the Mr. RAKER.

appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will notice that of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1912 $130,000 remained unexpended. There is quite an unexpended balance, and, again, there are numerous items carrying appropriations for new buildings, and we have not put in any new buildings at all. Those two reasons show the reason why we have not granted the full amount.

Mr. RAKER. From the report of the committee and bill one would not be advised as to what buildings these are that are under construction or intended to be constructed under the appropriation for last year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that each one of the superintendents having charge of these agencies and schools has made recommendation for new buildings and the enlargement of buildings, and so forth, requiring new construction, but we did not feel that it was the best thing to do at the present time.

Mr. RAKER. Do I understand from the committee that it is the intention of the committee at this time to oppose all new improvements about and around the schools?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have not appropriated for a single new building or for the enlargement of plants now.

Mr. RAKER. I ask the chairman's attention to this. For instance, where it is really and absolutely for the life and condition of the school, as for the construction of a septic tank, the building of dormitories for the boys, and so forth, as, for instance in a school there is one large building, the girls in one end and the boys at the other, and they have to go up the there be built for this particular location a dormitory for the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not that school separately appropriated for?

Mr. RAKER. No; it is not. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Then it can be paid out of the lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. RAKER. The trouble with it is that they do not pay it out unless we especially provide for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Your trouble is with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. RAKER. These appropriations are all parceled out to the schools generally.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me state to the gentleman that the department, under "new construction," used last year $155,722 for repairs, $105,671 for rents, and elsewhere $35,560, and they failed to take the appropriation of $130,000, which is remaining unexpended. Why do they want more money when they did not expend last year the money that was given them?

Mr. RAKER. Suppose that in a particular case, now, there is no apportionment by the Indian Bureau-the Department of Indian Affairs-for the various schools; or, suppose it has been made, it is so insufficient that these improvements can not be made. If the department recommends such new improvement and it is necessary for the proper conduct of the school, I apprehend that the committee would not seriously oppose such legislation, would they? Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have given them more money than they used last year by $130,000, and if they had seen proper to do so they could have built the stairways and additional improvements, as you suggest. We have furnished them the money. As you state, your schools are under the general appropriation act, and they have appropriated a lump sum for that purpose. Therefore you ought to get this out of the lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I called attention the other day when this bill was under consideration to the fact that there were no printed hearings. Since that time I have been furnished with a copy of what purports to be hearings before the committee. In regard to this particular item, I find there were no hearings, but that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs furnished the committee with a statement in justification of the increase of $120,000 asked, and the committee's reply to that was a reduction of $180,000. The commissioner sets forth in detail the expenditures that he desires to make under this head, and the committee does not seem to have interrogated the commissioner or anyone else as to the necessity for those buildings and improvements, or any portion of them, but have reduced the item from $480,000 last year to $300,000 this year, although the commissioner had asked me for an increase of $600,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will examine the statement from the commissioner, on page 26, next to the last paragraph, he will find this language:

It will be noted that of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1912, $130,000 remains unexpended.

Now, if they had that much money left that had not been expended last year, why should we increase it this year?

Mr. MONDELL. He refers to unforeseen and unfortunate conditions or circumstances which prevented him from spending the money for construction and betterments for which it was appropriated. But the money he is asking for now is for other and further construction and improvement.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to state that at the top of this same page-page 26-we find for new construction, $155,742.45? We did not give them that because we thought it was not necessary. We thought the schools as they now exist, with the great amount for repairs and improvements on the school buildings, was sufficient.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the committee interrogate the commissioner at all in regard to the necessity in any of these cases?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We had him before us and went over the various items, and the subcommittee had a few hearings with him.

Mr. MONDELL. I can not find out. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can point out the place in the hearings where the commisioner was interrogated in regard to these items.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am not certain that we had a stenographer present at the time the commissioner was interrogated about this item, but we notified him that it was not the intention of the committee to construct any new buildings outside same stairs in the same building.

Now, the superintendent of this particular school is very desirous, for the proper handling and conduct of the school, that expended on buildings erected on Indian reservations. I am opposed to spending more money in building schools outside the reservations and to removing the Indians from the reservations to the outside boarding schools. I think the money can be much beter expended on the reservations than off the reservations.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that it is the chairman's understanding that this money is to be used for construction off of reservations? My understanding was exactly to the contrary. I would like to be set right in the matter if I am wrong.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I stated, we have not put any new buildings in this bill at all. It was our policy to leave that out this year.

Mr. MONDELL. But I understood the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to say that the committee had provided for no new construction off of reservations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Only lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. But this item is for improvements on reservations, is it not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This appropriation is on the reservations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, at the end of line 23, page 4, the words "three hundred thousand dollars" and substitute therefor the words "three hundred and sixty thousand dollars."

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, upon that matter I want to follow that amendment with other amendments, and I want to call the matter to the attention of the committee. not a personal matter with me, but it is a matter of the proper government and proper improvement of these schools. The first one is the school at Greenville, in Plumas County, some 200 miles south of where I live. I am familiar with the location. It is located at the side of a valley, in the foothills, and is a small piece of land of 6 or 7 acres, without a spear of grass on it, but with some oak trees and a considerable number of large pine trees on it. There is plenty of land right adjacent in the valley where we could get 20 or 30 acres for the purpose of demonstrating and teaching them how to become farmers, and get some use out of the school. This is in the heart of the Indian country. The Indians are living all about there, within 5 or 10 or 15 or 20 miles, on their allotments. If we obtain a wificient tract of lead to allow them. sufficient tract of land to allow then to have a dairy and an orchard and raise grain and vegetables we will do them some good.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On page 10 of the bill, section 3, under the head of "California," the gentleman will find this Sec. 3. For support and civilization of Indians in California, including pay of employees, and for the purchase of small tracts of land situated adjacent to lands heretofore purchased, and for improvements on lands for the use and occupancy of Indians in California, $57,000.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is a special fund for the gentleman's State, and it covers the exact reasons that the gentleman gives for the acquisition of this additional land.

Mr. RAKER. The general idea is all right, but the superintendent wants that for other purposes, and ours would be excluded entirely.

Now, I believe that the committee and the House do not want to appropriate money unnecessarily. The object is to benefit those who attend the schools. In the first place there is no water supply, and in the next place there is no laundry here, with one hundred and some odd pupils, and there is no place to teach the boys to be efficient in blacksmithing and in learning to repair their wagons and doing some work out on the farm. If you are going to have your school-and it is there-why not have a blacksmith shop in connection with the school, as they have at other places? While there is $57,000 appropriated generally in the main bill, it does not provide for it for these other schools. I shall ask $26,800 for this particular school at Greenville, first for the construction of a septic tank and sewerage system, $3,000; for an employees' building, to be used for employees' quarters, club, kitchen, and dining room, $4,000; for shop building for instructing boys in blacksmithing and carpentry, $1,200.

Right in that connection, can there be anything better done than to give these young Indian boys practical lessons in carpentry, so that when they go on their allotments, which they all have, or when they go to their homes, they may be competent to build upon their allotments and may become blacksmiths, with sufficient knowledge to repair wagons and tools as white men do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RAKER. I shall not take up much more of the time of the committee, but I should like to have unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman a question in that connection.

Mr. RAKER. I submit for a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that these schools which the gentleman mentions are not specially provided for?

Mr. RAKER. They are not specially provided for.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then they come under the general lump-sum appropriation. Is the gentleman aware that this language is carried in the bill, beginning in line 10, page 4:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools not otherwise provided for.

That covers your schools, as I understand from your statement.

Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It provides:

And for other educational and industrial purposes in connection therewith, $1,420,000.

Now, is not that sufficient to cover the case you mention? Mr. RAKER. In answer to the question of the chairman, I will say that I have been to see the superintendent and the Indian Commissioner, and I am informed by the commissioner, Indian Commissioner, and I am informed by the commissioner, "We have these amounts specified and carried in this bill, and this school is entirely eliminated from any amount for new buildings. We can only make the necessary repairs, and if you desire to have your schools improved, you must get an additional amount included in the bill."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that in the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, about $1,700 was expended at this school in the construction of new buildings?

Mr. RAKER. Not this school, but the one 200 miles north. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I am asking about Greenville.

Mr. RAKER. I did not quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Greenville school had an average attendance of 90 pupils. Is that correct?

Mr. RAKER. About that number; yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And there was expended for new buildings-in the construction of new buildings-$1,673, and a little less than $700 for repairing.

Mr. RAKER. I think that is right.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. So we are doing something in connection with the building up of the school; and in one school in the gentleman's State last year there were new buildings constructed from this general appropriation amounting to $6,000 or $7,000.

Mr. RAKER. That was a long distance off, where it was needed. In this school the floors are worn out. When I was there in October they were putting down a new floor where the floor was worn out entirely. They put up a small new building for the superintendent's private office. Now, continuing-

For school farm: For maintaining the school stock and small dairy herd and for raising fruits, grains, and vegetables, $7,000; for a school and assembly building for general meetings and entertainments, $8,000—

There is no place now where you can assemble these pupils all together-for a complete steam-heating plant for school and accessory buildings, $6,000; for a boys' dormitory with a capacity of 75, $5,000—

There is nothing of that kind there now. You have got these young men and women there. In the first place, you ought to keep them thoroughly clean. You ought to teach them to do these things-to keep their clothes in proper shape for a steam laundry, with a capacity of washing and ironing for 150 persons, $2,600.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I notice the last item was a steam laundry. I have followed the gentleman with interest, and generally with full accord in his views; but when he proposes a steam laundry at a place where he is trying to teach Indian girls how to carry on and perform the duties of the household, it seems to me that he is not in harmony with the views he has generally expressed. Does not the gentleman think it would be very much better to invest the money in washtubs and washboards and teach the girls how to wash? Can they have a steam laundry in each tepee when they get back to the reservation? What advantage to them is it to see a steam laundry in opera-

Mr. RAKER. I will answer the gentleman's question. The gentleman's argument is fallacious. He evidently has not been in an Indian school where they have a steam laundry.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, yes; I have.

Mr. RAKER. He does not realize that they have the washtubs also; he does not realize that it teaches them how to do general laundry work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment. I am in favor of this increase, but I hope it will not all be used at one school in California, and particularly not for the construction of a laundry. Now, I do not mean to say that steam laundries are not necessary about Indian schools, but I have more than once on the floor of the House, and several times when about Indian schools, called attention to the fact that we do better, if instead of paying quite so much attention to elaborate up-to-date machinery for carrying on the work, teach these Indians, boys and girls, to do the things they must do when they go back to the farms.

We are educating them with a view of their being able to support themselves on their lands. We ought to educate them on the reservation, and we ought to keep them, so far as we can, with their families while we are educating them, so that the daily contact will not only improve the mind and the character of the pupil, but improve and elevate the people at home. We ought to teach the young girls how to use the washtub and the washboard; the boys to farm, mend harness, do iron and wood work.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes, and there are other points that I want to discuss. I think the chairman did not intend to say a moment ago that this appropriation was for schools not on Indian reservations. If I am rightly informed, it is for schools on Indian reservations. These are reservation schools, and nonreservation schools are provided for in a separate item. There are, however, reservation schools that are also provided for in separate items. Among such schools there is one in my State. The committee in its wisdom did not grant what the commissioner asked for—a new dairy barn at that school. The present dairy barn is about to fall down; it is propped up. I saw it a few months ago, and it was in a sadly dilapidated condition.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is a nonreservation school, is it?

Mr. MONDELL. It is one of the reservation schools carried in a separate item.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Separately appropriated for?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; and we can get nothing out of this appropriation for that barn, and the committee did not see fit to provide for the appropriation in a separate item. We shall get no benefit for that dairy barn, even though the amendment of the gentleman shall prevail. When we reach the other item, I hope the committee will give me an opportunity to call their attention to the fact that it is a needed structure, serving an exceedingly useful purpose—that of housing the dairy stock on the reservation—and that it needs rebuilding. They have a fine herd of cows, they are producing butter and, I think, cheese, They have a and doing many useful things. As that barn can not be built from this appropriation, I hope the committee, when they reach the other, will provide for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have already allowed you

$4,000.

Mr. MONDELL. That is for general repairs on a great reservation. The chairman is sufficiently familiar with these matters to know that that amount is necessary for general and ordinary repairs, but what is wanted is a special item of $4,000 for this barn.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if there are other buildings on the reservation besides school buildings, agency buildings, and so forth?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They may be repaired and new buildings constructed out of the appropriation. The appropriation for the school can only be used at that particular school.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands that the Indian Office holds that they can not use any of the general appropriation for such construction as I have referred to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They can not use any of the general appropriations for any schools that are specifically appropriated for.

Mr. MONDELL. This barn is in connection with the school. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will be voted down.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I pick up the report, and I find the following:

This bill carries appropriations payable from the Federal Treasury as follows: For gratuity appropriations, $6,052,393.28; for fulfilling treaty stipulations, $740,560; for reimbursable items, $850,000; and further appropriations aggregating $489,075.07 payable from Indian trust funds now on deposit in the United States Treasury.

The reimbursable item is smaller, I think, than is commonsmaller than it used to be. Reimbursements formerly did not materialize to any great extent. I think that most of the Indians now have citizenship, have they not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A great many of them have. Mr. CANNON. And their last estate is worse than their first, as a general rule. The best Indians, the richest Indians from a material standpoint, and perhaps from every other standpoint, are in Oklahoma, and I recollect a few days ago hearing what was not encouraging in reports from that State, so far as the Indian is concerned. I was led to believe that the time is not far distant when great blocks of these people will be absolutely without property, a charge upon the Federal Treasury, or a charge upon the State of Oklahoma. I know there are exceptions. The Indians, of course, are human beings. Away back in 1885 I was upon a committee to make investigations of the Indian Service. We made a very thorough investiga-tion. Judge Holman was the chairman of that committee. Great amounts of money were being expended to educate the Indian. He received an education that he did not utilize after he had received it. Of course there was an exception here and I speak from a general standpoint. We found that when the Indian went out of the public schools it seemed to be a matter of pride to have him become an ordinary Indian, and the educated schoolgirl to go back to her former state or to the estate of her mother and grandmother. We must walk before we can run.

I wish every Indian school in this country were abolished. I refer to the kind of schools that are covered by the amendment. I would have education such as would pay and would be practical. It will take generations for the Indians to grow as it took generations for our forebears to grow. It is not very encouraging-

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CANNON. Yes.
Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I gather from what the gentleman says that he feels that some line of industrial pursuits would bring about more civilization and advancement among the Indians than would be this intense education.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.
Mr. FERRIS. In that I am in full accord with the gentleman. Does not the gentleman think that a way could be devised among the incompetent Indians where their annuities and appropriations might be withheld from them, payable to them according to the amount of industry they manifested on their own allotments? Of course this could only reach the ablebodied ones, and perhaps only be administered among the incompetent ones

Mr. CANNON. I wish some such plan could be worked out. Some years ago I was more familiar with these appropriations than I am now, given under treaties and as gratuities, such as were given to that great Sioux people in South Dakota and to kindred tribes. They were receiving treatment and relief with-out labor, and were being treated in such a way as would have made paupers of a similar number of white people, even with all our great civilization.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Is there objection? The CHAIRMAN.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANNON. Certainly. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with what the gentleman has said after personal observation of 25 or 30 years. Does not the gentleman believe that wherever we can put an industrial school for these boys and girls that that would be the best education we could give them?

Mr. CANNON. No; I do not think so; especially if you are going to bunch them together and have your steam laundries and your higher mathematics at the same place, together with a great many other things that they will never utilize. truth is that, like the white man, on the average they do not prosper except where under the necessity of ordinary employment pretty soon after they leave the cradle the child should begin to learn that by industry they live.

I would rather have the chances of an American boy, to say nothing of Indians, who under the hand of necessity sells newspapers upon the streets or blacks boots, I would rather have his chances than those of a boy who never earned a dollar and goes to the higher schools with his automobile [applause] and all that kind of thing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CANNON. And I will make this remark, and I do not believe it can be successfully contradicted, if you go to every man in this House and every man in the Senate and every man in considerable public life in the United States and in our respective States and ask him, "Where did you have your genesis." On the farm or in the factory a genesis that involves labor and saving so that he could walk alone and develop to a good manhood. Now, I think that the treatment that the Indians have is to continue. I suspect it is to continue to pauperize them. What would I do? I do not know. I think I would have the education about where the Indian parents live and educate the parents while I was educating the boy, and I would give him subsistence according to his effort of muscle and brain.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CANNON. I do.
Mr. RAKER. Now, the schools I speak of, the ones that are involved here, are right in the center of the territory where these boys' and girls' parents live. Most of the parents and most of the boys and girls parents live. Most of the parents and most of the boys and girls, no matter how young they are, have allotments of public lands. Now, is not it better to put them in the position that when they get old enough that they may go out and use these allotments just like you give your boy and girl some opportunity to make a good livelihood? I agree with the gentleman as to the best start in helping the Indians to-day on these reservations in competition with the white men, but he has not the opportunity no matter if he does make good.

·Mr. CANNON. Oh, I tell you if a man lives on 40 acres or 20 acres and holds it, whether it is allotted to him or given to him, or whether he earned the money and bought it, he and his wife and his children are better off if they are living upon that 40 acres, and if it is necessary to train them or to give them additional knowledge that they may apply it and earn their living in the sweat of their faces do so, and if they establish that character and become competent and become thus trained they will grow and continue to grow as they have matured. May I just cite one instance. In Douglas County, Ill., way back 54 years ago there were several large tracts of land where the title was obtained frequently by men who could not read and write, a section, two sections, three sections-by military land warrants-all black lands costing about 70 cents an acre and worth now from $200 to $250 an acre.

There was one man, whom I will call Jones-I will not give his true name-who could not read and write. He was a great cattleman who had three sections of land. He knew how to There was another man, his brother-in-law, Smith, I will call him-that was not his name-who had about an equivalent amount of land. Their families grew up. Jones taught his boys how to handle stock; the other man tried to do so. Finally Jones came up into my office one day and 1 said, "How is it down in your township; how are you getting along?" He replied, "Oh, pretty well." "Well, how is Smith getting along? He has a large family and you have a large family." "Oh, first rate," says he. "But he is going to send the said and two hove over to Asbury University." "Well," family." "On, first rate," says he. "But he is going to send three girls and two boys over to Asbury University." "Well," I said, "that is all right; he has worked hard and has got the money to send them." "Yes," he said, "it is all right, but they have got the notion that they do not care about farming, and he will send them over there and when they come out of Asbury College"—that was over at Greencastle, Ind.—this man was a very profane man—"they will jist come back damn eddicated idjits"; and they did. [Laughter and applause.] eddicated idjits"; and they did. [Laughter and applause.] And the property of that family was all divided and squandered. Now, those were white folks, and how could we expect the Indians to do better than white folks? If a man gets a common-school education and learns how to make a living he will prosper and be a good citizen. If he desires to follow a specialty and requires more education by utilizing the schools, nothing can stop him. If he does not utilize the higher training, the time is wasted in attaining it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Line 4, page 23, strike out the figures "300,000" and insert in lieu thereof "360,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 3, noes 22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are only five more Members present than there are on the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. There is evidently not a quorum present. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following-named Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. Fitzgerald, as Speaker pro-tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. Saunders, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and he therewith reported a list of absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that 179 gentlemen have answered to their names, a quorum of the committee, and the Chairman reports the names of the absentees to be entered on the Journal in accordance with the rule.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be in order to report the names? They have not been reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chairman reported the list of names. The uniform practice of the House is for the Chairman to report the names in a list, and that has been done.

Mr. MANN. The rule provides that the names be reported. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The names have been reported. Mr. MANN. I would not want to take advantage of the present occupant of the chair.

The committee resumed its sitting with Mr. SAUNDERS in the

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs, a quorum of the committee being present, on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and for the transportation of Indian pupils from any and all Indian schools and placing them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of white families qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training, $70,000. The provisions of this section shall also apply to native pupils of school age under 21 years of age brought from Alaska.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] in charge of the bill whether this money appropriated in this item is taken out of the Indian funds or whether it is taken out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is a gratuity.

Mr. MADDEN. This is given by the United States Government?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This is a gratuity, given for the purpose of collecting the Indian children from all parts of the United States and sending them to these schools, nonreserva-tion schools, mostly. Of course, it is necessary to take them from the reservations to the schools. This appropriation is for that purpose.

And the Indian children who are taken to Mr. MADDEN. these schools are taken from reservations, where Indians on the reservations have funds of their own, are they not?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a gratuity for the purpose of sending them to the nonreservation schools, and after they are there they can be distributed among white farmers for the purpose of having the white farmers teach them to acquire the habits of civilized life.

Mr. MADDEN. Are not the parents of these young Indians able to pay the cost of their transportation to and from the schools out of their own funds?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think that is the case, for the reason that where the Indians have property of their own the parents, in order to keep them at home and prevent them from being sent to distant places, will pay for their education at near-by schools out of their own funds.

Mr. MADDEN. Then this is a compulsory attendance on schools away from home that is to be paid for?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would not say that it is com-The Indian Department urges parents who are not pulsory. The Indian Department urges parents who are not able to take care of their children at home to send them away The school at Carlisle, Pa. to the nonreservation schools. accommodates about 1,000 pupils. It requires considerable money to get the children there and take them back. During the vacations the children are sent out amongst farmers, who take care of them and teach them the arts of living, and so forth, and the practice is found to be very beneficial to the

Mr. MADDEN. I know of a great many children of white families throughout the United States who would be glad to have the Government extend its fostering care over them and pay the cost of transportation charges of their children to and from school and board them while they are away and send them back again, and while they are not attending the school teach them the arts of farming and all of those other things that would make them useful citizens in the future.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For the reason that they are the wards of the Government, and we feel ourselves under the wards of the Government, and we teel ourselves under the obligation, and have for a hundred years felt ourselves under the obligation, to take care of these Indians, and it is only a part of the duty we have assumed. Whether wisely or not, it is too late to change it. We have assumed it and are carrying it out to the very best of our ability.

Mr. MADDEN. It is all very well for us to protect the Indians in every way that is proper and right, but it seems to me that to pay transportation charges from one point in the country to another is going outside of the duty of the Government of the United States, and this appropriation surely ought not to be made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that if I had had the making of the laws 30 or 40 years ago I would not have launched into the building of these nonreservation schools, but would have instructed the Indians on the reservations. But having the schools on our hands, having organized them and having hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in industrial plants, I think it would be wrong to stop the schools or cripple them in any way. We had better pursue the course on which we have started.

Mr. MADDEN. I am not in favor of stopping the schools, and I should like to see granted to the Indians all the educational facilities they ought to have to the fullest extent. am opposed to is the payment of the expenses of transportation by the Government to the schools and back from the schools to their homes. The gentleman has stated that he would not have been in favor of the establishment of these schools if he had had his way. Would it not be wise for him as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to provide some means by which the Government can save the expense of transporting these children back and forth? I am in favor of the maintenance of the schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. I have offered no amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. This item is a gratuity. A moment ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] called attention to the fact that the great bulk of these appropriations are gratul-ties. It is a remarkable fact that although many of the Indians in the United States are very wealthy, of the amount carried in this bill $6,084,000 is in the form of gratuities, the reimbursable items amounting to only $55,000 out of the total appropriation of $7,674,000. Our school items in Indian appropriation bils have for many years been in the main gratuities. Perhaps that is a good policy and a wise policy, possibly not in all cases.

The item we have just passed, $300,000 for school buildings, is entirely a gratuity, although some of the buildings contemplated are for Indians like the Crows and the Shoshones, who have hundreds of thousands of acres of valuable land and large sums of money in the Treasury. But it seems to have been the rule of the committee and the practice of Congress in the matter of school appropriations to provide for them gratuitously, without regard to the ability of the Indians to provide for themselves.

That may be justifiable, but I question whether we are justified in expending large sums of public money for the construction of works enhancing the value of the property of the Indians, where such Indians have great areas of land, and in cases where they have cash in the Treasury.

There is a very considerable item in this bill for the construction of irrigation works on Indian reservations.

Mr. MILLER. That is not contained in this paragraph. Mr. MONDELL. Not in this paragraph, but in a provision which we have passed. I did not have the opportunity to discuss it as I should have liked to discuss it at that time, so I propose to discuss it briefly now.

Among the reclamation works proposed under that item is, for instance, the project for the irrigation of lands of the Navajos under the San Juan project. These Indians have 14,000,000 acres of land, according to the statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. We have already spent $97,363.77 for that project, and its estimated cost is $140,000. In addition to that it was necessary to spend from this appropriation last year some $25,000 to repair temporarily a break in the dam that is being constructed.

Mr. MILLER. How much is that land worth an acre?

Mr. MONDELL. There is a good deal of it that would not bring much per acre. Out of the 14,000,000 acres owned by these Indians there is a considerable amount of land that is of small value.

There are no richer lands on the face of the earth, however, than the lands on the San Juan, where this irrigation project is located. It is the site of an ancient irrigation work, one of the most interesting in the country, where there is an ancient waterway 40 or 50 miles in length, still well preserved; along the line of that canal in the ancient times lived a large population and were many pueblos.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that all debate on the paragraph close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recog-

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——
Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly. Mr. MILLER. The land as it stands is practically valueless but when irrigated it becomes extremely valuable, and therefore the project must be one of merit. Is not the gentleman aware that it is reimbursable; that the Treasury will be reimbursed?

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, I do not understand that a single penny of the appropriation I have referred to is reimbursable, and certainly it can not be held to be reimbursable under the terms of the bill, if the gentleman will read it. The gentleman is a member of the committee and knows perfectly well that no part of that appropriation is reimbursable.

Mr. MILLER. Practically, or under the terms of the bill?
Mr. MONDELL. Practically, or under the terms of the act.
No demands can be made on the Indians to return it. There can be no question about that. No demand has ever been or ever will be made on any Indian under this item of appropriation to reimburse the Treasury for the amount expended unless the language shall be changed.

And not only have the Navahos 14,000,000 acres of land, a portion of which is of considerable value, but, in addition to that, they are an industrious people, as Indians go. They have been accustomed to labor; they make great quantities of the finest rugs in the world down there on the Rio Las Animas and the San Juan, and we pay large prices for them. They have a rery considerable income, and they live very well, indeed.

I know of no reason why these Indians can not pay for their own irrigation works. I believe it would be better for them if they did. Now, I am not inclined to be parsimonious in the matter of these appropriations. I will go as far as any Member of the House will go in giving the Indians an opportunity to earn a livelihood, but we simply pauperize the Indians when we say to men with large landed estates running into millions of acres, owning some of the fairest valleys on the continent, men who are accustomed to work, families accustomed to work, producing some of the finest specimens of the Indian art, earning a fairly good livelihood, that we will tax the people of the United States for the purpose of building irrigation works for irrigation and fertilization of their land. They have no funds now, but the expenditure for the irrigation of their lands should be made a charge against them, to be paid in the future. This is not the only item under this appropriation where it is proposed to build irrigation works for Indians having enormous landed estates. The Northern Cheyennes are to receive $8,000 out of this item. They own several hundred thousand acres of very excellent land. There is no reason on earth why the Northern Cheyennes should not reimburse the Government.

Another proposition. It is my opinion that if the Government never did receive all of these sums, if they never were all paid back into the Treasury, the very fact known to the Indians that there was an obligation on their part in the matter, that they were expected to return the money to the Treasury, would in and of itself enhance the value of the property in their eyes, and would tend to teach them and lead them to give better attention to this property and value it more highly than they

The item, among other things, provides for maintenance charges and proposes to expend money to maintain these projects after we have built them. Is it not quite enough to build irrigation works for the Indian and to put it in condition to be used? Must we tax the people forever to pay for their mainte-nance? If so, it seems to me the expenditure is useless, and instead of accomplishing any worthy or valuable or useful pur-pose we are simply tending further to pauperize the Indians and build up in their minds the notion that they are getting something for nothing. Build these works by all means, but with the understanding that the Indians are to pay for them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

All moneys appropriated herein for school purposes among the Indians may be expended, without restriction as to per capita expenditure, for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any school.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this. I believe this is current law. What is the effect of this? How does it work out? It was put in in the first place, I believe, as an experiment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was formerly restricted to $167 per capita for each Indian who was taken off the reservation and put into these boarding schools.

Mr. MANN. I understand that is the law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That limit has been taken off.

Mr. MANN. I think that limit has not been taken off except in the current appropriation law each year. The limit remains, I think. What is the effect of this? It was tried as an experi-What is the cost of educating these Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In the northern countries, where they have long winters and very cold weather, it is much harder to maintain the Indians, on account of the better clothing they require, than it is in the southern country, in Arizona and New Mexico. That is the difference. I find this memorandum covering this item:

The memorandum covering this item explained that the per capita allowance of $167 per pupil was adopted by Congress about 25 years ago, and was probably legitimate and proper for many years following. Within the last decade, however, conditions have so altered that the restriction became injurious to the welfare of the schools. With the increasing cost of supplies the necessity was imposed on superintendents of filling their schools in order to maintain a sufficiently full attendance therein to conduct the plant properly and to provide the usual necessities for the school and the Indian children.

Congress has a legitimate check upon the expenditure of any given school in that it requires annually a statement of its cost.

Mr. MANN. The general law provides that the expense of the pupils should not exceed $167.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is true.

Mr. MANN. What is the effect of it? Of course, we all know that under ordinary conditions a school that is fairly well filled up can probably get along for $167 per pupil, but it will cost you a great deal more than that if you maintain a school for one pupil. What is the effect of it all? What has been the actual experience under this experiment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Perhaps I can answer the gentleman, if the chairman will yield?

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the chairman of the committee can answer, but I would be very glad to hear from the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The larger the school, the less the expense. The gentleman is correct in that statement. Some schools cost more than $167 per pupil to maintain, while others get along with less, some of them falling as low as $122 and some running over the limit of $167. We thought it would be wise to take that limit off and let the matter be adjusted by the department.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to give the House the per capita expenditure at each of these Indian schools?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have each one of them provided for here that this would apply to under the heading of the various States.

Mr. MANN. It might be well to let this item remain, then, until after the other matters have been disposed of.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not; because this is the existing law, the current existing law, as stated by the department. In each State as we reach it we can give the cost per capita of the schools. Each school is especially provided for, and each is given, stating how many students are in that school, and the amount appropriated for the school.

Mr. MANN. If this item goes in the bill before we take up the others it is beyond us.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for suggestion?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me the gentleman's statement that the cost depends a good deal on the climate, being higher in the north, is scarcely borne out by the facts. For instance, at the Shoshone Reservation, on the Wind River, Wyo., the cost is $167, and at Santa Fe and Carson City, Nev., the cost is $175.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The department is to blame for If there are such conditions the supplies have cost more there than in the gentleman's country.

Mr. KENDALL. It depends on what is taught in the school, does it not?

Mr. STEPEHNS of Texas. Perhaps so. If one is an industrial school it costs more money to run it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is undoubtedly striking at the question of whether it is advisible to remove this limitation.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Dealing with this school item, the commissioner has liberally furnished with justifications and just what it costs at each school. The expense per capita varies to a marked degree. It runs from $122 up to as high as $247, I think, at one place, but there might be a reason for that which I think would satisfy the gentleman. In other words, at one school they have a school farm and they raise a part of what they eat there. That naturally reduces the grocery bill and expenses of running the school. At another place they have to haul their provisions farther from the market, so the drayage and hauling facilities cost more, and while there is some danger attached to removing a limitation of this kind there are a good many advantages. The commissioner who appeared before us went to great lengths and was unusual in his insistence that that remain, so he might do full justice to each particular school. For instance, when a tribe has diminished or intermarried or gradually coalesced and joined the white people, as some are in some localities, the Indian school becomes less and less in numbers all the while, but the commissioner has power to recommend the discontinuance of these schools, and if it reaches the stage where Congress will no longer provide for it, Congress will discontinue them.

He has the power to recommend the discontinuance, but he has no power to discontinue them.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not assert he had that power.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit, supplementing what the gentleman from Oklahoma has stated, we went into this matter very closely in the hearings on the last year's appropriation bill, and we found we were not spending any more for education now than we were when the limitation was in force and educating just as many children; but, as the gentleman says, in some instances it exceeds $167.

Mr. MANN. This item was inserted in the Indian appropriation a few years ago, and it was then stated, as I recall, that it was to be in the nature of an experiment and at the proper time the House would be given full information as to that experiment and the effect of making this change. So far we have had no information upon the subject, except in a general way. The gentleman has made a statement, but it seems to me this limitation either ought to go out of the bill or else be postponed until the House has acted upon the specific appropriations.

Mr FERRIS Does not the gentleman think that due to the method of making the estimates, handling each school as an entity and each State as a separate matter, that the question of dealing with the per capita expenses is, as it should be, in each respective State and each respective school?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think it is desirable to do it in the way the committee has done it in that respect, but I am not sure it is desirable to remove the restriction of $167, which ought to be, in the ordinary course, the full amount of the expenditure for each applications. ture for each pupil in the school.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, I know of no particular grievances to any people with whom I am acquainted if this was stricken but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was exceedingly insistent about this.

Mr. KENDALL. Is not that because he claimed experience justified the change, because it has been demonstrated that $167 in some localities under circumstances referred to by the gentleman from Texas is not sufficient for the purpose?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely. Mr. KENDALL. There is no danger, I think, in adopting the modification made by the committee or recommended by the committee. These sums are to be safeguarded as they always have been.

Mr. FERRIS. This is not a new matter. It is a matter which has been carried in the bill for several years, and we merely reincorporate it at the strong solicitation of the commissioner himself, who insisted that some latitude in dealing with these different schools should be allowed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to put my own judgment in these cases against the committee's judgment, although I had hoped that the committee would explain why the per capita expenditure at certain schools was much above the limit authorized by law.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion? I call his attention to one particular instance, and that is the Cushman School in Washington, where some time ago they added what they called a mechanical department, and a great number of pupils are being employed now in that part of the institution, where they have installed machinery and where they are making things of iron and wood. I was talking to the superintendent the other day and he told me that had increased the cost per capita, but that ultimately there would be no increase.

There is a disposition now on the part of the heads of these institutions to increase the number of things taught in order that the pupil may be made more practical; that is, by teaching him carpentry and blacksmithing and all that sort of thing. Heretofore they have been instructing them in agriculture, and that was about all. But where they add these things, there is an additional cost, and I know nothing as to whether that additional cost would continue, except from the statement of superintendents

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the Cushman School put the Indians at work doing blacksmithing and other labor in connection with ironwork on the institution, and therefore that added to the cost of maintaining the pupils.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. In making things, perhaps not alone for the institution.

Mr. MANN. For other people?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. For other people.

Mr. MANN. Who got the benefit of that? Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. The installation of the machinery is an additional cost.

Mr. MANN. By what authority? We make an appropriation for the installation of machinery, and if any pupils did that the school gets paid for it.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. That is true; but I take it that certain installations may be made without any specific legisla-That is true; but I take it that There is a general appropriation for these institutions, and the commissioner is allowed some discretionary power.

Mr. MANN. Does my friend from Oklahoma maintain that these pupils could be employed by the school, adding something new to the buildings, and that that should be charged to the maintenance of the school?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I do not mean to say that the fact of the additional things taught of itself would increase the cost per capita to the pupil. But if they installed new machinery that would temporarily increase the cost, whether they made them for the school or any other purpose. While I think the item ought to go out, in deference to the gentlemen of the committee I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order so as to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I wish to know whether $167 limit of cost for the education of each Indian pupil includes the cost of transportation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It does not. There is a separate fund here.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the cost per capita for transporta-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It varies according to distance. Mr. MADDEN. There must be a cost per capita. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Some of them are from Oregon or from Washington, and they travel to Carlisle, for instance.

Mr. MADDEN. There must be so much per capita. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The figures are here, and the gentleman could very easily ascertain the amount.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought maybe the committee knew, and we might be able to get the information through the channel that had it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand the matter, these men are sent out from the schools, and they gather up all the Indians that can be had in various communities and take them on the cars and carry them to the schoolhouse, and when the schools are out, unless they are distributed over the country among the farmers, they are sent back. As I understand the matter, all the expense is railroad expense of transporting the pupils and the expense of the man who attends them.

Mr. MADDEN. Can the gentleman state whether it is $50 per capita, or $100, or $25?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would be as impossible to state as it would be to state how much the average amount is that we draw for mileage here. I do not think that has ever been averaged up.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Per capita for each individual Member of the House?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have never done it, and I have never seen such a statement.

Mr. MADDEN. We know the amount of mileage which is paid and the number of men, and all you would have to do would be to divide one by the other and get the per capita cost.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. At the Carlisle School, including the cost of transportation, the pupils being brought long distances, in many instances, the education is as low or lower than at any other school in the service.

What does that mean? Mr. MADDEN.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It means it is a large school, and that the sources of supply are nearer available than at some of these other schools. The Government is not losing anything, because the per capita cost, as I have stated, is lower than at any other school, I think, that we have in the country.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman means not losing anything in comparison with other schools?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Other schools.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not be economy to transfer the Carlisle School to a place more adjacent to the people to be educated?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If it was not for the Carlisle School, I would not be in favor of an appropriation to build a school at Carlisle.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman thinks the expenditure for the maintenance of these schools and the transportation of the pupils from one point to the other is justified?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do.

Mr. MADDEN. But nobody knows the cost per capita.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think I can give the gentleman the information right here. The amount required for the transportation of pupils for 1914 is $82,000. The enrollment of the nonreservation schools for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, was 7,134, and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, it was

Mr. MONDELL. Was the gentleman inquiring as to the cost per capita at the schools?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; and the cost of transportation per

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The transportation cost is about eight and one-third dollars for each pupil.

Mr. MADDEN. How many pupils is the man who gathers them up supposed to bring in one cargo?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think they could possibly have any definite rule about that. They gather them in the different reservations in the best way they possibly can.

Mr. MADDEN. Do any of these pupils go to the schools from their homes without any attendant?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman from Texas to say that they had men in charge who were responsible for gathering the pupils up in the places where they live and taking them to the schools in the various parts of the country.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are competent men in the lines along which they are educated, and they become good citizens.

Mr. MADDEN. What I want to know is whether any of these Indian children go to the schools without a guide?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, it is only the smaller children who are supposed to be incompetent to take care of them-selves and require guides. The smaller ones do have guides.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, last week during the general debate on the Indian appropriation bill in connection with some remarks I brought to the attention of the House a report made by Mr. M. L. Mott, tribal attorney for the Creek Nation, showing a deplorable condition of affairs with reference to extravagance on the part of guardians in the handling of Indian minor estates in the probate courts in the several counties comprising the Creek Nation. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], without attempting to defend the charges contained in the report, assailed the author of it, Mr. Mott, and attempted to make it appear that he is not responsible, and I think it was charged that he is a "carpetbagger." I am just in receipt of a letter from Moty Tiger, principal chief of the Creek Nation, in which he states that Mr. Mott has been or the creek Nation, in which he states that Mr. Mott has been the attorney for the tribe since 1904, and that his services have been entirely satisfactory, and that though he—the principal chief—is a Democrat and Mr. Mott a Republican that he will continue Mott as attorney for the tribe while it is within his power to do so; and in this letter he mentions a number of important matters where Mr. Mott has succeeded in protecting the Indians against legislation that had been enacted relating to taxation of their lands and other important matters, and that he had done so in several cases by going to the Supreme Court of the United States and securing a favorable decision, notwithstanding the Supreme Court of the State of Oklahoma had decided against the Indians. For the purpose of giving the House the opinion of the principal chief as to his estimate of Mr. Mott and to show some of the things that Mr. Mott has accomplished for the Indians, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the letter I have referred to:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 17, 1912.

Hon. Charles H. Burke, United States House of Representatives Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir: I noticed in the proceedings of the House on last Thursday, and when a report by Mr. Mott on probate conditions was under consideration, that members of the Oklahoma delegation expressed a desire to get rid of Mr. Mott as attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians, and declared that they would gladly pay the cost of transporting him out of the State of Oklahoma. That you and Congress should have some idea of the value of the services rendered the Indians in Oklahoma by Mr. Mott, I hand you this communication.

Mr. Mott was appointed attorney for the Creek Tribe by General Porter, late chief of the Creek Tribe, in May, 1904.

The treaty of 1902 provided that none of the surplus lands of members of the Creek Tribe should be alienable for a period of five years. In 1904, two years after the ratification of this ireaty by Congress and just a month before Mr. Mott's appointment, Congress removed the restrictions on the surplus lands of all freedmen members of the tribe. Within 60 days of the passage of this act there was not one adult freedman in ten who owned an acre of his surplus lands or had a dollar in money to show for it.

The conditions following this legislation were so disastrous and destructive that Mr. Mott determined to use every effort to extend the period of restriction on the lands of the Indian members of the tribe beyond the five-year period provided for in said treaty or agreement, and thereupon he, together with the chief of the Creek Tribe and the Creek delegation, came to Washington and prevailed upon Senator Mc-CUMBER to offer an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill of 1906 extending the restrictions on full-blood Indians of the Five Tribes for a period of 25 years.

Senator McCUMBER stated on the floor of the Senate that he was not sure of the constitutionality of the legislation, but insisted that the legislation should pass, and in support of the necessity for the same had read from the Clerk's desk and inserted in the Recom a statement by Mr. Mott of the conditions in Indian Territory and what would be the result when the restrictions were taken off these lands. There were also published in the Recomp at the time statements by the chief and the delegation. The amendment was passed and became a law, and but for this amendment there would not be one member of the tribe in ten who would to-day own a foot of land other than his restricted homestead.

The constitutionality of the McCumber amendment was attacked in the McCumber amendment was attacked in the McCumber amendment was attacked in law, and but for this amendment there would not be one member of the tribe in ten who would to-day own a foot of land other than his restricted homestead.

The constitutionality of the McCumber amendment was attacked in the Marchie Tiger case. The courts sustained and upheld the amendment.

Prior to the act of May 27, 1908, the Indian land grafters in Oklahoma had secured from full-blood Indians deeds to thousands of tracts of inherited lands. These deeds were secured by all kinds of fraud and for comparatively no consideration, and the lands so conveyed were worth into the millions.

Mr. Mott took the position that all conveyances by full-blood Indians prior to the act of May 27, 1908, were void unless the same had been approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and in accordance therewith there was filed a suit contesting the legality of these conveyances. In this case, commonly known as the Marchie Tiger case, the State Supreme Court of Oklahoma held these deeds to be good and valid. On a writ of error the case was brought to the Supreme Court of the Supreme Court of Oklahoma and held all these deeds and conveyances to be absolutely void, and thereupon millions of dollars were saved to the full-blood Indians of the Five Tribes.

When in 1908, the first year after statehood for Oklahoma, Congress, upon the earnest and persistent insistence of the Oklahoma, Congress, upon the earnest and persistent insistence of the Oklahoma, the Five Tribes and declared such lands subject to taxation, Mr. Mott resisted this legislation and insisted to the department and the committees of Congress that under the agreements of the Government with the Indians to exempt certain lands from taxation for a certain period Congress, under the Constitution, had no authority to authorize the State of Oklahoma to tax said lands.

One year in advance of any action by anyone else Mr. Mott secured from the Creek council an appropriation of funds to resist the taxatlon of these said lands. Injunction suits were filed in all the counties comp my knowledge that the department gives to air. About the run creant for the institution of this litigation and the benefits accruing therefrom to the tribe.

Mr. Mott, in 1906, after numerous efforts, caused to be had an investigation of the fraudulent scheduling of town lots in the Creek Nation. This investigation resulted in the filing of a large number of suits by Mr. Mott against many prominent citizens, including the former governor of the State. These civil suits resulted in the indictment of a number of these prominent citizens. The indictments finally went out of court on the statute of limitations, pleaded by the defendants.

A number of the civil cases are still pending; a number have been settled, and in such settlements Mr. Mott has collected, in round numbers, $100,000, and turned the same over to the Secretary of the Interior, and which has been deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Creek Nation. There has also been secured decrees of the court on ninety-odd lots, valued at not less than $60,000. An additional recovery of $125,000 on the remaining suits is a conservative estimate. And it is for these things that thousands in Oklahoma would rejoice to see Mr. Mott's services to the Indians terminated. He is in the way of those who want to despoil and plunder my people.

Mr. Mott is a Republican. I am a Democrat. But I am first and last for my oppressed people. And so long as I am chief, Mr. Mott, if he desires and I can have my way, will remain the attorney for the Creek Tribe.

I desire to express to you my deepest appreciation for your stand on leads of the Indians in the State of Oklahoma.

I desire to express to you my deepest appreciation for your stand on behalf of the Indians in the State of Oklahoma. Very respectfully, yours, Principal Chief of the Creek Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

To conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms designed to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, for the purposes of preserving living and growing timber on Indian reservations and allotments, and to advise the Indians as to the proper care of forests: Provided, That this shall not, as to timber, apply to the Menominee Indian Reservation in Wisconsin; for the employment of suitable persons as matrons to teach

Indian women housekeeping and other household duties, and for furnishing necessary equipments and renting quarters for them where necessary; for the employment of practical farmers and stockmen, in addition to the agency and school farmers now employed; and to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among Indians, $300,000: Provided further, That not to exceed $5,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be used to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms to test the possibilities of soil and climate in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits: Provided also, That the amounts paid to matrons, farmers, and stockmen herein provided for shall not be included within the limitation on salaries and compensation of employees contained in the act of June 7, 1897.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illionis [Mr. MANN] reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on line 24, page 5, the words "$300,000," and insert in lieu thereof the words "$400,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the point of order. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill just what is the necessity of continually providing that the salaries paid to the officials employed under this appropriation shall not be included within the limitation of salaries provided by law? How much is paid, as a matter of fact, in the way of salaries to the persons employed as matrons, farmers, and stockmen?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The question is why?

Mr. MANN. Yes; both why and how much.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will give the statement that is printed here:

This estimate provides mainly for the continuation of those positions which are now in force and the establishment of other positions at places where the present force is inadequate or where no farmers are employed at all.

We are following up the old law, with the same salaries and with the same amounts as heretofore. They have repeatedly asked for more salaries, and we have refused to allow them in this bill and in other bills. This is simply a repetition of the law as it has existed for several years.

Mr. MANN. Of course under this language they could pay as much salary as they pleased. The commissioner could double the salary if he chose to do so. What are the salaries now paid to the matrons, farmers, and stockmen?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will give the gentleman what the department says here:

Two hundred and thirty thousand dollars of the $400,000 appropriated for the current fiscal year was set aside for agricultural and stock purposes, $120,000 for forestry work, and $50,000 for the employment of field matrons. One supervisor, at $3,000 per annum, and one superintendent of live stock, at $2,000, are paid from this appropriation. These men have no particular districts assigned to them, but are subject to the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and visit all the reservations. In addition to their salaries the supervisors of farming and superintendent of live stock receive per diems ranging from $3 to $2.50, respectively, in lieu of subsistence when away from their headquarters.

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman reading from, may I

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am reading from page 29 of the hearings on the Indian appropriation bill, where this item is explained by the department. Those are the items given by the department to the committee.

Mr. MANN. The postponement of the consideration of the bill the other day has accomplished one good thing, and that is it has enabled the members of the committee to get copies of the printed hearings.

Now I want to ask another question. This is a legitimate question, especially in view of the attitude of the gentlemen on the other side and their probable action after the 4th of March next. How much pay do the matrons receive? How much do the farmers get paid and how much do the stockmen get paid? How can the gentleman from Texas and his colleagues on that side tell whether they would wish to recommend their constituents for appointment to these places unless they know how much the compensation is?

Mr. FOSTER. Is my colleague able to give to this side of the House the same information that that side of the House has enjoyed for some years?

Mr. MANN. I can give some information to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my colleague that after we get in we shall be able to find these places without any difficulty. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I am asking for information. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The amount of $50,000 is given for the payment of field matrons. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. MANN. No. What is the salary of the matron? What is the salary of the farmer? What is the salary of the stockman?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Fifty thousand dollars is paid to the matrons.

Mr. MANN. How many of them are there?
Mr. FOSTER. Probably in the past they have just been apportioning this $50,000 on that side as they saw fit.

Mr. MANN. I can remember when I used to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs on this side the same questions in former years, and the information was forthcoming, and I am sure it will be forthcoming now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will give the gentleman the information, which comes from his side of the House, if he wants to put it in a political sense. The salaries have all been fixed by the Indian Bureau. Certainly the gentleman has no right to complain.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining. I am asking for infor-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am trying to give it to you. Mr. MANN. "Trying" is a good word. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The salaries of the expert farmers range from $1,000 to $1,500 per annum. There is only one man employed, however, at $1,500, and this man has charge of the demonstration farm on the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, established in pursuance of the act of June 1, 1910, and also has general supervision of the farming operations throughout the reservation. He is not confined to one place, but has charge of everything.

Mr. MANN. That is, one man?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The usual salary paid such employees is $1,200 a year.

Mr. MANN. Is that for farmers or stockmen?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The salaries of expert farmers range from $1,000 to $1,500. The salaries of stockmen farmers range. from $720 to $1,200 per annum. While the figures for the fiscal year 1912 are not yet complete, the reports which are being received from the various reservations indicate that there has been a revival of interest in agricultural pursuits on the part of the Indians, and there is in some localities need for the employment of more men to direct the operations of the Indians and advise them, not only in the proper method of cultivating their crops and the care and upbreeding of their live stock, but also in helping them find markets where the best returns may be procured for their products.

Mr. MANN. What are the salaries of the matrons?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The sum of $50,000 is appropriated to pay the matrons on the various reservations. reservation has a certain number of matrons allotted to it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not the information as to the amount paid each one?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The department does not give that information.

Mr. MANN. That answers the question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Therefore I can not state. Mr. MANN. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can not state it for the reason that it is given under the head of the various reservations.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for the information, and in view of the information I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. I renew the point of order.

Mr. DIES. I should like to know, Mr. Chairman, who has

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] took the floor to interrogate the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] took the floor and reserved a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I now withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. And I have renewed it.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized on my amendment?

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] has reserved a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] has renewed the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve the point of order. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if the $1,420,000, provided for on page 4, for day and industrial schools carries with it also the power to use a portion of that money to teach Indians how to farm?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think it does.

Mr. FOWLER. My understanding has always been that in connection with the industrial schools farming is taught.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not discussing the point of order. Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I had reserved a point of order, and if the gentleman from Texas had been listening he would not have interrupted this committee on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed, Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the gentleman from Illinois is not discussing the point of order what right he has to the floor? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order, and is engaged in making some inquiries of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask if it is not a fact that agriculture is taught in the industrial schools instituted for the benefit of the Indians? Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that the $1,420,000 provided for the Indian schools, some of which are industrial schools, and some of the money in the natural course of things is spent in connection with what they call the school farm—that is, the farm used in conjunction with the schools. The item under discussion particularly relates to individual field matrons and field farmers and those who go out and help the Indians who try to carry on agriculture on their own hook.

As the gentleman knows, a great many Indians are out on allotments, and as they begin to settle they get advice and help of the Indian farmers and the matrons and the Indian farmers.

Mr. FOWLER. I call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the fact that the paragraph begins as follows:

To conduct experiments on Indian schools or agency farms.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not proceeding according to the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized under the familiar practice in the Committee of the Whole to extend recognition, when requested, to a Member reserving a point of order. Strictly speaking under this recognition the gentleman is not entitled to five minutes, if objection is made. But the usual practice allows him to proceed in the absence of objection for certainly as much as five minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will look further he will find that the funds are to be expended on Indian reservations and on Indian allotments and for giving advice to the Indians on the proper care of forestry, and so forth.

Mr. FOWLER. That is true, but the committee provides specifically for experiments on Indian schools and agency farms. What I am trying to get at is that I do not want any lapping in this matter. If there is an appropriation made for the benefit of teaching the Indians farming in connection with these industrial schools, then I can not see what use there will be in making appropriations again for the same purpose under a different item.

Mr. FERRIS. I can readily see from the reading of the language that it looks as if there might be a lapping over and a conflict, but practically there is not. The money they use in connection with the school farm is independent of the matrons and the agents and what they call farmers. For example, in my own county we have an Indian school.

Mr. FOWLER. An industrial Indian school? Mr. FERRIS. It is. They have alfalfa and raise corn, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois have five minutes more.

Mr. DIES. I object.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not object.

Mr. DIES. I object because I do not think the gentleman from Illinois properly had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Texas that the gentleman from Illinois rose, obtained recognition, and thereupon reserved a point of order. practice, he was thereupon entitled to proceed for five minutes, and longer if no objection was made. This practice is a mere convention, a system of informal procedure which has grown up as a matter of convenience, and is favored because in the main it really expedites business. The gentleman from Illinois has used his time to make inquiries of the gentleman relating to the paragraph just read. This is in conformity with what the Chair understands to be a practice of long standing, and general acquiescence. The five minutes having expired, the Chair called the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to that fact

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman from Texas still object? Mr. DIES. I do object,

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma ask unanimous consent to reply to the gentleman from Illinois for five minutes?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. But that motion is not in order. Mr. FERRIS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to attike out Mr. FERRIS.
the last two words.
Mr. MONDELL. That is not in order.
Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unani-mous consent to reply to the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection?

Mr. DIES. Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I object, for the reasons stated. The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I think we may as well settle the question of order here. I ask the question that we may settle the question of order. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order and proceeded to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill some questions, as he had a right to do. It was the right of the Chair to shut him off at any time he say fit. The gentleman from Objectoms now off at any time he saw fit. The gentleman from Oklahoma now has a perfect right on a question of order, the point of order not having been withdrawn, to proceed without unanimous consent, as I understand the rules and practice of the House, and to proceed within the discretion of the Chair, not for 5 minutes, not for 10 minutes, but for an hour, if the Chair will permit the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserved a point of order to the paragraph, and asked to be recognized. Recognition was extended. Some objection being made, the Chair stated that the recognition would be limited to five minutes. At the expiration of five minutes, the gentleman from Illinois was so informed. The gentleman from Oklahoma asked unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes, and the Chair put that request to the committee and objection was made.

That is the exact parliamentary situation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair recognize me for a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MANN. The Chairman stated, and stated correctly, that in the practice of the House where a point of order is reserved gentlemen are recognized on the floor for a discussion for five minutes. Any gentleman at any time can insist upon the point of order being determined by making the point of order himself. Until some one does make the point of order or insists upon a ruling I think the practice is that the Chair recognizes gentlemen on the floor to discuss the merits for five minutes, under which provision the gentleman would be entitled to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no request upon the Chair for recognition to discuss the merits. The gentleman from Oklahoma asked unanimous consent to proceed and that was refused.

Mr. FERRIS. I now ask to be heard on the point of order that has been reserved.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I make a motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see how the gentleman can be heard on a point of order that has been reserved and not

Mr. FERRIS. I thought it was agreed, both by the Chair and also by the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, that it was within the discretion of the Chair to hear gentlemen so long as the point of order was reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see how the gentleman can be heard on a point of order that is reserved. nothing before the committee,

Mr. FERRIS. The practice is so uniform here in the House that when a point of order is reserved almost universally, I think, different Members proceed to explain the section, and that is what I am seeking to do now—to explain away the objections of the gentleman from Illinois. I think that is the uniform practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the conventions of the committee; but when objection is formally made quite a different situation is presented.

Mr. FERRIS. Have I not, within the province of the Chair, the right to proceed, independently of objection, in my own right, so long as the point of order is not made?

The CHAIRMAN. In respect to what?

Mr. FERRIS. In respect to the section on which the point of order is reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Illinois, and his rights, if any, were exhausted, in the opinion of the Chair, at the expiration of five minutes. There is no point of order to discuss, none having been made.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the practice has been otherwise, Mr. Chairman; and if I may, I would like to proceed to reply to the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, is there not just as much now before the committee as there was when the gentleman from Illinois was addressing the committee a few moments ago?

Mr. FERRIS. The reservation of the point of order, under the convention of the House, gives the gentleman who reserves the point of order the right to the floor for five minutes, in-That has been the practice of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. But not after objection is made.

Mr. CARTER. Objection had not been made.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection has been made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies]. The gentleman from Texas asked how the gentleman had the floor, and the Chair explained the situation to him.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asked recognition of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to have more Members present, and therefore I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Under the ruling of the Chair, at the expiration of five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. I submit a parliamentary inquiry can not be mar. MANN. I submit a parmamentary inquiry can not be made when a point of order of no quorum present is made.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the gentleman from Illinois was not recognized by the Chair, but the gentleman from Georgia was recognized to state a parliamentary inquiry. He is now stating it.

Mr. MANN. I beg the Chair's pardon; he does not have to

Mr. MANN. I begine Chair spation, he does not have to be recognized to make a point of order of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Georgia to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. But I can take the gentleman off the floor—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that Mr. MANN.

there is no quorum present in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will pro-pound his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Under the ruling of the Chair that the gentleman from Illinois having reserved a point of order and by the reservation having been recognized is entitled to five minutes, that time having expired the gentleman from Okla-homa having addressed the Chair and having been recognized might have obtained the floor by himself reserving the point of order, could he not?

The CHAIRMAN. The matter contained in the gentleman's inquiry is no longer before the committee. It is not a present question, but a moot one. The Chair of course when objection is made can require a Member reserving a point of order to proceed to state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will call

The Clerk began the calling of the roll.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the motion of the gentleman for the reason that the roll call is in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had directed the roll to be called, and in due course this was being done. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Clerk had called one name. The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill H. R. 26874, the Indian appropriation bill, reported that the committee, finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, and that upon the roll call 154 Members answered to their names, and that he therewith reported a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] makes?

Mr. MANN. My colleague, Mr. Fowles, had a point of order pending on the paragraph, which I understood was not yet disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] insist on his point of order?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I was desiring information concerning this appropriation, so that I might determine as to whether the point of order ought to be made against the paragraph. There are questions, Mr. Chairman, requiring an appropriation which is not provided for by law, and yet the appropriation ought to be made in good conscience. If that information can be had, then the party reserving the point of order can determine as to whether he ought to make it or not. I was seeking that information, Mr. Chairman, at the time when was taken off the floor.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. DIES. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state that the gentleman from Illinois was recognized, in conformity with an established practice in the Committee of the Whole. Having been recognized the gentleman from Illinois proceeded in the usual manner, made his inquiries, and discussed informally the replies received. All of this was in accord with established practice. At the end of five minutes his time expired. The Chair does not recall any ruling on this precise point, but in reason a Member recognized in connection with the reservation of a point of order should not have more than five minutes, save by the acquiescence of the committee. Strictly speaking, on objection made he may be required to make his point of order without proceeding for five minutes.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the Chair will permit me, just for the purpose of raising a point of order, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is that the gentleman from Illinois shall state his point of order, as requested by the

Mr. OLMSTED. If the Chair will permit me, I was just going to cite the law upon this point, which seems to be much misunderstood by everyone who has discussed it. The parliamentary law is that no gentleman can reserve a point of order at all, except by unanimous consent, which is either expressly given or is assumed.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in conformity with what the Chair as already stated. I have so ruled.

has already stated. I have so ruled.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is often the practice to assume unanimous consent, but when objection is made and the regular order is demanded, then all debate ceases and the point of order is
